Appeal from the Federal Court of India

THE KING-EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Privy Council — Practice — Appeal from Federal Court of India — Leave to appeal — Point technical and of no use in future — Leave refused.

An appeal from the Federal Court would not lightly be admitted by the Board, and should only be admitted if it arises in a really substantial case.

Where the matter was one concerning the construction of a very exceptional section which would have no application in the future, and it was a technical point and the Board had before it the view of the Federal Court with regard to it and, having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the ingenious argument which had been presented to them, their Lordships did not think that it was a case in which they would advise His Majesty to grant leave to appeal.

Messrs. R. Gibson, K. C. and C. J. Colombos, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. D. Roberts, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Respondent.

Viscount Maugham.—Their Lordships do not require to hear Counsel for the Crown.

This is an application for special leave to appeal in forma pauperis from a judgment of the Federal Court of India, and it has the distinction of being the first application for such leave from that Court.

The question which arises is as to the true construction of s. 270, sub-s. 1, of the Govt. of India Act, 1935. It is in these terms: "No proceedings, civil or criminal shall be instituted against any person in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown in India or Burma before the relevant date", which is April 1, 1937, "except with the consent" putting it shortly as applying to this particular case, "of the Governor" of the Province in which the petitioner was employed. It is perfectly clear, therefore, that this section is in the nature of an exceptional section which is intended to afford some measure of protection to certain public servants in relation to acts done or purported to be done in execution of their duty, being acts done before the date in question.

Their Lordships ought not to forget the fact that the matter has been before the Federal Court and that an appeal from the Federal Court should not lightly be admitted by this Board, and should only be admitted if it arises in a really substantial case.

In this case it does not seem to their Lordships that the matter is anything but one concerned with the construction of a very exceptional section which will have no application in the future, and it is a technical point. They have had the view of the Federal Court with regard to it and, having regard to all the circumstances of the case and bearing in mind the ingenious argument which has been presented to them, they do not think that this is a case in which their Lordships should advise His Majesty to grant leave to appeal. In those circumstances, the application for leave must be dismissed. The Council Office fees will be remitted as it is a petition in forma pauperis, but otherwise there will be no order as to costs.

THE KING—RESPONDENT.

Sedition—Colony of Gold Coast—Incitement to violence, if necessary ingredient.

The elaborate structure of s. 330, Criminal Code (Colony of Gold Coast) (now s. 326 of the Criminal Code of 1936 Revision) suggests that it was intended to contain as far as possible a full and complete statement of the law of sedition in the Colony. It must therefore be construed in its application to the facts of the case free from any glosses or interpolations derived from any expositions however authoritative of the Law of England or of Scotland.

There is nothing in the section to suggest that unless the words complained of were themselves of such a nature as to be likely to incite to violence, and unless there was positive extrinsic evidence of seditious intention the prosecution for sedition would not succeed. Nowhere in the section is there anything to support the view that incitement to violence is a necessary ingredient of the crime of sedition. Violence may well be, and no doubt often is, the result of wild and ill-considered words, but the Code does not require proof from the words themselves of any intention to produce such a result. R. v. Burns (1), not applied.

Messrs. D. N. Pritt, K. C. and N. Wiggins, for the Appellant.

Solicitor General Mr. Kenelm Freedy, for the Respondent.

Lord Chancellor.—This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the West African Court of Appeal (Gold Coast Session) dismissing an appeal by the appellant against his conviction on October 13, 1936, by the Supreme Court of the Gold Coast at the Assizes held at Victoriaborg, Accra. The appellant was tried upon an information containing two counts charging him with offences against s. 330 of the Criminal Code of the Gold Coast Colony (Chap. XXIX). The first count charged the appellant with unlawfully publishing a seditious writing of and concerning the Govt. of the Gold Coast contrary to s. 330 (2) (b) of the Criminal Code. The second count charged him with unlawfully having in his possession documents containing seditious writing of and concerning the Govt. of the Gold Coast contrary to s. 330 (2) (c). The trial took place before the Chief Justice of the Gold Coast Colony sitting with three assessors on October 7, 8, 9, 10, 12 and 13, 1936. The appellant was convicted by the Chief Justice on both counts, and was sentenced to pay a fine of £50 on the first count and, in default of payment within 14 days, to be imprisoned for three months. No punishment was inflicted on the second count.

The appellant appealed to the West African Court of Appeal against his conviction. The appeal was heard on November 17 and 18, and December 1, 1936, and was then dismissed.

The appellant petitioned His Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal, and this was granted on July 22, 1938.

The writing which was the subject-matter of the charges was part of an article signed "Effective" and published in a newspaper circulating in the Gold Coast Colony. The material words as set out in the information, together with allegations as to the meaning attributable to certain words and phrases, were as follows:—

"Personally, I believe the European has a God in whom he believes and whom he is representing in his Churches all over Africa. He believes in the god whose name is spelt Deceit. He believes in the god whose law is 'Ye strong, you must weaken the weak, Ye 'civilised' Europeans, you must 'civilise' the 'barbarous' Africans with machine guns. Ye 'Christian' Europeans, you must 'Christianise' the 'pagan' Africans with bombs, poison gases, etc.'

In the Colonies the Europeans believe in the god that commands 'Ye administrators' (meaning to include therein the Govt. of the Gold Coast) 'make Sedition Bill' (meaning to include therein the Criminal Code Amendment Ordinance No. 21 of 1934 of the Gold Coast) 'to keep the African gagged. Make Forced Labour Bill' (meaning to include therein the Labour Ordinance of the Gold Coast) 'to work the Africans as slaves. Make Deportation Ordinance' (meaning to include therein the Kofi Sechere Detention and Removal Ordinance No. 1 of 1936) 'to send the Africans to exile whenever they dare to question your authority'.

'Make an Ordinance to grab his money so that he cannot stand economically. Make Levy Bill' (meaning to include therein the Native Administration Ordinance No. 25 of 1936 of the Gold Coast Colony) 'to force him to pay taxes for the importation of unemployed Europeans to serve as Stool Treasurers. Send detectives to stay around the house of any African who is nationally conscious and who is agitating for national independence and if possible to round him up in a 'criminal frame-up' (meaning thereby a criminal charge in which the evidence is fabricated) 'so that he could be kept behind the bars' (meaning thereby prison)."

Section 330 of the Criminal Code (now s. 326 of the Criminal Code 1936 Revision) is as follows:—

Sub-s. (2):

"Any person who

(b) prints or publishes by any such act as is specified in Title 18 any seditious words or writing or

(c) being found in possession of any newspaper book or document or any part thereof or extract therefrom containing seditious words or writing does not prove to the satisfaction of the Court that at the time he was found in such possession he did not know the nature of its contents shall be liable—

(i) for a first offence under paras. (a), (b), (c) and (d) to imprisonment for two years or to a fine not exceeding one hundred pounds. . . .

(ii) for a first offence under paras. (e) and (f) to imprisonment for one year or to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds. . . .

Sub-Section (8) :

"A seditious intention" is an intention—

(1) to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the person of His Majesty, His heirs or successors or the Govt. of the Gold Coast as by law established; or

(2) to bring about a change in the sovereignty of the Gold Coast; or

(3) to excite His Majesty's subjects or inhabitants of the Gold Coast to attempt to procure the alteration, otherwise than by lawful means, of any other matter in the Gold Coast as by law established; or

(4) to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the administration of justice in the Gold Coast; or

(5) to raise discontent or disaffection amongst His Majesty's subjects or inhabitants of the Gold Coast; or

(6) to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of the population of the Gold Coast :

It is not a seditious intention—

(a) to show that His Majesty has been misled or mis-taken in any of his measures; or

(b) to point out errors or defects in the Govt. or constitution of the Gold Coast as by law established or in legislation or in the administration of justice with a view to the reformation of such errors or defects; or

(c) to persuade His Majesty's subjects or inhabitants of the Gold Coast to attempt to procure by lawful means the alteration of any matter in the Gold Coast as by law established other than that referred to in para. (2) of this sub-section; or

(d) to point out with a view to their removal, any matters, which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of ill-will and enmity between different classes of the population of the Gold Coast.

Provided that none of the acts or things mentioned in provisos (a), (b), (c) and (d) shall be deemed to be lawful if they are done in such a manner as to effect or be likely to effect any of the purposes (1) to (6) which are declared in this section to be a seditious intention.

'Seditious words' are words expressive of a seditious intention.

'Seditious writing' includes anything intended to be read and any sign or visible representation which is expressive of a seditious intention."

At the trial a plea of not guilty was entered. The appellant admitted the writing and publication of the article. His defence was that the article was not seditious and that it was not calculated to bring the Govt. of the Gold Coast Colony into hatred and contempt. A great deal of evidence was called as to the application of the article to the affairs of the Colony. Notwithstanding the statements of witnesses for the defence that they did not read the article as having reference to the Gold Coast Colony, it was not really in dispute that the appellant had the Govt. of the Colony in view when he wrote the article and that it referred to legislation and events generally in the Colony. There was no evidence of any outbreak of violence or of any manifestation of hostility to the Govt. of the Colony as a result of the article.

The case presented by Counsel for the appellant for their Lordships' consideration was that the prosecution could not succeed unless the words complained of were themselves of such a nature as to be likely to incite to violence, and unless there was positive extrinsic evidence of seditious intention. The foundation for these submissions was sought in the summing up by Cave, J. in R. v. Burns (1) quoted at length in Russell on Crime (9th edition) pp. 89—96. Reference was also made to a number of cases on the law of sedition in English and Scottish Courts, which, it was said, supported the statement of the law by Cave, J. Their Lordships throw no doubt upon the authority of these decisions, and if this was a case arising in this country, they would feel it their duty to examine the decisions in order to test the submissions on behalf of the appellant. The present case however, arose in the Gold Coast Colony and the law applicable is contained in the Criminal Code of the Colony. It was contended that the intention of the Code was to reproduce the law of sedition as expounded in the cases to which their Lordships' attention was called. Undoubtedly, the language of the section, under which the appellant was charged, lends some colour to this suggestion. There is a close correspondence at some points between the terms of the section in the Code and the statement of the English Law of sedition by Stephen, J. in the Digest of Criminal Law (7th edition), articles 123-126, quoted with approval by Cave, J. in his summing up in R. v. Burns (1). The fact remains, however, that it is in the Criminal Code of the Gold Coast Colony and not in English or Scottish cases that the law of sedition for the Colony is to be found. The Code was no doubt designed to suit the circumstances of the people of the Colony. The elaborate structure of s. 330 suggests that it was intended to contain as far as possible a full and complete statement of the law of sedition in the Colony. It must therefore be construed in its application to the facts of this case free from any glosses or interpolations derived from any expositions however authoritative of the Law of England or of Scotland.

In these circumstances, their Lordships turn to the Code, and they find nothing in the section under consideration to support the appellant's contentions. "Seditious words," in the terms of sub-s. (8) "are words expressive of a seditious intention." By an earlier definition in the same sub-section, "A seditious intention" is an intention to bring into hatred or contempt...the Govt. of the Gold Coast as by law established."

Their Lordships find these words clear and unambiguous. Questions will necessarily arise in every case as in this case as to the facts to which it is sought to apply these definitions. Fine distinctions may have to be drawn between facts which justify the conclusion that the intention of the person charged was to "bring into hatred or contempt.....the Govt. of the Gold Coast," and facts which are consistent only with the view that the intention was no more than, in the words of a later part of sub-s. (8), "to point out errors or defects in the Govt. of the Gold Coast." It is quite another thing to add words which are not in the Code and are not necessary to give a plain meaning to the section. Nowhere in the section is there anything to support the view that incitement to violence is a necessary ingredient of the crime of sedition. Violence may well be, and no doubt often is, the result of wild and ill-considered words, but the Code does not require proof from the words themselves of any intention to produce such a result, and their Lordships are unable to import words into s. 330 which would be necessary to support the appellant's argument.

The submission that there must be some extrinsic evidence of intention, outside the words themselves, before seditious intention can exist must also fail and for the same reason. If the words are seditious by reason of their expression of a seditious intention as defined in the section the seditious intention appears without any extrinsic evidence. The Legislature of the Colony might have defined "seditious words" by reference to an intention proved by evidence of other words or overt acts. It is sufficient to say they have not done so.

For the reasons indicated this appeal should be dismissed and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Pre-emption—Suit for—Exception to validity of items of consideration which have in fact changed hands, if can be taken—Vendee having influence over vendor—Burden of proving reality of consideration—Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 17—Pre-emption decree, when can be passed—Minor—Election—Minor on attaining majority paying off debt incurred by him during minority—If can subsequently bring suit for refund.

The right of pre-emption is a right of substitution for the buyer and it is not open to a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit, while claiming to enforce this right of substitution, to take exception to the validity of the items of sale consideration when, as a matter of fact, those items of consideration have changed hands. [p. 6, col. 2.]

Where therefore, the vendor who had executed a mortgage during his minority in favour of the vendee, agrees on attaining majority at the time of the sale to pay off the mortgage debt and the vendee agrees to set off that amount out of the total sale consideration entered in the sale deed, the transaction is perfectly legal and its legality cannot be impugned either by the vendor or the pre-emptor.

The fact that the vendee had some influence over the vendor is an additional circumstance tending to cast doubt on the genuineness of the amount of consideration as entered in the sale deed. That being so, the burden of proving that the ostensible consideration was the real consideration is on the vendee. 127 Ind. Cas. 589 (2), relied on. [p. 7, col. 1.]

Under s. 17, Agra Pre-emption Act, a decree for pre-emption can be passed in favour of a plaintiff only on payment of either the "actual price" paid by the vendee or on payment of the market value of the property. [p. 6, col. 1.]

It is perfectly permissible at law for a person after attaining majority to elect to pay the debt incurred by him during his minority. [ibid.]

If therefore a person after attaining majority has paid the debt due on the mortgage executed by him during his minority, he cannot subsequently bring a suit for the refund of that amount for the simple reason that a contract entered into by a minor though void is not unlawful [ibid.]

F. As. from the decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Ballia, dated April 30, 1935.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Appellants.

Mr. J. P. Bhargava, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J—This is an appeal by defendant-vendees in a pre-emption suit. The plaintiff-respondent has also assailed the decree of the Court below by a cross-appeal which has been numbered as First Appeal No. 327 of 1935. The dispute in both the appeals is about the consideration of the sale sought to be pre-empted. The sale sought to be pre-empted was effected on July 22, 1933, by Kailashpati Rai, defendant No. 3, in favour of Anant Rai, and Trilok Rai, defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The property sold was an area of 24 bighas 1 biswas, 4 dhurs in Patti Mukhraj Rai, Mohal Debi Rai of village Pipra Kalan in the District of Ballia. Village Pipra Kalan is a bigha doham village. The revenue of the property sold was Rs. 17-6-0 and the consideration entered in the sale deed was Rs. 13,000. This sale consideration was made up of the following items :

1. Due on a simple mortgage dated January 4, 1929, executed by Kailashpati Rai in favour of Anant Rai and Trilok Rai vendees	Rs. 6,000
2. Due on a possessory mortgage deed in favour of one Ram Autar Rai	" 3,500
3. Due on a possessory mortgage deed in favour of one Mangal Rai	" 1,000
4. Due on a sarkhat of Jeth Badi 13 Sambat 1988 executed by Kailashpati in favour of one Beni Madho	" 2,050
5. Paid to the vendor prior to registration	" 250
6. Paid before the Sub-Registrar	" 200
Total	Rs. 13,000

There was no dispute in the Court below as regards Items Nos. 2, 3 and 6 of the consideration noted above and the genuineness of the remaining items of consideration was impugned by the plaintiff in that Court. The Court below has held that the sum of Rs. 250 (Item No. 5) was paid to the vendor before registration, and this finding of the Court below has not been assailed before us. The dispute in the two appeals is now confined as to Item No. 1 and Item No. 4 of the sale consideration.

The mortgage deed dated January 4, 1929 (Item No. 1) was for a sum of Rs. 2,300 out of which Rs. 2,088 were paid before the Sub-Registrar and Rs. 212 were credited towards two previous sarkhats executed by Kailashpati in favour of the vendees. The sum of Rs. 6,000 entered as Item No. 1 was due on account of principal and interest of the said mortgage. The plaintiff's case was that the real consideration of the mortgage was only Rs. 300 and that on the date of the sale sought to be pre-empted the amount due on the basis of that mortgage was only Rs. 400. This case of the plaintiff failed in the Court below and that Court held that the mortgage deed dated January 4, 1929, was for a consideration of Rs. 2,300 and that a sum of Rs. 6,000 was due to the vendees on the basis of that mortgage on the date of the sale. This finding of the Court below has not been assailed in appeal before us.

The Court below however held that out of the sum of Rs. 6,000 due on the basis of the mortgage the vendees were not entitled to get a sum of Rs. 5,600. It was alleged by the plaintiff that Kailashpati was a minor on January 4, 1929, when the mortgage deed was executed and the mortgage transaction was therefore void and could not be ratified by Kailashpati on attaining majority. The plaintiff therefore maintained that he was not liable to pay to the vendees the sum of Rs. 6,000 that was due on the basis of the mortgage. This contention of the plaintiff was accepted by the Court below, but in view of the admission made by the plaintiff that a sum of Rs. 400 was due on the basis of the mortgage the Court below declined to award to the vendee a sum of Rs. 5,600 out of Item No. 1 of the sale consideration. The present appeal by the vendees is directed against this decision of the Court below.

As regards Item No. 4, viz., the amount alleged to be due on the basis of the sarkhat, the plaintiff's case was that the sarkhat was a fictitious document, was antedated and that no amount was, as a matter of fact, due from Kailashpati vendor to Beni Madho and that Item No. 4 was inserted in the sale deed simply with a view to defeat the plaintiff's right of pre-emption. The Court below overruled this contention of the plaintiff and held that the sarkhat was a genuine document and that Item No. 4 of the sale consideration was correct. First Appeal No. 327 of 1935 has been filed by the plaintiff with regard to Item No. 4 of the consideration. It is common ground that Items Nos. 2 and 3 of the sale consideration have not yet been paid by the vendees to Ram Autar Rai and Mangal Rai. As a result of its findings the Court below passed a decree in the plaintiff's favour conditional on the payment of a sum of Rs. 2,900.

We first proceed to deal with the vendees' appeal which relates to Item No. 1 of the sale consideration. The Court below has found that Kailashpati was a minor on the date of the execution of the mortgage deed dated January 4, 1929 and this finding is amply borne out by the evidence in the case. The consideration of the case must therefore be approached on the assumption that the mortgage deed having been executed by Kailashpati when he was a minor was void in law. The fact however remains that Kailashpati had attained majority on the date of the sale and elected to discharge the debt due on the mortgage by sale of his property. The question then arises whether it is open to the plaintiff in the present suit to impugn the validity of this item of the sale consideration. The question whether or not an agreement entered into by a minor can be ratified by him after attaining majority formed the subject of consideration by a Full Bench of this Court in Suraj Narain v. Sukhu Ahir (1). All the three learned Judges constituting the Bench delivered three separate judgments. Sulaiman, Ag. O. J. was inclined to the view that if no further advance is made at the time of ratification, the ratification of a contract entered into by a person during his minority is void and unenforceable. In the course of his judgment he referred to cases in which on receiving a further advance a minor after attaining majority had ratified the contract entered into by him during his minority and it was held that the ratification was valid and binding and he did not adversely criticise those cases. Mukerji, J., held that it is always open to a person on attaining majority to ratify an agreement entered into by him during his minority. Boys, J., held that consideration received by a minor during his minority cannot be a good consideration for ratification after he has attained majority. In the present appeal it is argued on behalf of the vendees that as some consideration, apart from the amount due on the basis of the mortgage, was paid by the vendees to Kailashpati, it was open to Kailashpati to ratify the mortgage and to pay the amount due to the vendees, and in support of this contention reliance is placed on the judgment of Sulaiman, Ag. O. J. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the observations of Sulaiman, Ag. O. J. about fresh advances being made at the time of ratification were in the nature of obiter dicta and that, apart from the Full Bench decision, the weight of authority is in favour of the view that contracts entered into during minority cannot be ratified after the minor has attained majority. In the view that we take, it is unnecessary to express an opinion about the merits of the contentions advanced on behalf of the parties.

It is manifest from a perusal of s. 17, Agra Pre-emption Act that a decree for pre-emption can be passed in favour of a plaintiff only on payment of either the 'actual price' paid by the vendee or on payment of the market value of the property. In the present case there cannot be the slightest doubt that Kailashpati agreed at the time of the sale to pay to the vendees the amount due on the basis of the mortgage of 1929 even though that mortgage was void in law. It is equally clear that the vendees agreed to set off a sum of Rs. 6,000 in lieu of the mortgage debt out of the total sale consideration entered in the sale deed. In other words, a consideration of Rs. 6,000 passed from the vendees to the vendor notwithstanding the fact that the mortgage of 1929 was unenforceable at law. The right of pre-emption is a right of substitution for the buyer and it is not open to a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit, while claiming to enforce this right of substitution, to take exception to the validity of the items of sale consideration when, as a matter of fact, those items of consideration have changed hands. Here we are not concerned with any question of ratification of a contract entered into by a person during his minority. The case before us is one in which a person after attaining majority has elected to pay the debt incurred by him during his minority and this is perfectly permissible at law.

To put the matter in another way. If Kailashpati after attaining majority had paid the amount due on the basis of the mortgage of 1929 to the vendees he could not subsequently bring a suit for the refund of that amount for the simple reason that a contract entered into by a minor though void is not unlawful. The set-off of Rs. 6,000 out of the entire sale consideration was to all intents and purposes tantamount to payment of the mortgage debt by Kailashpati to the vendees. The legality of the transaction cannot therefore be impugned either by Kailashpati or by the plaintiff. In this view of the matter the Court below was wrong in holding that the plaintiff was not liable to pay the entire amount due on the basis of the mortgage of January 4, 1929, and the appeal of the vendees must succeed.

We now come to the plaintiff's appeal. This appeal, as already stated, relates to the amount alleged to be due on the basis of the sarkhat in favour of Beni Madho. We are not satisfied about the genuineness of this item of the sale consideration. In the plaint it was alleged that Beni Madho was a relation of the vendees and that the sarkhat in his favour was fictitious. In the written statement filed by the vendees the allegation that Beni Madho was their relation was denied and so was the allegation about the fictitious nature of the sarkhat. At the trial the suggestion of the plaintiff was that Beni Madho was a relation of the vendees. The vendees on the other hand maintained that Beni Madho was a relation of Bhagwan Rai, plaintiff. The suggestion of neither party was substantiated. There are however other circumstances that irresistibly point to the conclusion that the sarkhat was not a genuine document.

In holding the sarkhat to be genuine the Court below was to a great extent influenced by what it considered to be the market value of the property sold. In the course of its judgment, it made reference to certain exemplars on which reliance was placed by the vendees and held that the property in this village was sold or mortgaged at a consideration varying between Rs. 625 to Rs. 775 per bigha. The Court below however took no note of a sale deed dated November 17, 1931, on which reliance was placed by the plaintiff with a view to show that the market value of the property in the village in question did not exceed Rs. 400 per bigha. By this sale deed an area of about 8 bighas in village Pipra Kalan and of about 4 bighas in two other villages was conveyed for a sum of Rs. 3,700. Even if we exclude from consideration the 4 bighas of the other two villages the value of the property in Pipra Kalan does not exceed Rs. 450 per bigha. That being so, the Court below was not right in proceeding on the assumption that the market value of zemindari in Pipra Kalan was at the rate of about Rs. 700 per bigha. The fact that according to the exemplars filed by the plaintiff the market value per bigha of land in Pipra Kalan did not exceed Rs. 450 was a circumstance pointing to the conclusion that the ostensible price entered in the sale deed was not the actual price. Further, we have the fact that the vendees had dealings with Kailashpati from a time when the latter was a minor and eventually succeeded in getting a sale deed from him partly in consideration of a debt, that was unenforceable at law. This shows that the vendees had some influence over Kailashpati. This was an additional circumstance tending to cast doubt on the genuineness of the amount of consideration as entered in the sale deed. That being so, the burden of proving that the ostensible consideration was the real consideration was on the vendees vide Dhanukdhari Singh v. Suresh Singh (2); and this burden in our judgment was not discharged. The sarkhat in question purports to be for a sum of Rs. 2,100 and according to the entries in the same a sum of Rs. 2,050 was paid by the vendees to Beni Madho a few days after the execution of the sale deed. To prove the sarkhat and the payment of the sum of Rs. 2,050 three witnesses were examined by the vendees. One of those witnesses was Trilok Rai, one of the vendees. He deposed that he paid Rs. 2,050 to Beni Madho towards the sarkhat. He stated that he had summoned Beni Madho "but he did not take the summons". He deposed that when he paid the amount to Beni Madho, Kailashpati and Damri were present. Kailashpati was however not called as a witness in the case. His evidence would have been of great importance and no reason has been assigned by the vendees for the omission to examine Kailashpati. Damri Rai stated that the sum of Rs. 2,050 was paid to Beni Madho by Trilok Rai in his presence. In cross-examination he stated that he had no connection with Trilok Rai or Anant Rai. This statement of Damri was undoubtedly untrue as Trilok Rai admitted in his evidence that "Damri is of my family." Damri also admitted that Trilok Rai had once figured as a witness in a civil suit on his behalf, Damri was therefore not an independent witness. The last witness examined by the vendees on this part of the case was a man named Ram Janam Rai. He was a marginal witness of the sale deed in dispute. He admitted that Damri Rai was his uncle by relationship.

The oral evidence adduced by the vendees in proof of the payment of the amount due on the basis of the sarkhat was worthless. Apart from this, no reason was assigned by the vendees for the non-production of Beni Madho as a witness in the case. Even if Beni Madho did not accept the summons once, the vendees could very well have made another attempt to summon him and to produce him as a witness. They however did nothing of the kind. The sarkhat is scribed by a man named Ram Kishun Rai who is a servant of Beni Madho. Even Ram Kishun Rai was not produced as a witness in the case. If Beni Madho does money-lending business, as is alleged on behalf of the vendees, Ram Kishun Rai could have been summoned along with the account books of Beni Madho.

The sarkhat shows that the entire amount advanced was taken by Kailashpati for payment to one Parmeshwar Rai. Parmeshwar Rai was also not called as a witness. No reason worth the name has been assigned by the vendees for not producing Beni Madho, Ram Kishun Rai, Parmeshwar Rai and Kailashpati. It cannot be doubted that the evidence of these persons would have been of great importance on the question of the genuineness or otherwise of the sarkhat. The best possible evidence that could easily be produced by the vendees was withheld by them and such evidence as has been produced is worthless. The only point that is in favour of the vendees is that the sarkhat is on a stamp paper. The stamp paper is however of only eight annas. It may very well be that Kailashpati had such a stamp paper in his possession. We have considered the evidence bearing on this part of the case and have come to the conclusion that the burden that lay on the vendees to prove the genuineness of this part of the sale consideration has not been discharged.

Before concluding this judgment we may observe that we have some suspicion in our mind that as the learned Judge of the Court below felt compelled on supposed legal ground to disallow the major portion of the amount due on the basis of the mortgage of 1929 he, in order to compensate the vendees for the loss, stretched a point in their favour so far as the sarkhat in question was concerned. For the reasons given above Appeal No. 327 of 1935 must also prevail so far as Item No. 4 of the sale consideration is concerned. The result is that both this Appeal and First Appeal No. 327 of 1935 are allowed and the decree of the Court below is varied to this extent that the plaintiff's suit for pre-emption is decreed on payment of Rs. 6,450.

We allow three months' time to the plaintiff for payment of this amount. In default of payment the suit shall stand dismissed with costs in both Courts. If the amount is paid within the time allowed the parties will pay and receive costs in proportion to their failure and success in both the Courts. A decree in terms of O. XX, r. 14, Civil P. C. will be drawn up by the office.

Civil Revision Application No. 377 of 1938.

MAOKLIN AND LOKUR, JJ.

MULJEE SICKA & Co.,—APPLICANTS

MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER,

BOMBAY—OPPONENTS.

Government of India Act, 1935 (25 and 26 Gao. V, Ch. 42), s. 224 (2)—Powers of High Court to issue writ of certiorari, if curtailed—Certiorari—Writ of—Powers of High Court to issue—Chief Judge of Small Cause Court hearing appeal under s. 217, City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), acting without jurisdiction—His act, if can be controlled by writ of certiorari—Bombay City Municipal Act (III of 1888), s. 151 (2)—Value of machinery, whether to be deducted.

Sub-section (2) of s. 224, Govt. of India Act, does not curtail any of the powers possessed by the High Courts before the Act of 1935 was passed. In fact s. 223 preserves those powers. All that sub-s. (2) of s. 224 means is that the High Courts cannot so interpret sub-s. (1) of that section as to usurp the powers which they did not possess before. [p. 11, col. 1.]

The High Court has power to issue a writ of certiorari in respect not only of the orders of subordinate Courts, but also of the proceedings of any tribunal or officer who, though not a Court, is yet acting judicially in these proceedings. Although the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, hearing an appeal under s. 217, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888, be not a Court, his decision is a judicial act, and if he acts without jurisdiction or in excess of his legal authority, his act can be controlled by the High Court by a writ of prohibition or certiorari, as the case may be. It is no doubt true that sub-s. (1) of s. 219 of the Act provides that the decision of the Chief Judge upon any appeal under s. 217 against any such value or tax shall be final. But that only means that there are no further appeals but it does not affect the power of the High Court to issue a writ of certiorari. There are two conditions to be fulfilled before a writ can be issued, namely that the tribunal or officer whose act is complained of must be acting judicially, and that the act complained of must be without jurisdiction or in excess of the legal authority of that tribunal or officer. An officer or tribunal having jurisdiction to decide a question cannot be said to have acted in excess of the legal authority if the decision happens to be wrong. The mere fact that the order of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, is opposed to the principle of res judicata, and that the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, have been misinterpreted by him are not adequate grounds for the issue of a writ of certiorari. [p. 11, col. 2; p. 12, cols. 1 & 2.]

[Case-law referred to.]

Sub-section (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, does not require that the value of machinery should be deducted from the rateable value of the buildings. What the sub-section says is that the value of the machinery "shall not be included in the rateable value of such building or land." [p. 13, col. 1.]

O. R. App. from the order passed by the Chief Judge, Court of Small Causes, Bombay, in Municipal Appeal No. M/96 of 1937.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor, H. M. Choksi, S. J. Shah and C. S. Trivedi, for the Applicants.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the Opponents.

Lokur, J.—This is an application for the issue of a writ of certiorari in respect of the order passed by the Chief Judge, Small Cause Court, Bombay in Municipal Appeal No. M/96 of 1937. The petitioner firm owns several buildings on the Vithal-bhai Patel Road and they are liable to the Bombay Municipal Corporation to pay a certain percentage of their rateable values as property taxes under ss. 139 and 140, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888. For this purpose, the Municipal Commissioner has to fix the rateable value of each building assessable to property tax in accordance with the provisions of s. 154 of the Act. According to that section the rateable value of a building or land is the amount of the annual rent for which such building or land might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, minus a sum equal to ten per centum of the said annual rent, to be deducted in lieu of all allowances for repairs or on any other account whatever. Sub-s. (2) of section 154 says:

"The value of any machinery contained or situate in or upon any building or land shall not be included in the rateable value of such building or land."

When the rateable value of one of the petitioners' buildings known as the "Moolji Mahal" was fixed by the Municipal Commissioner an appeal was presented by him to the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, under s. 217 of the Act, complaining that in fixing that value the Municipal Commissioner should have, but had not, excluded the value of the machinery, namely three lifts and one pump, provided in the premises of the building. Mr. Chitre who was then the Chief Judge allowed the appeal and ordered the exclusion of the value of the lifts and pump; and for that purpose he appointed an expert as a Commissioner to assess their value. The valuation of the other buildings was postponed during the pendency of the appeal; but even after the appeal was decided in favour of the petitioners the Municipal Commissioner ignored it and fixed the rateable value of the two other buildings of the petitioners without excluding the value of the lifts and pumps with which they were provided. The petitioners again appealed to the Chief Judge, but this time Mr. Indranarayan who had succeeded Mr. Chitre to that office took a different view and held that although lifts and pumps might be "mainly or partly machinery" no deduction could be allowed from the annual rents of the buildings for the value or cost of the lifts and pumps under sub-s. (2) of s. 154 of the Act. He observed that in taking the rents reasonably expected to be received as the basis for assessment the costs of the lifts as such had nowhere been in fact included. He therefore rejected the petitioners' request in that behalf and it is against that order that the petitioners have applied for a writ of certiorari.

The original application of the petitioners asked for a revision of the order of the Chief Judge under the extraordinary and inherent jurisdiction of this Court and its power of revision and superintendence over the Courts subordinate to it. But, when this application was admitted the petitioners obtained permission and added a prayer for the issue of a writ of certiorari and it was practically conceded that as the Chief Judge was acting as a persona designata and not as a Court in hearing the appeal an application for revision under s. 115, Civil P. C., 1908, was not competent.

The first question that arises is whether this Court has power to issue a writ of certiorari. No instances of any such writ having ever been issued by this Court have been brought to our notice, but there are numerous cases in which such writs have been issued by other High Courts and we feel no doubt that we have power to do so in a proper case. The nature of this writ is thus described in Short and Mellor's Crown Practice (Edn. 2, p. 14):

"The writ of certiorari is the process by which the King's Bench Division in the exercise of its superintending power over inferior jurisdictions, requires the Judges or officers of such jurisdictions to certify or send proceedings before them into the King's Bench Division whether for the purpose of examining into the legality of such proceedings or for giving fuller or more satisfactory effect to them than could be done by the Court below."

Both the writ of prohibition and the writ of certiorari are of great antiquity in England, forming part of the powers by which the King's Courts restrained Courts of inferior jurisdictions from exceeding their powers. As observed by Atkin, L. J. in Rex v. Electricity Commissioners; London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1) (p. 204):

"Prohibition restrains the tribunal from proceeding further in excess of jurisdiction; certiorari requires the record or the order of the Court to be sent up to the King's Bench Division, to have its legality inquired into, and, if necessary, to have the order quashed. It is to be noted that both writs deal with questions of excessive jurisdiction, and doubtless in their origin dealt almost exclusively with the jurisdiction of what is described in ordinary parlance as a Court of Justice. But the operation of the writs has extended to control the proceedings of bodies which do not claim to be, and would not be recognized as, Courts of Justice. Whenever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects, and having the duty to act judicially, act in excess of their legal authority they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division exercised in these writs."

It is true that the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, is not a Court when hearing municipal appeals, but acts as a persona designata, as the wording of s. 217, City of Bom Municipal Act, 1888, shows. It has been so held in Ahmad Suleman v. Municipal Commissioner, Bombay (2) and the High Court is held to have no jurisdiction to interfere with his decision under s. 115, Civil P. C., 1908. In England also, originally no doubt the writ was issued only to inferior Courts, using that expression in the ordinary meaning of the word "Court." But, as observed by Bankes, L. J. at p. 193* of the case cited above, "as statutory bodies were brought into existence exercising legal jurisdiction, so the issue of the writ came to be extended to such bodies." The scope of the writ of certiorari is thus described by May, C. J., in Queen v. Corporation of Dublin (3), (p. 376):

"It is established that the writ of certiorari does not lie to remove an order merely ministerial, such as a warrant, but it lies to remove and adjudicate upon the validity of acts judicial. In this connexion the term 'judicial' does not necessarily mean acts of a Judge or legal tribunal sitting for the determination of matters of law, but for the purpose of this question a judicial act seems to be an act done by competent authority, upon consideration of facts and circumstances, and imposing liability or affecting the rights of others. And if there be a body empowered by law to inquire into facts, make estimates to impose a rate on a district, it would seem to me that the acts of such a body involving such consequences would be judicial acts."

This passage is quoted by Lord Atkin with approval in Frome United Breweries Co. v. Bath County Borough Justices (4), at p. 602. When the Supreme Court of Judicature was established in 1823, cl. 5, Letters Patent, invested it with such jurisdiction and authority as the Justices of the Court of King's Bench had and might lawfully exercise, within that part of Great Britain called England, as far as circumstances would admit. It is brought to our notice that cl. 55, which specifically refers to the writ of certiorari, mentions only the various Courts, Justices and Magistrates, and says—

"...the said Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay is hereby empowered, and authorized to award and issue a writ or writs of Mandamus, Certiorari Procedendo, or error, to be prepared in manner above-mentioned, and directed to such Courts or Magistrates as the case may require, and to punish any contempt thereof, or wilful disobedience thereunto, by fine and imprisonment."

This clause is not intended to curtail the powers of the Supreme Court of Judicature conferred upon it by cl. 5, but only to specify some of those powers in express terms. It does not take away from it any of the powers exercised by the King's Bench in England. This is made clear by Abdur Rahim, Offg. C. J. in the Full Bench decision in Mrs. Annie Besant v. Emperor (5) where he points out that while the powers of revision and control are available only over the proceedings of ordinary Courts, a writ of certiorari is issued not only to Courts, but to tribunals specially constituted and entrusted with duties of a judicial character. Thus, while cl. 55 specifies the powers of the High Court with regard to certain Courts and Magistrates, the powers exercised by the King's Bench conferred upon it by cl. 5 are left untouched. When the Act of 1861, 24 & 25 Vic., c. 104, abolished the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Dewanny Adawlut and Sudder Foujdarry Adawlut, and established the High Court, cl. 9 of the Act transferred to them:

"All jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under this Act at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts".

Even in that Act the powers which the Supreme Court of Judicature possessed over all its Subordinate Courts were specifically granted by cl. 15 without thereby intending to take away from them the other powers which are exercised by the King's Bench in England. All those powers were continued by the Amended Letters Patent granted on December 28, 1865. Interpreting the Letters Patent of the High Court of Bengal which was similarly worded, their Lordships of the Privy Council held in Surendranath Banerjee v. Chief Justice and Judges of the High Court of Bengal (6) that the common law powers of the Court of King's Bench in England were vested in the Bengal High Court. That proposition was held to apply equally to this High Court by Shah, J. in Mahomedalli v. Ismailji (7), at p. 474. Those powers were again continued by s. 106, sub-s. (1), Govt. of India Act, 1915, and the powers of superintendence over the Courts subordinate to it were conferred by s. 107. This power of superintendence is held to include the power to revise the orders of Subordinate Courts: Sholapur Municipality v. Tuljaram Krishnasa (8). The corresponding s. 224, Govt. of India Act, 1935 however contains a new clause which did not find place in s. 107 of the Act of 1915. Sub-s. (2) of s. 224 runs as follows:

"Nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to a High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior Court which is not otherwise subject to appeal or revision".

This clause cannot have been intended to curtail any of the powers possessed by the High Courts before the Act of 1935 was passed. In fact s. 223 preserves those powers. All that sub-s. (2) of s. 224 means is that the High Courts cannot so interpret sub-s. (1) of that section as to usurp the powers which they did not possess before. This is clear from the expression "not otherwise subject to appeal or revision." It is true that this clause may throw some doubt as to whether the remarks made in Sholapur Municipality v. Tuljaram Krishnasa (8), that though an order of a Subordinate Court may not be subject to revision under s. 115, Civil P. O., it can be revised in the exercise of the powers of superintendence conferred by s. 107, Govt. of India Act of 1915, can now hold good. All this discussion is more or less academic, since s. 224, Govt. of India Act of 1935, deals with the administrative functions of the High Courts, as the marginal note shows. It does not affect the powers conferred upon the High Courts by the Letters Patent and the Charter Act, powers co-extensive with those of the King's Bench in England, and, as I have already pointed out, the Court of the King's Bench has power to issue a writ of certiorari in respect not only of the orders of Subordinate Courts, but also of the proceedings of any tribunal or officer who, though not a Court, is yet acting judicially in those proceedings. It is not disputed that, although the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, hearing an appeal under s. 217, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888, be not a Court, his decision is a judicial act, and if he acts without jurisdiction or in excess of his legal authority, his act can be controlled by this Court by a writ of prohibition or certiorari, as the case may be. It is no doubt true that sub-s. (1) of s. 219 of the Act provides that the decision of the Chief Judge upon any appeal under s. 217 against any such value or tax shall be final. But that only means that there are no further appeals, but it does not affect the power of this Court to issue a writ of certiorari. The Privy Council had to consider the effect of the insertion of such words in enactments in relation to the remedy by way of a writ of certiorari in Rex v. Nat Bell Liquors Ltd. (9) and their Lordships observe as follows (pp 159-160):

"Long before Jervis's Acts statutes had been passed which created an inferior Court, and declared its decisions to be 'final' and 'without appeal', and again and again the Court of King's Bench had held that language of this kind did not restrict or take away the right of the Court to bring the proceedings before itself by certiorari."

As remarked in Halsbury's Laws of England, Edn. 2, Vol. 9, p. 861, para 1455:

"Certiorari can only be taken away by express negative words. It is not taken away by words which direct that certain matters shall be 'finally determined' in the inferior Court, nor by a proviso that 'no other Court shall intermeddle' with regard to certain matters as to which jurisdiction is conferred on the inferior Court."

It is thus clear that if the power to issue a writ of certiorari is vested in the High Court, then it is not, and cannot be, taken away by s. 219, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888. We therefore hold that we have power to issue a writ of certiorari if a proper case is made out. Having come to this conclusion, the next question that arises is whether the case before us (9) (1922) 2 A O 128 (159-160); 91 L J P O 146; 127 L T 437; 33 T L R 541.

justifies the issue of such a writ. The two objections which have been raised against the order of the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, are that it is opposed to the principle of res judicata and that the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888, have been misinterpreted. Mr. Thakor, the learned Counsel for the petitioners, did not seriously press the first objection as an adequate ground for the issue of a writ of certiorari. Even in an application for revision under s. 115, Civil P. C. an erroneous decision on the question of res judicata is not regarded as sufficient to justify interference; Hari Bhikaji v. Naro Vishvanath (10). It is therefore not necessary to consider whether the learned Chief Judge was bound by the decision given in another case by his predecessor. Mr. Chitre was dealing with the rateable valuation of a different building and for a different year, and although the learned Chief Judge might have taken into consideration the reasons given by Mr. Chitre in arriving at his conclusion, he was not bound to accept and follow his reasoning, and his refusal to do so cannot be regarded as a ground for issuing a writ of certiorari. The limits within which such a writ can be issued are clearly set out by Atkin, L. J. in Rex v. Electricity Commissioners; London Electricity Joint Committee Co. (1) to which I have already referred, as follows (p. 205*):

"Wherever any body of persons having legal authority to determine questions affecting the rights of subjects, and having the duty to act judicially, act in excess of their legal authority they are subject to the controlling jurisdiction of the King's Bench Division exercised in these writs."

This passage was quoted with approval by Lord Hewart, O. J. in Rex v. Minister of Health; Davis Ex parte (11) at p. 627. The law is summarized in Ryde's Law and Practice of Rating, Edn. 6, at p. 702, thus:

"If the Court of Quarter Sessions refuses to exercise jurisdiction when it has it, the King's Bench will by mandamus compel that Court to hear and determine the appeal. And if the Quarter Sessions exercise powers in excess of their jurisdiction, or where they have none, the King's Bench will bring up the proceedings by a writ of certiorari and quash them; for there is inherent in the Court of King's Bench authority to bring before it by writ of certiorari save where the writ is taken away by statutory enactment or charter, the proceedings of any Court of inferior jurisdiction, with a view to quash such proceedings. But this applies only where there is some defect of jurisdiction, or informality or defect apparent on the face of the proceedings. If the Sessions have jurisdiction to hear an appeal and do so, but decide wrongly, the King's Bench will not interfere either by mandamus or certiorari."

Thus, there are two conditions to be fulfilled before a writ can be issued, namely that the tribunal or officer whose act is complained of must be acting judicially, and that the act complained of must be without jurisdiction or in excess of the legal authority of that tribunal or officer. An officer of tribunal having jurisdiction to decide a question cannot be said to have acted in excess of the legal authority if the decision happens to be wrong. This aspect has been fully discussed by Lord Sumner in Rex v. Nat Bell Liquors Ltd. (9). In that case it was held that a conviction by a Magistrate for a non-indictable offence cannot be quashed on certiorari on the ground that the depositions showed that there was no evidence to support the conviction, or that the Magistrate had misdirected himself in considering the evidence; and it was held that absence of evidence did not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the charge. In the course of his judgment his Lordship observed (p. 151*):

"A justice who convicts without evidence is doing something that he ought not to do, but he is doing it as a Judge, and if his jurisdiction to entertain the charge is not open to impeachment, his subsequent error, however grave, is a wrong exercise of a jurisdiction which he has and not a usurpation of a jurisdiction which he has not."

Similarly, the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Bombay, in this case, may have wrongfully interpreted sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act and arrived at an erroneous conclusion; but, in doing so, he was acting within his jurisdiction and not in excess of the powers conferred upon him by s. 217 of the Act. Mr. Thakor relied upon the ruling in Nundo Lal Bose v. Corporation for the Town of Calcutta (12), which was a case under the Ben. Municipal Act of 1876. In that case the Commissioners had based the rateable valuation of the buildings on a percentage of the estimated cost of the buildings in entire disregard of the principle laid down in the Act, namely that it should be based on the gross annual rent at which any such house or land might reasonably be expected to let from year to year. In issuing a writ of certiorari. Garth, O. J. observed (p. 281*):

"In this it seems to me they acted beyond their powers. They had no right whatever to make the assessment upon any other basis than that which the Act prescribes. The principle upon which they ascertain the annual value of the premises appears to me to have been obviously fallacious; but whether it was so or not, it was an arbitrary test, and one which the law does not sanction."

Thus, the method followed by the Commissioners in Calcutta in assessing the rateable value of the buildings was not warranted by the Ben. Municipal Act, and, in adopting some other method, they were held to be acting beyond their powers. But in this case the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court has interpreted sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, and fixed the rateable value of the petitioners' buildings according to the provisions of the Act in the light of his own interpretation. He had the power to interpret the sections of the Act, and if his interpretation be not correct, it does not justify the issue of a writ of certiorari.

It is argued that having held the lifts and the pump to be "mainly or partly machinery," the learned Chief Judge acted beyond his legal authority in including them in fixing the rateable value of the buildings. But that is not what he has actually done. In the previous appeal, Mr. Chitre had ordered the lifts and the pump to be separately valued and the value to be deducted from the rateable value of the buildings. Unfortunately, the wording of sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, is unhappy, and the word 'value' used at the beginning of the sub-section seems to have been intended to mean the rateable value. Even then the sub-section does not require that such value of machinery should be deducted from the rateable value of the buildings. What the sub-section says is that the value of the machinery "shall not be included in the rateable value of such building or land." Even assuming that the lifts and the pump are machinery attached to the building, it is difficult to see how their value is not to be included in the rateable value of the building or land, as they are amenities attached to the building for the convenience of the occupants. Sub-s. (1) of s. 154 requires Commissioner to find out the amount of the annual rent for which the building might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, and it is difficult to see how the annual rent can be estimated if the lift is altogether left out of consideration. That is what the learned Chief Judge has said in his judgment. He says:

"In taking the rents reasonably expected to be received as the basis for assessment the cost of the lift as such has nowhere been in fact included, and I do not see that such a basis offends in any way against the provisions of s. 154."

He is right in saying that no deduction can be allowed from the annual rent of the building under sub-s. (2) of s. 154 as sub-s. (2) does not provide for such a deduction; but the learned Chief Judge has specifically stated that in assessing the reasonable rent of the building the cost of the lift has not been included. He was therefore acting within his jurisdiction, and we do not think that he has exceeded the legal authority vested in him by s. 154. This case is therefore not fit for the issue of a writ of certiorari.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to go into the question whether the interpretation placed upon sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act by the learned Chief Judge is or is not correct. Unfortunately, that sub-section has been a source of fruitful litigation for several years past, and different Chief Judges have come to different conclusions in the light of their own interpretation of that sub-section. In Municipal Appeals Nos. M/8 and M/9 of 1922 the learned Chief Judge held that the value of lifts and pumps was not to be excluded from the rateable value of the building under s. 154, sub-s. (2) of the Act. In Municipal Appeal No. M/46 of 1936, Mr. Chitre took the opposite view, and now in this case Mr. Indranarayan has gone back to the view taken in 1922. In Haji Dawood v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (13) electric fittings and fans were held not to have been shown to be "machinery" within the meaning of s. 154, sub-s. (2), of the Act. All this divergence of view is due to the unhappy wording of that sub-section, and to the fact that in 1888, when the City of Bom. Municipal Act was passed, it could not have been in the contemplation of the legislators that a machinery like an electric lift would be a necessary amenity for a storied residential building. Even in England, prior to the passing of the Rating and Valuation Act of 1925, there had been a sharp controversy as to the inclusion in the valuation of machinery and plant and the extent to which the valuation was to be effected. The Act of 1925 has now made it clear in s. 24 that in the valuation of hereditaments containing machinery and plant no account shall be taken of such machinery or plant except those mentioned in Sch. III to the Act. That schedule includes, inter alia, lifts and elevators mainly or usually used by passengers. Section 154, sub-s. (2), City of Bom. Municipal Act, provides for the exclusion of "machinery" in the fixing of the rateable value of building, without making any such exception. If it be intended that the value of such machinery as lifts and pumps should not be excluded from consideration, then the Legislature must make it clear by suitably amending the sub-section and adding a schedule of exceptions as in the English Rating and Valuation Act of 1925. If the sub-section, as it stands, be strictly construed, it would lead to an absurd result as pointed out in the judgment of the learned Chief Judge. According to the accepted canons of interpretation of statutes, a fiscal enactment imposing a burden on the subject will be strictly construed in favour of such subject, and hence the sooner the sub-section is amended so as to convey clearly what is really meant, the better it will be for the public and the Corporation. We do not however feel called upon to express our considered opinion regarding the correct interpretation of the sub-section, since, even if the order complained of be not correct, we hold that this is not a case in which a writ of certiorari should be issued. On these grounds we discharge the Rule with costs.

Macklin, J.—I agree not only that this Court has power to issue a writ of certiorari in suitable cases, but also that an order passed by a persona designata like the Chief Judge will be a suitable case if it can be shown that the learned Chief Judge has in any way exceeded his jurisdiction. But I agree with the reasons given by my learned brother in thinking that he has not exceeded his jurisdiction, and that it is not open to us to interfere with his order, whether that order be right or wrong. On that view of the case, it is not necessary for us to decide whether his order is right or wrong; and speaking for myself, I am glad that it is not necessary for us to decide that point, since it would involve an interpretation of the very difficult language used in sub-s. (2) of s. 154, City of Bom. Municipal Act, 1888. To my mind, there are no less than three difficulties in that section. The word 'value' (in the expression "value of any machinery") is capable of meaning either the capital value or the annual value. The word 'machinery' may be intended to be used as it is used in ordinary parlance, or it may have some special meaning as it has in the English Rating Act. And lastly the words "shall not be included in the rateable value" are by no means easy of practical application—at any rate if the section said just the opposite, namely that the value of the machinery was to be included in the rateable value, I do not quite know how the rating authorities would proceed to set about it. To my mind it is desirable that the point should be made clear since it is likely to be a source of difficulty in future, and it is obviously a point of considerable importance not only to the Municipality but to property owners also. I doubt even if the words as they stand in sub-s. (2) of s. 154 can be interpreted so as to correspond with the definition of "annual letting value" given in s. 3, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. It seems to me that it is a matter deserving the serious consideration of the Legislature in order that their intention, whatever that really be, may be clearly expressed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 26-G—Order passed by Revenue Officer under s. 26-G, if can be revised under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

Section 26-G, Ben. Ten. Act, empowers a Court as well as a Revenue Officer to entertain applications. A Revenue Officer on the plain language of the statute is not therefore a Court. He is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. The mere fact that his order might have the effect of a decree of Civil Court does not make him a Court, far less a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. C. His order cannot therefore be revised.

O. Rules issued from the application for setting aside order of the Revenue Officer (Sub-Divisional Officer), Diamond Harbour (24 Parganas), dated July 14, 1939.

Messrs. Saroj Kumar Maity (in No. 1153) and Sarat Chandra Janah (in No. 1132), for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Sarat Chandra Janah (in No. 1153) and Apurba Charan Mukherjee (in No. 1132), for the Opposite Party.

Nasim Ali, J.—The orders complained of in these two rules are the orders of a Revenue Officer under s. 26-G, Ben. Ten. Act. That section empowers a Court as well as a Revenue Officer to entertain applications. A Revenue Officer on the plain language of the statute is not therefore a Court. A Revenue Officer is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of this Court. The mere fact that his order might have the effect of a decree of Civil Court does not make him a Court, far less a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of s. 115, Civil P. O. Further I am not satisfied that the decision of the Revenue Officer in these two cases is wrong on the merits. I therefore discharge both the Rules. There will be no order as to costs in these two rules.

Narsingh Rau, J.—The main question arising in these rules is whether an order made by a Revenue Officer under s. 26-G (6), Ben. Ten. Act, can be revised by the High Court under s. 115, Civil P. O. This depends upon the precise implications of the words "such order shall have the effect of a decree of a Civil Court" occurring at the end of the sub-section. What the effect of a decree of a Civil Court is, is not stated in the Ben. Ten. Act itself but is to be gathered from the Civil P. O. But there are two initial difficulties: first, the decree dealt with in the Code are adjudications in suits, and secondly, if they are to have any effect under the Code they must be decrees passed by a Court of Civil Judicature within the meaning of the Code. If therefore we are to give any meaning to the words in question, we must hold that, besides what they expressly state, they necessarily imply (1) that a proceeding under s. 26-G shall be deemed to be a suit and (2) that a Revenue Officer making an order under the section shall be deemed to be a Civil Court within the meaning of the Civil P. O. If we make these two assumptions, but not otherwise, it is possible to give the words some meaning e. g. the provisions of the Civil P. O. regarding execution may then become applicable to the Revenue Officer's order. Whether the Legislature intended anything more it is not possible to say.

But even with the above assumptions we cannot say that the Revenue Officer when acting under the section is a Court subordinate to the High Court, with the result that his order cannot be said to be subject to revision by the High Court under s. 115, Civil P. O. I therefore agree that the Rules should be discharged, although the resulting position can hardly be regarded as satisfactory. Section 26-G is a provision which extinguishes without compensation certain private rights. Orders thereunder, if made by a Civil Court, are subject to the High Court's control. But it would seem that similar orders, if made by a Revenue Officer are, as the law stands at present, subject neither to appeal nor to revision in any quarter.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 690 of 1939

November 16, 1939

DIN MOHAMMAD AND RAM LALL, JJ.

BHAG SINGH PAKHAR SINGH—CONVICT

—APPELLANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY!

Criminal trial—Onus to prove guilt—General rule that it always lies on prosecution is subject to exception in s. 105, Evidence Act (I of 1872).

The general rule that the onus always lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt is subject to statutory exception contained in s. 105, Evidence Act. The prosecution cannot claim a verdict of guilty because the accused puts forward a false defence. The guilt must be determined on the strength of the prosecution evidence alone, but where the accused puts forward a plea that he did commit the offence charged but in circumstances that excused or mitigated, the prosecution in such cases can show that no such circumstances exist and so the claim is averted. With the rejection of the defence version however the duty of the prosecution does not end and they have still to show that the accused caused death in circumstances which make the offence murder and in this sense the onus never shifts from the prosecution. Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecution (1), explained. [p 17, col. 1.]

Or. A. from the order of the Sessions Judge, Ludhiana, dated June 19, 1939.

Messrs. J. G. Sethi and Dasarundha Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basant Krishan, for The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Ram Lall, J.—Bhag Singh with his father Pakhar Singh was tried under ss. 302/34, I. P. O., on the allegation that these two persons together with Nahar Singh, absconder, caused murders of Bishen Singh, Jagir Singh and Kehr Singh, just outside their village on the morning.

of February 6, 1939. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted Pakhar Singh, convicted Bhag Singh and sentenced him to death and Nahar Singh is still absconding. Bhag Singh has preferred an appeal to this Court and the sentence is also before us for confirmation under s. 374, Criminal P. O. The case for the prosecution is that Kehr Singh and Jagir Singh were working the well outside the village on the morning of February 6, 1939, when Bhag Singh, appellant, and Nahar Singh, absconder, came there armed with spears and told Kehr Singh and Jagir Singh not to work the well any more. Apparently both the accused and the deceased were entitled to work this well but no definite terms had been fixed. Kehr Singh and Jagir Singh replied that they had still a little more land to water and they would leave off working the well soon. While an altercation was going on Narain Singh, Santa Singh, Salaha Singh, Bachan Singh and Mst. Basso, the mother of Jagir Singh, also reached there as did Bishen Singh, father of Jagir Singh and Pakhar Singh, father of Bhag Singh. Pakhar Singh is alleged to have shouted encouragement to Bhag Singh and Nahar Singh whereupon they were attacked by Bhag Singh, appellant, and Nahar Singh, absconder, with spears. Kehr Singh, Jagir Singh and Bishen Singh tried to run towards the village abadi which is close by, but they were intercepted and Nahar Singh gave a spear thrust to Bishen Singh in the stomach and Bhag Singh overtook Kehr Singh who stumbled over the boundary of a field as he was running, and he gave him a spear blow on his back towards the left side. Immediately afterwards Bhag Singh got in front of Jagir Singh and thrust his spear into the right side of Jagir Singh. While Bhag Singh was attacking Jagir Singh, Jagir Singh's mother, Mst. Basso, tried to catch hold of the spear blade and, in doing so, her right hand was injured.

After doing all this damage the culprits ran away and the three injured men were taken to Jagraon, where Dr. Mohammad Ajmal Husain, Asst. Surgeon, examined them at about 11 A. M. The doctor sent a rukqa to the Police Station, Jagraon, to get the statements of the injured men recorded by a Magistrate as their conditions were precarious. The statements of all these three persons were recorded by a Magistrate at the hospital at about 1-20 P. M. and thereafter a formal first information report was recorded on the basis of these statements at 2-15 P. M. Kehr Singh died the same day, that is, on February 6, 1939, at about 4-45 P. M., Jagir Singh died on February 13, at 6-30 P. M. and Bishen Singh died on February 15, at 2-15 P. M. The medical evidence proved beyond all doubt that the cause of death in each case was spear thrusts. Mst. Basso was found to have two incised wounds on the palm of the right hand and an incised wound on the palmar aspect of the right middle finger. The injuries were fresh when they were examined and there is little doubt therefore that they were caused while she had got hold of the spear blade in her hand. The case for the prosecution was supported by the evidence of Bachan Singh, P. W. No. 16, Santa Singh, P. W. No. 17, Salaha Singh, P. W. No. 18, and Mst. Basso, P. W. No. 19, who have all deposed as eye-witnesses of the occurrence. There are also dying declarations by each of the three deceased persons recorded at the earliest possible opportunity and in each of which the appellant Bhag Singh has been clearly implicated as the murderer. Bhag Singh and Nahar Singh had both absconded, but Bhag Singh was captured by Chaudhri Nazir Ahmad on May 24, when he at first gave a false name. Nahar Singh, as already stated, is still absconding.

Bhag Singh, appellant, and his father Pakhar Singh both pleaded not guilty to the charge. Bhag Singh stated to the committing Magistrate that he was working the well at the time of the occurrence and was attacked by the deceased whom he injured in self-defence, and to this statement he adhered besides filing a lengthy written statement. The story as told by Bhag Singh in his written statement is to the effect that he was working the Persian wheel of the well and Thakra Singh, D. W. No. 1 was helping him at the time when Jagir Singh, son of Bishen Singh, came and wanted the use of the well himself and on the refusal of Bhag Singh mutual abuse took place and Jagir Singh went back to the village in a temper. After a short while, Jagir Singh and Kehr Singh armed with a spear and a takwa respectively came from the direction of the village followed by Mst. Basso who was entreating them not to fight. The noise attracted a number of persons who appeared as defence witnesses and these persons tried to stop Jagir Singh and Kehr Singh from fighting. Jagir Singh's spear was taken away from him and handed over to Mst. Basso. In the meantime, Bishen

Singh also came running from the village with a spear in his hand and at this juncture Bhag Singh says he snatched the spear which the defence witnesses had handed over to Mst. Basso from Mst. Basso's hand and stood at bay waiting for Bishen Singh's attack. Bishen Singh as soon as he reached the well shouted to Kehr Singh and Jagir Singh to attack whereupon Kehr Singh attacked Bhag Singh with his takwa and caused an injury on his right hand. Thereafter, the appellant says, that he used the spear which he had snatched from Mst. Basso against Kehr Singh and injured him in self-defence. After he had injured Kehr Singh Jagir Singh attacked him with a spear as also did Bishen Singh. In order to protect himself he injured both Jagir Singh and Bishen Singh. He goes on to say that at this stage he escaped and went to a doctor at Kokri Hospital to get his injured hand treated.

The version put forward by the defence appears to be inherently absurd. It is impossible to believe that one man initially unarmed should be able, when attacked by three heavily armed men in the prime of life, to snatch a spear from a member of the opposite party, even if that person be a woman, and therewith cause mortal injuries to each of his three assailants successively. If the appellant was injured, as he says he was with a takwa, before he himself inflicted any injury the causing of the damage that he did cause becomes all the more difficult to understand. The whole setting of the story seems unnatural. It is unlikely that defence witnesses who had disarmed Jagir Singh should hand over Jagir Singh's spear to Mst. Basso, and not keep it themselves. It is still more unnatural that the witnesses who professed to be there in order to prevent a fight should not have tried to protect Bhag Singh till after Bhag Singh had killed each one of his three assailants. It appears further unlikely that if Bhag Singh's story was true he would run away and so create suspicion against himself. Dr. Naranjan Singh says that he examined the appellant on February 7, at his dispensary at Kokri Kalan in the Ferozapore District. At that time he had a superficial incised wound on his right hand and three stitches had to be applied to it. A superficial wound can be caused at any time in order to bolster up a defence to a serious charge like murder and this injury appears to be either self-inflicted or self-suffered. That this injury was not caused in the manner alleged by Bhag Singh, appellant, appears to be clear from the fact that if a heavy blow was given by an able-bodied assailant with a hatchet it would cause something more serious than a superficial wound on the hand and secondly it is not without significance that the appellant thought of getting himself examined the next day at a village dispensary in a district different to his own. It appears far more likely that the elaborate written statement put in by the appellant was prepared by a legal mind and sought to find some explanation, however, crazy, of all the injuries found on the party of the complainants and legal colour was added to the story by manufacturing a superficial injury on the hand of the appellant and getting it examined by a doctor in a surreptitious manner in a different district. Learned Counsel who has appeared before us has argued that if a man had made up his mind to abscond he would not think of manufacturing such false evidence. It appears to us however that there is nothing strange or unlikely about an accused person in the position of Bhag Singh in manufacturing evidence and then absconding with the object of using this manufactured evidence if and when he is arrested and brought to trial. We have no hesitation therefore in rejecting the defence version as wholly concocted and false.

Learned Counsel who appeared before us on behalf of the appellant urged that the case for the prosecution had not been proved with any degree of satisfaction and that if that be so we are not entitled to look at the defence that his client has put forward and victimize him for having told a story which is not convincing. In this connection he urged on the authority of a recent well-known decision in the House of Lords Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecution (1) that the onus of proving the guilt of an accused person invariably and throughout the trial rests on the prosecution and it is incorrect to say that the onus ever shifts. This proposition is true only to a limited extent. Under s. 105, Evi. Act, when a person is accused of any offence and he pleads the existence of circumstances which show that the act committed by him comes within any of the general exceptions in the I. P. O., the burden of proving such circumstances is on the person accused and the Court must presume the absence of such circumstances.

In other words, under the Indian Law the Statute expressly creates a presumption which an accused person has to rebut if he wishes to get the benefit of any exceptions exonerating him or mitigating his offence. This circumstance alone appears to us to distinguish Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecution (1) where Lord Sankey observed that the general rule that the onus always lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt rests on the prosecution is subject to any statutory exception that may exist. This statutory exception appears to us to exist in this country in s. 105, Evi. Act.

The proposition however is correct if it means that the prosecution cannot claim a verdict of guilty because the accused puts forward a false defence. The guilt must be determined on the strength of the prosecution evidence alone, but where the appellant puts forward a plea that he did commit the offence charged but in circumstances that excused or mitigated, the prosecution in such cases can show that no such circumstances exist and so the claim is averted. In the present case the right of private defence of person is pleaded and an injury to the hand of the appellant is put forward in support of this plea. It is open to the prosecution to argue that the injury if received by the appellant as alleged by him would have made it impossible for the appellant to inflict further injuries so as to kill three men one after another. Again, the prosecution can show that if an attack had been made on him, as suggested by him, the injuries to him would have been far more serious than a flesh wound on the hand. With the rejection of the defence version however the duty of the prosecution does not end and they have still to show that the appellant caused death in circumstances which makes the offence murder and in this sense the onus never shifts from the prosecution.

In the case before us, the story for the prosecution is supported by the three dying declarations which were recorded on the day of the occurrence by a Magistrate and is further supported by a number of eye-witnesses of whom the presence of Mst. Basso is corroborated by injuries on her hand and her presence is indeed not denied by the defence. It is objected regarding these dying declarations that their language is almost identical but this is easily explained by the fact that these statements are very short and were recorded by the same person at about the same time. In all three the same story is told and Bhag Singh, appellant, is clearly implicated in all as a murderer. Beyond the fact that Dharam Singh and Bachan Singh were present when the dying declarations were recorded, there is nothing to show that these statements were prompted or made at the instigation or under the influence of a relative.

If the dying declarations are believed, they themselves afford a sufficient basis for the conviction, but the case is supported by other evidence. Mst. Dasso, as stated already, was admittedly present and was therefore an eye-witness. In this view of the matter, the objection raised by learned Counsel that Mst. Basso is wrong when she says that she was taking tea for Jagir Singh and Kehr Singh loses all significance. Whether she was taking tea or was attracted by the cries of Jagir Singh and Kehr Singh becomes in our opinion immaterial. It is true that her statement like that of some of the other witnesses for the prosecution who have appeared as eye witnesses is open to the objection that there are minor discrepancies between the statements in Court and those made before the Police particularly regarding the circumstances in which Pakhar Singh came to the spot and what he said to Bhag Singh by way of encouragement before or during the assault. Pakhar Singh however has been acquitted on the strength of these somewhat minor variations, but there appears nothing on the record to shake the general truth of the story for the prosecution that because of some quarrel over the turn of water, no matter by whom started, the appellant with others came armed with spears and killed three persons. The statement of Bechan Singh is objected to on the ground that this man was implicated in a dacoity and had appointed Bishan Singh deceased as his mukhtar for about two months. This is apparently the only interest that the witness had in the deceased and it does not appear to us to be likely that Bachan Singh would for this reason lend himself as a false eye-witness to a murder. The other eye-witnesses are Santa Singh and Salaha Singh. Santa Singh had been implicated in cases of illicit possession of opium and liquor and sentenced and he has otherwise mortgaged the whole of his land and for that reason it is urged that he was unreliable. As the witness's antecedents are more than doubtful, we consider that his statement can be left out of account. The state ment of Salaha Singh too is open to objection on various minor grounds. We consider that if these two statements are left out of account there is ample evidence which will support the prosecution. In our opinion on the strength of this evidence a clear case of murder has been made out.

We have already said that the counter-version of the defence which is supported by two or three defence witnesses is unbelievable. Karnail Singh (D. W. No. 5) says that Jagir Singh was armed with a spear and Kehr Singh with a takwa and later Bishan Singh also came armed with another spear, and all three attacked Bhag Singh whereupon Bhag Singh gave a spear blow to Kehr Singh in self-defence and as Bishan Singh, Kehr Singh and Jagir Singh advanced towards him, he killed them one after the other. This witness's father was implicated in a murder case but acquitted. It was suggested by the prosecution that Partapa, brother of Pakhar Singh accused and uncle of Bhag Singh appellant, appeared as a defence witness in that case and the witness deny that this was so. In these circumstances, it is not unlikely that he is paying off a debt in kind. The next witness Mit Singh (D. W. No. 6), tells a similar story and his motive for giving evidence for the defence too is clear, for Ran Singh, father of the absconder in this case, appeared as a witness for the prosecution in a case brought by him under s. 324, I. P. C., against one Sarwan Singh. This witness was in the village when the Head Constable arrived on the scene but he did not appear before him. The next witness for the defence in support of the counter-version is Sham Singh (D. W. No. 7) and he too did not appear before the Police during the course of the investigation. The other evidence to the similar effect was not even touched upon by learned Counsel in his arguments. The witnesses for the defence appear to us to be unbelievable in the story they tell and therefore the question of their bias or motive becomes a matter of secondary importance.

In the view that we have taken of the matter, the prosecution appears to us to have clearly established the case of murder against the appellant and the defence to have totally failed to substantiate the plea of the right of private defence put forward. In these circumstances, we are satisfied that Bhag Singh, appellant, has been rightly convicted of the offence of murder. For such an offence there can be no penalty other than death and for these reasons we reject his appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

BHOPAL HIGH COURT

Original Civil Jurisdiction Suit No. 2 of 1939

July 18, 1939

MOHAMMAD AHMAD KHAN, O. J.

Diwan Bahadur KESRI SINGH—

PLAINTIFF—

Sethani HARKANWAR BAI AND Seth
GOPALDAS—DEFENDANTS

Jurisdiction—Foreign Court—Submission to its jurisdiction—Effect—Ex parte decree—Steps taken to set it aside and suit defended—Whether submission to jurisdiction—Decree passed on merits—Binding effect—Test to determine whether decree is passed on merits—Putting appearance to search papers after ex parte decree or executing general power-of-attorney to defend suits in foreign Court does not amount to submission to jurisdiction—Decree passed ex parte by British Indian Court against resident of State not submitting to its jurisdiction—Validity—If can be enforced in State—Foreign country, what is—Indian States, whether foreign countries in relation to British India—Hindu Law—Adoption—Effect on family partnership.

Where in a suit filed in British Indian Court against the defendant, a resident and subject of an Indian State an ex parte decree is passed and the defendant gets the ex parte decree set aside and files written statement, and defends the suit through properly constituted attorney, these acts amount to voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. The case no longer remains ex parte against him and a decree subsequently passed on merits is fully binding on him. Harris v. Taylor (1) and 89 Ind. Cas. 129 (2), relied on. [p. 21, col. 2.]

The true test for determining whether a judgment has or has not been passed on merits is to see whether it has been pronounced as a penalty for any conduct of the defendant, or whether it is based on a consideration of the truth or otherwise of the plaintiff's case. [p. 22, col. 2.]

It is a well-settled rule of international law that Courts cannot by their judgments bind absent foreigners who have not submitted to their jurisdiction, and can only exercise jurisdiction over persons who are within the territorial limits of their jurisdiction, and, therefore, a judgment of a foreign Court obtained against an absent defendant cannot be enforced where the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit was neither a subject of, nor resident in the country in which the judgment was obtained. [p. 23, col. 2.]

A decree against an absent foreigner is valid only so far as the same is made operative by local Legislature within the country of the forum pronouncing the same. Beyond the limits of that country the decree would remain a nullity in spite of the authority given to it by the local Legislature. [p. 25, col. 2.]

An Indian State whose Legislature is not subject to the Legislature of British India is a distinct and separate political entity. Such a State is, therefore, a foreign country in relation to British India within the meanings and for the purpose of the Civil P. O. Section 20 of Civil P. O., (of British India) may give jurisdiction to British Indian Courts to pass a decree against residents of such a foreign State but it has no effect against State subjects within the territorial limits of that State and should be considered an absolute nullity. Hence a decree passed by a British Indian Court against the subject of Bhopal State who at the time of commencement of the suit did not reside or carry on business within the jurisdiction of such Court either personally or through a properly constituted agent and who did not submit to the jurisdiction of such Court is a nullity, and is not enforceable against the defendant in the forum of Bhopal State, wherever the cause of action might have arisen, Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), approved, Annamalai Chetty v. Murugasa Chetty (6), explained and distinguished, 153 Ind. Cas. 824 (11), dissented from. [p. 26, col. 2; p. 27, col. 1.]

Putting in an appearance to take search of papers after an ex parte decree was pronounced, by a foreign Court does not amount to an act of submission to jurisdiction. So also mere execution of a general power-of-attorney in favour of certain person for defending suits in foreign Courts does not amount to submission to jurisdiction of foreign Courts. 82 Ind. Cas. 425 (12), distinguished. [p. 27, col. 2.]

Ordinarily in Hindu Law the rights of an adopted son arise at his adoption. Even in the case of an adoption by a widow, though the adoption by her is for her husband still the adoptee's rights do not relate back to the death of the husband. But in the case of a trading partnership the adopted son takes the place of the deceased as from the date of his death, thus preventing its automatic dissolution. Under the ordinary law a firm of partnership dissolves upon the death of a partner and his heir does not ipso facto become its member since the continuance of a partnership depends upon the mutual consent and confidence of the partners. These incidents have, however, no application to an ancient family trade in which partnership continues unaffected by the deaths of old members and the births of new ones. As such, a partnership of which the father was a member would continue in spite of his death, the son taking the father's place whether then living or posthumous. As such if a person was afterwards adopted his adoption relates back to the death of the father, so that the partnership is deemed to continue with him added as a partner from the date of the father's demise. [p. 22, col. 2; p. 23, col. 1.]

Mr. Mohammad Yaqub Khan, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Mohammad Nasiruddin and Syed Mohammad, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—This is a suit filed by one D. B. Kesri Singh, a resident of Bombay, against Sethani Harconver Bai and Seth Gopal Das, both residents of Ichhawar in Bhopal State, for the recovery of Rs. 1,21,606-3 on the basis of a judgment of the High Court of Bombay. The plaintiff's case as disclosed in the plaint is that Seth Naraindas Sunderlal and his minor son Jaikishan Das Naraindas carried on business as Shroffs and commission agents in Bombay under the name and style of Messrs. Saligram Narayandas and the defendants carry on business at Bhopal and other places in the Bhopal State in the firm names of Ramkishan Pirthiraj, Ramkishan Akheyraj and Ramkishan Dhanraj. That the said firm of Saligram Narayandas acted as the commission agents of the defendants firm of Ramkishan Pirthiraj in Bombay since 1924. That on June 12, 1928 the account was finally made up and adjusted and a sum of Rs. 81,900 was ascertained as due and payable by the defendants to the said firm of Saligram Narayandas, for which an acknowledgment was also passed by Bal-kishondas a partner in the firm of Ramkishan Pirthiraj acting on behalf of the defendants. That on the defendants failing to pay, the said firm of Saligram Narayandas filed a suit being suit No. 2552 of 1929, on December 17, 1929 in the High Court of Bombay. That both the present defendants though duly served did neither obtain leave to defend the suit nor made appearance in any manner and an ex parte decree was passed against them on March 11, 1930. That subsequently by an assignment dated May 23, 1933 the said firm of Saligram Narayandas assigned the said decree to D. B. Kesri Singh the present plaintiff, for a sum of Rs. 25,000. After purchasing the decree the present plaintiff applied for the issue of usual notice under r. 16 of O. XXI, Civil P. O. which was made absolute on July 7, 1933. That on June 12, 1933 the first defendant moved the Court to set aside the ex parte decree stating that the writ of summons was not served on her. Thereupon the decree was set aside and the first defendant put in her written statement contesting the suit on various grounds. That the suit proceeded and ultimately ended in a decree for Rs. 1,06,830 with future interest at the rate of 6% per annum, on July 9, 1934. The defendants not having satisfied the decree the present suit was filed in this Court on the basis of foreign judgments of the Bombay High Court passed against defendant No. 1 on merits on July 9, 1934 and against defendant No. 2 ex parte on March 11, 1930.

Both the defendants have filed separate written statements in this Court but their case is substantially the same. The first defendant pleaded inter alia that the property left by her husband was taken under the management of the Court of Wards in 1917 and remained under its superintendence till 1931, that she as a ward was under disability to transact any business and did not in fact transact any business at all with the said firm of Saligram Narayandas. She also pleaded that the Court of Wards was not a party in the suit filed in the High Court of Bombay and the decree of that Court was not binding on her. She further pleaded that she had adopted one Hiralal with the permission of the Court of Wards and on his death Hiralal's widow adopted Gopal Das defendant No. 2, who is now the sole proprietor of the estate of late Seth Hemraj including the firm of Ramkishon Pirthiraj. There was also a plea to the effect that the decree against her was not passed on merits and the suit resulting in the said decree was the result of collusion between Balkishondas and Saligram Narayandas who were related as son-in-law and father-in-law.

Defendant No. 2 raised almost all the pleas taken by defendant No. 1 and pleaded further that the decree dated March 11, 1930 was not binding on him because he was a resident and subject of the Bhopal State and did not submit to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay.

The following issues were framed in the presence of the learned Counsels for the parties.

1. Whether defendant Nos. 1 and 2 were incompetent as wards to enter into contracts in British India at the time of the institution of the suit in Bombay by Saligram Narayandas; and was their position that of a ward for these contracts?

2. Whether the Court of Wards of Bhopal was a necessary party in the suit filed by Saligram Narayandas?

3. Whether ss. 34 and 52 of the Bhopal Court of Wards Act barred the suit filed by Saligram Narayandas?

4. Whether the firm of Ramkishon Pirthiraj was under the management of the Court of Wards at the time of the institution of suit by Saligram Narayandas?

5. Whether the judgment of the High Court of Bombay dated July 9, 1934 was not passed on merits and is as such not binding on defendant No. 1?

6. Did the defendant No. 2 submit to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay or not, and is the decree dated March 11, 1930 not binding on him?

7. Are the defendants liable to pay the amount claimed. If so, to what extent?

8. Whether on an account being taken on June 12, 1929 a sum of Rs. 81,000 was found due from the defendants to the firm of Saligram Narayandas for which an acknowledgment was also passed by Balkishondas on behalf of the defendants? If so, what is its effect?

9. To what relief the plaintiff is entitled?

Findings :—Issues Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4. These four issues can conveniently be grouped and disposed of together. No document has been filed by the defendants to prove that the estate of late Seth Hemraj was taken under the management of Court of Wards and was under such management when the suit was filed in Bombay, and that they were declared wards. The defendants might have easily proved this fact by producing the Govt. Gazette of Bhopal but they did not make any such attempt. No oral evidence even has been adduced on this point, so much so that the defendant No. 2 who has come to the witness-box did not make any mention of this fact in his statement. Issue No. 1 is therefore decided against the defendants. Issues Nos. 2, 3 and 4 automatically go against the defendants after the decision of first issue, because when the fact of the estate being under the management of the Court of Wards is not proved no question of the Court of Wards being made a party or the suit being barred by ss. 34 and 52 of the Court of Wards Act does arise. The Issues Nos. 1 to 4 are therefore decided against the defendants.

Issue No. 5. This plea of defendant No. 1 appears to be untenable. She admittedly submitted to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay. She got the ex parte decree of March 11, 1930 set aside and filed her written statement and defended the suit through her properly constituted attorney. The learned Counsel for the defendant has argued that submission to jurisdiction after the passing of an ex parte decree was no submission at all. I see no force in this argument. When a defendant after getting an ex parte decree against him set aside files a written statement and contests the suit, the case no longer remained ex parte against him and a decree subsequently passed on merits is fully binding on him. Defendant No. 1 was not originally subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay, and she chose to appear voluntarily to defend the suit which amounts to a submission to that Court's jurisdiction. In Harris v. Taylor (1) followed in Janki Sethani v. Laxminarayan (2) which will be subsequently referred to, Buckley, L. J. observed:

"...The doctrine applicable to these cases is that if the defendant has placed himself in such a position that it has become his duty to obey the judgment of the foreign Court then the judgment is enforceable against him in this country..."

In Janki Sethani v. Laxminarayan (2), Kotwal, A. J. O. observed:

"It is difficult to see how the appearance for the purpose of obtaining an adjournment or for applying to set aside the ex parte decree, can have been anything but voluntary and did not amount to a submission to the jurisdiction of the Court."

In that case a suit was filed at Hoshangabad in C. P. on the basis of a judgment of a Civil Court in Bhopal. The defendant not being a resident of Bhopal State had made an application to the State Court for an adjournment of the suit which was disallowed. She had also applied to get the ex parte decree set aside. Her application having been disallowed she went in appeal which was also dismissed. The question before the Court was whether the acts referred to above amounted to submission to the jurisdiction of Bhopal State Court or not, and it was held that appearance for the purpose of obtaining an adjournment or for applying to set aside an ex parte decree in a foreign Court was a voluntary act and amounted to a submission to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. It was not therefore open to defendant to raise the plea of jurisdiction after having defended the suit on merits. Now the question whether the judgment dated July 9, 1934 was or was not passed on merits remains to be considered. The contention of the learned Counsel for defendant No. 1 is that it was given by way of punishment to the defendant for his default in not attending the Court on the date of hearing. What happened is this: Defendant No. 1 got the ex parte decree set aside and filed her written statement. The suit was partly heard on different dates and ultimately came up for hearing on July 9, 1934. On that date Counsel for defendant No. 1 applied for adjournment stating that Hariram defendant's constituted attorney had suddenly left Bombay on account of ill-health. The plaintiff opposed the application stating that there was no proof of illness, and that Hariram had got the ex parte decree set aside on the false allegation that defendant No. 1 did not know of the suit at all. The documents in the Prothonotary's office revealed that she was aware of it. It was owing to these facts that Hariram had disappeared. The adjournment application was disallowed, and the Counsel for the defendant No. 1 thereafter withdrew. The Counsel for the plaintiff then examined Balkishondas Sri-kishondas on behalf of the plaintiff. All these facts are borne out by the notes of evidence taken by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Kania who tried the case, and by the decree, dated July 9, 1934. The true test for determining whether a judgment has or has not been passed on merits is to see whether it has been pronounced as a penalty for any conduct of the defendant, or whether it is based on a consideration of the truth or otherwise of the plaintiff's case. In the present case there was evidence on the record on which the Court could have proceeded on merits. A perusal of the record shows that the Court did apply its mind to the merits of the case and considered the plaintiff's claim as proved. I therefore decide the issue against defendant No. 1.

Although Issues Nos. 1 to 5 have been decided against defendant No. 1 and a decree as prayed by the plaintiff could be passed against her on the basis of the foreign judgment, there is yet another aspect of the case which deserves consideration. Sethani Harconver Bai defendant No. 1 has pleaded that she adopted one Hiralal and on his death his widow adopted Gopal Das who was now the sole owner of the estate of late Seth Hemraj including the firm of Ramkishan Pirthiraj and that she had no concern with the said firm. This plea is supported by the evidence of Seth Gopal Das who has deposed all these facts in his statement. This piece of evidence stands un rebutted. The frame of the plaintiff's suit also shows that the fact of adoption was admitted by him. In his plaint he has described Gopal Das as adopted son of Hiralal. Ordinarily in Hindu Law the rights of an adopted son arise at his adoption. Even in the case of an adoption by a widow, though the adoption by her is for her husband still the adoptees rights do not relate back to the death of the husband. But in the case of a trading partnership the adopted son takes the place of the deceased as from the date of his death, thus preventing its automatic dissolution. Under the ordinary law a firm of partnership dissolves upon the death of a partner and his heir does not ipso facto become its member since the continuance of a partnership depends upon the mutual consent and confidence of the partners. These incidents have however no application to an ancient family trade in which partnership continues unaffected by the deaths of old members and the births of new ones. As such a partnership of which the father was a member would continue in spite of his death, the son taking the father's place whether then living or posthumous. As such if a person was afterwards adopted his adoption relates back to the death of the father, so that the partnership is deemed to continue with him added as a partner from the date of the father's demise. The present is undoubtedly a case of ancient family trade in which the adoption of Hiralal will relate back to the death of Hemraj although he was adopted many years after the death of Hemraj, and he will be deemed to have become a partner in the firm of Ramkishon Pirthiraj from the death of Hemraj. In the same way Gopal Das will be deemed to have become a partner of Ramkishon Pirthiraj from the time of the death of Hiralal. The result is that the widows of Hemraj and Hiralal cannot be deemed to have become partners in the firm of Ramkishon Pirthiraj at any time material to the suit. It is rather surprising to note that the plaintiff while suing the firm of Ramkishon Pirthiraj has chosen to make the widows also parties to this suit. The plaintiff by an application dated July 15, 1936 withdrew his case against Baldeodas and Kasturibai for reasons best known to him. For these reasons I hold that Sethani Harconver Bai defendant No. 1 has unnecessarily been impleaded as defendant in the suit. She has no concern with the firm of Ramkishon Pirthiraj and as such the suit is liable to be dismissed against her.

Issue No. 7. The chief contention of defendant No. 2 is that he resided and carried on business in Bhopal State and did not submit to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay. He did not contest the suit in Bombay, nor did any act by which he could be deemed to have submitted to the jurisdiction of that Court. A certified copy of a general power of attorney dated July 1, 1921 executed by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of one Chhthmal has also been filed and proved by summoning the original record from the Registration Office at Sehore, and by leading evidence of Mr. Bihari Charan the then Sub-Registrar of Sehore. With reference to this document the learned Counsel for the plaintiff argued that this act of defendant No. 2 amounted to submission to jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay and the decree dated March 11, 1930 was binding on him. It is a well-settled rule of international law that Courts cannot by their judgments bind absent foreigners who have not submitted to their jurisdiction, and can only exercise jurisdiction over persons who are within the territorial limits of their jurisdiction, and therefore a judgment of a foreign Court obtained against an absent defendant cannot be enforced where the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit was neither a subject of, nor resident in the country in which the judgment was obtained. That being so, one of the questions that arises for determination in a suit based on a foreign judgment is: Was the defendant at the time of the commencement of the suit in the foreign Court, residing within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of the State in which the suit was brought? This Court following the Privy Council ruling of Gurdayal Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3) has consistently held that Courts of British India or of any other native State had no jurisdiction over a person who was the subject of the Bhopal State and who neither resided nor carried on any business there. This view has clearly been expressed in the case of Gendalal v. Bachraj (4). There appears to have been a conflict of opinion, among the different High Courts of British India on this point. All the High Courts are agreed so far as the above mentioned principle of international law was concerned; but a nice distinction has been drawn in certain cases holding that the Courts of British India were possessed of jurisdiction to pass a decree even against a non-resident foreigner if the cause of action arose within the territorial limits of their jurisdiction. In Tadepalli Subba Rao v. Nawab Syed Mir Ghulam Ali Khan (5), a Bench of the Madras High Court held that a defendant who executed a pro-note in a native State promising to pay the amount thereof at any place in British India, the Courts of that place had jurisdiction to entertain the suit because of the cause of action arising within their territory even though the defendant might not be living or carrying on business there. This ruling really follows a Privy Council case reported in Annamalai Chetty v. Murugasa Chetty (6), and the pertinent remarks made by Sir S. Subrahmanya Ayyer the learned Officiating Chief Justice in endorsing this view run as under:¶

"The statement of the law by the Earl of Selbourne in that case (Faridkot case) that the accrual of cause of action in a particular place did not confer on the Courts of that place jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner has not been referred to by Lord Lindley, but that does not relieve us from the necessity of being ruled by the latest pronouncement of the Judicial Committee on the point. Whether what weighed with their Lordships in the last mentioned case in upholding the decision of the Bombay Court in Girdhar Damodar v. Kassigar Hiragir (7), was the dependent character of the foreign territory or the argument of convenience with reference to commercial relations between the residents of the paramount and the protected states argued by Bittleston, J. in Bavah Meah Sahib v. Khaje Meah Sahib (8), by Sargent, C. J. in Girdhar Damodar v. Kassigar Hiragir (7) by Farren, C. J. in Ram Rao Ji Jambhekar v. Pralhaddas Subkaran (9) and by Candy, J. in Rambhat v. Shankar Banswant (10), is a matter which is not for us to enter. Assuming that the rule laid down in Annamalai Chetty v. Murugasa Chetty (6), at p. 542*, was not intended to extend to subjects of a foreign independent state but was confined to subjects of protected Indian territories, the present is such a case....."

It is clear from the above remarks that the learned Bench did not consider it necessary to go deep into the question simply because the new ruling of the Judicial Committee was before them. It was binding on the Bench as being the latest pronouncement by the Privy Council although it happened to be against a previous decision of the same Court. The facts of the case as reported in Annamalai Chetty v. Murugasa Chetty (6) appear to be these. A suit was brought in British India to recover a sum of money on a decree of a French Court at Pondichery. The only issues really contested in the suit were (i) whether the British Indian Court was prevented from entertaining the suit by reason of the cause of action not having arisen within its territory, and the defendant not being a resident or carrying on business within its jurisdiction, and (ii)

whether or not the defendant resided or carried on business within the jurisdiction of the British Indian Court on the date when the cause of action arose. Evidence was adduced to show that Kandasami was manager of business in which defendant-respondent had a share and which was carried on by Kandasami within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit was brought. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in this connection remarked,

"In both Courts in British India it was apparently assumed that the question of jurisdiction turned on s. 17 of the Civil P. O., and that although the defendant was a foreigner, and although the cause of action arose in foreign territory, and although the defendant did not personally reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Court in British India, and was not even temporarily in Arcot when sued there yet he could be sued in the Arcot Court if he carried on business through an agent in the local limits of that Court's jurisdiction."

Further at p. 552* their Lordships remarked,

"Their Lordships see no reason for doubting the correctness of the decision of the case of Girdhar Damodar v. Kassigar Hiragir (7) where the defendant was a native of Dutch and the cause of action arose within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the British Indian Court in which the action was brought. But that case does not cover the present case."

This ruling makes no reference to the Faridkot case. What actually was decided in the case is that the agency of Kandasami was not proved. His position is that of a manager of a joint family business of which the defendant was a partner and as such he could not be considered as a regular agent of the joint family. His residence did not affect the members of the family. The point whether a non-resident foreigner was deemed to submit to the jurisdiction of Court by carrying on business through an agent within the limits of that Court was left undecided. It appears that the point neither arose for the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council nor did they propose to lay down any rule regarding the circumstances under which British Indian Courts acquired jurisdiction against non-resident foreigners. They wanted to clarify the points of the case before them in which even the cause of action had not arisen in British India. Reference to Girdhar Damodar v. Kassigar Hiragir (7), did not mean that their Lordships had accepted every point decided therein. At best such a reference could be called an obiter dictum, and cannot be given force of a ruling, particularly because there was no direct discussion on the point and the previous ruling thereon in Raja of Faridkot's case (3), was not even mentioned.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs has further relied on a more recent ruling of the Allahabad High Court. The opinion expressed by the learned Bench of that Court in Gaekwar Baroda State Railway v. Sheikh Habeebullah (11), deserves a rather detailed survey. The learned Judges while dealing with the principles of international law have held that the British Indian Courts had jurisdiction even against a foreigner who had never resided in British India if the cause of action against him arose within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such Courts. This principle has elaborately been dealt with particular reference to the residents of Indian States. According to the view of the learned Judges s. 20 of the Civil P. C., gave full jurisdiction to the Courts in British India to entertain suits against non-resident foreigners if the cause of action against them arose within the territorial jurisdiction of such Courts. Rachpal, J. at p. 755* remarked :

"If it had been the intention of the Legislature that this part of s. 20 would not be applicable to non-resident foreigners even though the cause of action arises wholly or in part in British India, such intention would have been made clear."

Reference has also been made to Ram Raoji Jambhekar v. Pralhaddas Subkaran (9), wherein the contention raised was very much similar to one involved in the present suit. Farren, C. J., in his learned judgment made the following observation which threw a flood of light on the point under discussion.

"It has however been argued on the authority of Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3) that admitting that a part of the cause of action did arise in Bombay, still the Court had no jurisdiction over the defendant who was a subject of Baroda State and a foreigner inasmuch as before the suit was filed he had ceased to carry on business in Bombay and to be amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court. The answer to this question is to be found in a passage of the Privy Council judgment itself. In a personal action..... a decree pronounced in absentem by a foreign Court to the jurisdiction of which the defendant has not in any way submitted is by international law an absolute nullity. He is under no obligation of any kind to obey it and it must be regarded as a mere nullity by the Court of every nation except (when authorised by special local Legislature) in the country of the forum by which it was pronounced."

In Rambhat v. Shankar Banswant (10), the High Court of Bombay has held that according to the Civil P. C., the British Indian Courts were empowered to pass a decree against a non-resident foreigner provided the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Court pronouncing the judgment. It may be noted that the learned pronouncement of the highest judicial authority in India accepts the validity of a decree against an absent foreigner only so far as the same was made operative by local Legislature within the country of the forum pronouncing the same. Beyond the limits of that country the decree would remain a nullity in spite of the authority given to it by the local Legislature. As regards the effectiveness of such a judgment in a foreign country the learned Court held that the point did not arise in that case. It is perfectly correct to say that according to the provisions of s. 20 of the Civil P. C., the British Indian Courts had jurisdiction to entertain and decide a suit against an absent foreigner and whatever may be the value of such a judgment in the Courts of other countries, it could not be called ineffective in the country of the forum which passed it. But the question still remains as to the value of such a judgment in the countries or states where the provisions of the British Indian Civil P. C., were not in force. In Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), the learned Privy Council has elaborately discussed the principles of international law and ruled that all the leading authorities were unanimous on the point that all jurisdiction was properly territorial, and in whatever country the cause of action might arise, the Court having jurisdiction to pass a decree against the defendant was the Court within the territorial limits of which the defendant resided at the time of action. This rule is subject to only one exception as mentioned above. Local Legislature might protect the decree within the country, but in a foreign country that protection becomes useless owing to the universally accepted principles of international law. Therefore such a decree must be treated as a nullity by the Courts of all countries other than that of the Court which passed it. This discussion leads us to another point of considerable importance. We have to find whether British India and the Indian States are foreign countries with relation to each other for the purposes of the Civil P. C., applicable to either of them. The mere fact that both places are governed by their own independent laws is enough to show that they are countries foreign to each other so far as legislative authority was concerned. In the above mentioned Allahabad cases of 1934, a different view has however been expressed. Relying on the following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Faridkot case.

"That no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction which any foreign Court ought to recognize against foreigners who owe no allegiance or obedience to the power which so legislates."

Niamatullah, J. learnedly argued that since the residents of Indian States owed allegiance and obedience to the power which could legislate for British India they could not be termed as foreigners in relation to British India. This argument is based on the hypothesis that the power to legislate possessed by the Indian Legislature was derived from Act of Parliament to which undoubtedly every Indian State and its subjects owed allegiance and obedience. The provisions of the Indian Councils Act of 1861 have been referred to whereby the Governor-General-in-Council has been given powers to make laws and regulations. But there is no provision in that Act or in the Amendment Act of 1869 by which the Governor-General-in-Council has been empowered to make laws for the subjects of the Indian States. Such power extend only to the making of laws and regulations for the subjects of British India or for such subject of His Majesty within the Dominions of Princes and States in India in alliance with His Majesty whether in the service of the Govt. of India or otherwise. These powers, really speaking, do not confer any authority to make laws for the subjects of Indian States. Therefore with due respect to the learned Judge, it is observed that the conclusions arrived at by His Lordship do not necessarily follow. In the course of the judgment the learned Judge has been pleased to remark:—

"The power thus conferred upon the Governor-General is very wide and comprehensive, and it cannot be doubted that any law passed by the legislative authority in British India which has received the assent of the Governor-General must be recognized as binding on those residing in Indian States so far as such law affects them."

This proposition holds good only to the extent mentioned therein, viz., regarding British Indian subjects residing in Indian States whether as servant of the Govt. of India or otherwise. It does not follow that the subjects of Indian States were also bound by such Laws and Regulations. Therefore the argument loses its force. It is as clear as day light that neither the Govt. of India nor the British Parliament has authority to make laws for the subjects of the Indian States. The relation subsisting between British India and the States are purely the outcome of political pacts and agreements. It will be perfectly in accordance with the rules of international law to hold that an Indian State whose Legislature was not subject to the Legislature of British India was a distinct and separate political entity. Such a State was, therefore, a foreign country in relation to British India within the meanings and for the purpose of the Civil P. C. Section 20 of Civil P. C. of British India may give jurisdiction to British Indian Courts to pass a decree against residents of such a foreign State but it has no effect against State subjects within the territorial limits of that State and according to Lord Selbourne should be considered an absolute nullity. Moreover, British India and Indian States stand on an entirely different footing with regard to their relations with England. The question of jurisdiction with regard to British India and Indian States is not identical with that relating to England and British India for the simple reason that the governing body of British India derived all its authority and power from the Act of the British Parliament. England and British India being thus under the sovereignty of one power, the subjects of England could not properly be called foreigners in relation to British India. There could be no difficulty in accepting the views of the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court expressed in the case referred to above, if the position of Indian States in relation to England would have been the same as that of British India, that is to say, if the British Parliament were the source of legislative authority in these States as well. On the other hand the Indian States with reference to their inherent rights and privileges are, as shown above, separate political entities. Their sovereignty so far as Legislature is concerned resides in their Rulers or such bodies as are constituted or appointed by Rulers. On giving full consideration to all the authorities cited above and referred to on this subject it is decided that there is no valid reason to dissent from the Privy Council ruling in Gurdayal Singh v. Raja of Faridkote (3). I, therefore, hold that a decree passed by a British Indian Court against the subject of this State who at the time of commencement of the suit did not reside or carry on business within the jurisdiction of such Court either personally or through a properly constituted agent and who did not submit to the jurisdiction of such Court is a nullity, and is not enforceable against the defendant in the forum.

of this State, wherever the cause of action might have arisen.

The copies of the Precipe and Appearance filed by the plaintiff do not help him at all. Putting in an appearance to take search of papers after an ex parte decree was pronounced, did not amount to an act of submission to jurisdiction. On the authority of Janoothassan v. Mahamad Ohuttu (12), it is contended that Gopal Das should be deemed to have submitted to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay because he executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of one Chothmal for defending suits in foreign Courts. That case is distinguishable from the present case. In that case the attorney resided and carried on business within the jurisdiction of the Columbo Court where the action was commenced. In the present case the attorney did neither reside nor carry on any business in Bombay where the suit was filed by the original plaintiff, the firm of Saligram Narayandas. I, therefore, hold that by merely executing a general power-of-attorney in favour of Chothmal defendant No. 2 did not mean and intend to submit to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Bombay or any particular Court in British India; and that act did not amount to a submission to jurisdiction. No mention was made of the present suit filed by Saligram Narayandas in the said power-of-attorney nor any powers were given to the attorney with special reference to any particular suit. Therefore, the issue is decided against the plaintiff.

Issue No. 8. The plea of acknowledgment taken by the plaintiff is simply redundant. He has not based his claim on the original cause of action and has come to Court only on the strength of foreign judgment. The acknowledgment is proved by the evidence of Prabha Shankar, the head munib of the plaintiff, but it does not help the plaintiff in any way. It is dated June 12, 1929. The present suit was filed in this Court on March 3, 1933, that is, more than three years after the execution of the acknowledgment. It is, therefore, clear that the plaintiff's claim was time-barred if he had based it on the acknowledgment. This issue is decided accordingly.

The result of the above findings is that the plaintiff's suit against both the defendants entirely fails and is liable to be dismissed. It is, therefore, ordered that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs to the contesting defendants.

BAI MOTI—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective effect—Guiding principles—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53-A — Applicability to transactions which took place before April 1, 1930, where suit is brought after April 1, 1930—Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 49 as amended in 1929 — Amendment, effect of in considering whether s. 53-A, Transfer of Property Act is retrospective.

No doubt the general principle is that Acts of the Legislature are not given retrospective effect unless the language makes it clear that such was the intention, but in applying that principle one must have regard to the general character of the Act in question, and when construing an Act introduced for the purpose of applying an equitable doctrine to certain transactions considered ex hypothesi to be lacking in equity one should not assume that the Legislature intended that the Act should not have retrospective effect, but wishes to preserve rights acquired in such transactions.

Section 53-A, T. P. Act, applies to transactions which took place before April 1, 1930, where the suit was filed after that date. 139 Ind. Cas. 870 (5), dissenting from.

The amendment of s. 49, Reg. Act, was only passed ex abundante cautela and was not necessary, and the fact that that amendment was not made retrospective cannot, have any great weight in considering whether s. 53-A, T. P. Act, is made retrospective.

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Thana, in Appeal No. 26 of 1937.

Messrs. R. W. Desai and R. R. Desai, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. T. Desai and R. M. Gandhi for the Respondent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is a second appeal from the Assistant Judge of Thana. It raises a point of law which has given rise to a certain amount of difference of opinion amongst the High Courts in India, the question being whether s. 53-A, T. P. Act, which came into operation on April 1, 1930, applies to transactions which took place before that date. In the present case the plaintiff transferred to the defendant certain immovable property in February and March 1926, and the purchaser was let into possession; but the documents of transfer were not registered. This suit was filed on June 20, 1935, and by it the plaintiff, i. e. the vendor, seeks to recover possession of the property, her case being that the defendant cannot rely on the transfers to himself because they are not registered and cannot be given in evidence by reason of s. 49, Reg. Act. The answer of the defendant is that he is entitled to give his transfers in evidence under s. 53-A, T. P. Act. The learned trial Judge held that the defendant was entitled to rely on s. 53-A, T. P. Act, but in appeal the learned Assistant Judge held that s. 53-A could not operate upon a transaction which took place before that section was introduced by the Legislature. It is conceded on this appeal that the transfers in question are such as to fall within the operation of s. 53-A, and the only question is whether the section has any retrospective effect.

There have been a lot of cases in India on the question and, I think, the preponderating view of most of the High Courts, including this High Court is that s. 53-A does apply to a transaction which took place before April 1, 1930, provided that the suit in which the question arises was commenced after April 1, 1930. But curiously enough none of the cases in which that view has been accepted deal with one argument which Mr. S. T. Desai has urged for the respondent, which is, I am disposed to think, the strongest argument in his favour, and therefore I will deal with the question more fully than otherwise I might have thought it necessary to do. Section 53-A, T. P. Act, came to be enacted in these circumstances:—There were cases in India in which the doctrine of part performance, which is a doctrine invented by Courts of Equity in England in order to mitigate hardships resulting from the application of the statute of frauds, which requires certain contracts to be in writing, had been applied in India in order to mitigate what was considered the hardship resulting from a strict application of the Reg. Act. In Ariff v. Jadunath Majumdar (1) the Privy Council held that those cases were wrongly decided, and that there was no justification for introducing the English equitable doctrine of part performance into India for the purpose of defeating the plain terms of an Indian statute. In that state of affairs, the Legislature passed as from April 1, 1930, s. 53-A, T. P. Act, the effect of which is to introduce in certain cases the doctrine of part performance as an answer to non-registration under the Reg. Act. No doubt the general principle is that Acts of the Legislature are not given retrospective effect unless the language makes it clear that such was the intention, but I apprehend that in applying that principle one must have regard to the general character of the Act in question, and when construing an Act introduced for the purpose of applying an equitable doctrine to certain transactions considered ex hypothesi to be lacking in equity one should not assume that the Legislature intended that the Act should not have retrospective effect, but wished to preserve rights acquired in such transactions. I therefore read s. 53-A without any preconceived idea that in all probability the Legislature did not intend it to have any retrospective operation. Now, what the section provides is that "where any person contracts to transfer for consideration any immovable property" and the transfer contains the provisions specified in the section, "then, notwithstanding that the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, the transferor or any person claiming under him shall be debarred from enforcing against the transferee and persons claiming under him any right in respect of the property of which the transferee has taken or continued in possession."

The section in the opening words "where any person contracts" uses the present tense. It does not say "shall have contracted" or "shall hereafter contract," and I think the use of the present tense denotes that the question whether the section is to operate or not should be answered at the time when it arises, that is when the suit is filed. The section in effect provides that where there is a contract of a certain nature, then certain results are to follow. That seems to me to be the natural meaning of the language, and that is the meaning which has been accepted by this Court in Tukaram v. Atmaram (2) by the High Court of Patna in Wakefield v. Sayeeda Khatun (3) and by the High Court of Calcutta in Ashutosh Chattopadhy v. Nalinakshya Bandopadhyaya (4) to mention only some of the cases. Pillai (5) has taken a different view, and has held that s. 53-A in its terms has no retrospective effect. I am unable to agree with that view. I prefer the view taken by the other High Courts. But the matter does not rest there. Reliance is placed on s. 63 of Act XX of 1929, which is the Act, by which the T. P. Act was amended. The addition to the T. P. Act of s. 53-A was introduced by s. 16 of the amending Act. Section 63 of the amending Act provides in effect that nothing in any of the sections enumerated shall be deemed in any way to affect transactions which took place before April 1, 1930. Now s. 16 is not amongst the sections enumerated, but s. 63 (d) deals with the sections which are not so enumerated and provides that:

"...nothing in any other provision of this Act shall render invalid or in any way affect anything already done before 1st day of April 1930, in any proceeding pending in a Court on that date; and any such remedy and any such proceeding as is herein referred to may be enforced, instituted or continued, as the case may be, as if this Act had not been passed".

It seems to me that that section, though not very happily worded, amounts to this: that in the case of the enumerated sections, which do not include s. 16, their provisions have no retrospective effect and do not apply to any transaction which took place before April 1, 1930; and the provisions of the other sections of the Act, which include s. 16, do not affect anything which took place before April 1, 1930, in a suit pending in a Court on that date, and I think the final words of sub-s. (d) are merely consequential and enact positively that remedies and proceedings which have been saved by the earlier part of the section can be enforced as if the section had not been passed. It was held by this Court in Suleman Haji Ahmed Umar v. P. N. Patel (6), and the view has been accepted by other High Courts, that the omission from s. 63 of s. 16 amongst the enumerated sections is a clear indication of the intention of the Legislature that that section should apply in the case of transactions which took place before April 1, 1930, and I think that there is a great deal of force in that contention.

The learned Assistant Judge relied on a judgment of Tyabji, J. in Chhaganlal v. Chhunilal (7), in which he analyzes the terms of s. 63. But in that case the suit had been filed before April 1, 1930, so that the question with which we have to deal did not arise. There is no doubt that s. 53-A would not apply to a suit filed before the date when the section came into operation. It seems to me that so far as s. 63 is concerned it does not in terms cover this case; but it does undoubtedly indicate that the Legislature intended s. 53-A to apply to transactions which took place before April 1, 1930, where the suit was filed after that date. But then we have to consider the effect of s. 15, Act XXI of 1929, which deals with the Reg. Act, and I do not find that that section has been referred to in any of the cases, except the Madras case which I have mentioned. As I have pointed out s. 53-A expressly provides that in the contracts referred to in spite of non-registration the transferor is debarred from enforcing his rights. If no amendment had been made in the Reg. Act, it seems to me clear that s. 53-A would have overridden s. 49, Reg. Act, in respect of contracts falling within the former section. But, I suppose, from excess of caution, the Legislature thought it desirable to amend s. 49, and accordingly a proviso was added to that section (as from April 1, 1930, which so far as material enacts that an unregistered document affecting immovable property and required by this Act to be registered may be received as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of s. 53-A, T. P. Act, 1882. Now, that proviso was added by s. 10, Act XXI of 1929, and s. 15 of that Act is expressed in terms almost identical with those of s. 63 of Act XX, but it applies to the whole Act, and not merely to enumerated sections. It provides:

"Save as provided in sub-s. (2) nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect—

(a) the terms or incidents of any transfer or disposition of property made or effected before 1st day of April, 1930;

(b) the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered before the aforesaid date".

It is argued that as the transfers in this case were made before April 1, 1930, and had not been registered, they could not be relied upon nor used in evidence and that the amendment of s. 49, Reg. Act, was expressly given no retrospective effect. If that is correct, as it seems to me to be, and if I am right in thinking that s. 53-A, T. P. Act, has retrospective effect, then there would seem to have been a slip in the drafting of the amending Acts. It cannot have been intended to make the amendment of the T. P. Act retrospective, and to make the consequential amendment of the Reg. Act non-retrospective, and one has to consider which of the amending Acts represents the true intention of the Legislature. It seems to me that the amendment of s. 49, Reg. Act, was only passed ex abundante cautela and was not necessary, and the fact that that amendment was not made retrospective cannot, I think, have any great weight in considering whether s. 53-A, T. P. Act, is made retrospective. For the reasons which I have already given which are based, first, on the language of s. 53-A, and secondly, on the omission of s. 16 from the enumerated sections in s. 63, Act XX of 1929, I am of opinion that s. 53-A was intended to apply and does apply to transactions which took place before April 1, 1930. In my opinion therefore the decision of the trial Judge was right; and this appeal must be allowed and the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

KOPPULA PEDDA VENKANNA—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Basis of order of restitution—Judgment-debtor held entitled to interest on decretal amount deposited by him as condition for grant of stay of execution, on reversal of decree.

The basis of an order of restitution should not be the benefit which had accrued to the party whose decree has been reversed, but the loss suffered by the successful party as a result of the erroneous decree and the Court's orders thereunder.

A judgment-debtor applied to the Court to stay execution of the decree and the Court ordered him to furnish security for the amount of the decree as a condition precedent to the grant of stay. He, however, deposited into Court the full amount of the decree, praying the Court to order the decree-holder not to draw out the amount except on furnishing security. The Court did so order; but the decree-holder was unable or unwilling to furnish the security, with the result that the decree remained stayed and the money remained in Court. Eventually the decree was reversed in appeal and the judgment-debtor applied for restitution, including in his claim interest on the amount in deposit for the period for which it was in Court:

Held, that the interest could be awarded to the judgment-debtor. 139 Ind. Cas. 348 (1), relied on.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of an application for restitution made by a judgment-debtor, the decree against whom had been reversed in appeal. The appellant is the plaintiff whose decree was reversed. The full records of the proceedings after this decree are not before me and to a large extent I have had to rely upon statements of the learned Advocates on both sides the correctness of which I do not doubt. It is established that after the decree was passed the appellant took out execution but withdrew his petition on the respondent paying the amount of costs. After this execution petition had been withdrawn the respondent, presumably apprehending further steps in execution though there was no overt act so far as we are aware by the decree-holder, applied to the Court to stay execution of the decree. This application was opposed and the Court appears to have ordered the respondent (judgment-debtor) to furnish security for the amount of the decree as a condition precedent to the grant of stay. The respondent found difficulty in furnishing security and instead of obeying the Court's order literally, he deposited into Court the full amount of the decree, praying the Court to order the decree-holder (appellant here) not to draw out the amount except on furnishing security. The Court did so order; but the decree-holder was unable or unwilling to furnish the security, with the result that the decree remained stayed and the money remained in Court. Eventually the decree was reversed in appeal and the respondent applied for restitution, including in his claim interest on the amount in deposit for the period for which it was in Court. The lower Appellate Court has awarded interest at 12 per cent. on this amount and it is against this order for interest that the present appeal is preferred by decree-holder.

So far as I am aware there is no case which precisely covers the point now before me though the decision of the Bench in Shanmugasundara v. Ratnavelu (1) deals with somewhat similar facts. That was a case of a decree for money in which an application was made for stay at a time when no execution petition was pending, as is also the position here, but the Court itself ordered the deposit of a portion of the decree amount in cash and the giving of security for the remainder and directed the decree-holder not to draw the cash deposit except on furnishing security. The deposit was made; the decree-holder failed to furnish security and draw out the cash deposit and on the decree being reversed, restitution was ordered in the shape of interest on the amount deposited in cash, the reason being that the basis of an order of restitution should not be the benefit which had accrued to the party whose decree has been reversed, but the loss suffered by the successful party as a result of the erroneous decree and the Courts orders thereunder.

It is argued for the appellant here that the position in the present case is different in that the order of the Court as a result of the decree and the stay application was not for the deposit of cash but for the giving of security and that it was the voluntary act of the present respondent in substituting a cash deposit in place of the security ordered which resulted in the loss of interest on the money so deposited. On the other hand it is contended for the respondent that though the respondent on his own initiative made the cash deposit instead of giving security, the act of the respondent was ratified and adopted by the Court in its final order staying the decree by virtue of this deposit and ordering the appellant to furnish security as a condition for withdrawing the amount deposited. With some hesitation, I accept the contention of the respondent. If once we adopt the criterion laid down in the case just quoted that the basis of restitution is to be the loss suffered by the judgment-debtor by reason of the wrongful decree and the orders resulting therefrom, I think it follows that the present respondent is entitled to interest on the deposit. It is true that he could have escaped the necessity for a deposit by furnishing security. He was unable to do so and tendered the money into Court subject to certain terms. The Court accepted the deposit and decided that the terms suggested by the respondent were suitable terms upon which the appellant should be allowed to withdraw the money and it was on the basis of these terms that the Court stayed execution of the decree. It seems to me therefore though the first act in the making of the deposit instead of furnishing security was due to the initiative of the respondent the Court itself took the responsibility for treating that deposit as the basis for the stay order and imposing certain terms upon the appellant. It follows that the order for the retention of the money in Court as a condition of stay and the terms imposed upon the appellant form part of an act of the Court resulting directly from a decree which has been held to be erroneous and that order has in fact deprived the respondent of the use of money which would have been at his disposal had it not been for the erroneous decree. Therefore in accordance with the general principle embodied in s. 144, Civil P. O., the order of the lower Appellant Court requiring the appellant to pay interest on the amount of his deposit is correct. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. (Leave to appeal is granted).

First Appeal No. 154 of 1937

MOHAMMAD ISMAIL, J.

Mst. KUTIKA KUER—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANTversus.SRIDHAR MISIR AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS
—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, rr. 10 (2), 19—Order rejecting appeal under O. XLI, r. 10 (2)—Appealability—Order refusing to restore such appeal, if appealable.

An order rejecting an appeal under O. XLI, r. 10 (2), Civil P. O., is not a decree and is not therefore appealable as such. It is not appealable even as an order under O. XLIII, r. 1. Lekha v. Bhauna (1), relied on.

Order XLI, r. 19 is not applicable in a case where the date on which the appeal was rejected under O. XLI, r. 10 (2) was not fixed for the hearing of the appeal. An order therefore refusing to restore the appeal so rejected is not appealable. No power is vested in the Court to allow the appellant to proceed with his appeal even if he is put to great hardship in not allowing him to proceed with it. Firozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (3), referred to.

F. A. against an order of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated April 5, 1937.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ambika Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts that have given rise to these connected appeals may be briefly stated. Mst. Kutika Kuer, plaintiff, brought a suit for a declaration that the house described in the plaint was not saleable in execution of the decree in favour of the respondent Sridhar Misir. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court. The plaintiff appealed from the decree of the Court of first instance. At the instance of the respondents on August 8, 1936 the Court directed the appellant to furnish security within a fortnight. It is not necessary to refer to various applications and orders that were made after the passing of the order on August 8, 1936. Ultimately the appellant furnished security of immovable property. The respondent raised objections to the sufficiency of the security and the Court fixed February 13, 1937 for the disposal of the objection. On the date fixed, no one appeared on behalf of the appellant to prove that the security furnished was in compliance with the order of the Court and was sufficient. The appeal was accordingly rejected. The appellant then made an application to the lower Appellate Court for the restoration of her appeal. This application was also dismissed on April 5, 1937. The appellant has now filed first appeal from the order of April 5, 1937 and second appeal from the former order rejecting the appeal which was passed on February 13, 1937. The first question for determination is whether the orders appealed against are appealable. Under r. 10, O. XLI, Civil P. O., the Appellate Court may, in its discretion, either before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer or afterwards on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both. The order passed by the lower Appellate Court was obviously under this Rule. Sub-r. (2) provides:

"Where such security is not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal."

The order passed by the Court below rejecting the appeal is not a decree within the meaning of s. 2, sub-s. (2). The order of the Court was by no means the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as the Court expressing it, conclusively determined the rights of the parties. That being so no appeal is permissible under the Code from an order rejecting the appeal under O. XLI, r. 10, sub-r. (2). Similarly the order of the Court below is not appealable as an order. An examination of O. XLIII, r. 1 will show that an order rejecting an appeal under O. XLI, r. 10 is not one of the orders from which an appeal is allowed. This question was considered by a Full Bench of this Court in Lekha v. Bhauna (1). It was held that:

"An order rejecting an appeal under s. 549, Civil P. O., (O. XLI, r. 10) is not appealable either as an order or as a decree."

(1) 18 A 101; A W N 1895, 238 (F B).

The Full Bench overruled an earlier ruling reported in Siraj-ul-haq v. Khadim Husain (2). For the reasons given above, I hold that the order of February 13, 1937 is not appealable. Now coming to the order of April 5, 1937, I find that this is also not one of the orders mentioned in O. XLIII, r. 1. Learned Counsel for the appellant contends that it is in effect an order of dismissal of the appeal for the appellant's default provided by r. 17, O. XLI of the Act. If this contention is well-founded, then the subsequent application for restoration would be covered by r. 19, O. XLI. An appeal is provided from an order of refusal under r. 19, O. XLI to re-admit an appeal. I however consider the argument of learned Counsel untenable. The date on which the appeal was rejected was not fixed for the hearing of the appeal and therefore it could not be dismissed for the appellant's default under r. 17. It follows therefore that r. 19 also is inapplicable. The order of the Court below clearly shows that the appellant was ordered to furnish security for costs of the respondent to enable him to proceed with his appeal. Unless the appellant complied with the order no date of the hearing of the appeal could possibly be fixed. I have no doubt whatsoever that the rejection of the appeal was under O. XLI, r. 10, sub-r. (2) and not under r. 17. Under these circumstances the appellant is not entitled to appeal from that order.

Learned Counsel for the appellant contends that his client has now deposited sufficient security for the costs of this Court as well as of the Court below and that it would be a great hardship if he is not allowed to argue his appeal. Unfortunately, no power is vested in the Court to allow the appellant to proceed with his appeal. I therefore cannot consider the question of hardship. I however wish to refer to a passage in the judgment of a Bench of this Court in Firozi Begam v. Abdul Latif Khan (3) at p. 145:

"We are compelled therefore to sustain the preliminary objection. At the same time we take the opportunity of expressing our opinion that, considering the serious consequences entailed by an order under s. 549, it would be well if the Legislature should consider whether it is not advisable to embody in the new Civil P. O. some provision analogous to that contained in para. 2 of s. 381 and to give a right of appeal from orders passed under s. 549 (O. XLI, r. 10)."

I respectfully agree with the observations made by the learned Judges. In the result I dismiss the appeals with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 363 of 1938

September 26, 1939

LAKSHMANA RAO, J.

In re J. S. DHAS AND ANOTHER—

APPELLANTS

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1880), ss. 420, 120-B—Grant of false transfer certificate of export quota rights, by clerk of Tea Licensing Committee—Transferor under certificate making transfer of quota far in excess of what was due to his credit—Both clerk and transferor held guilty under ss. 420 and 120-B.

An owner of a tea estate made an application to the Tea Licensing Committee for transfer of export quota rights in which he mentioned the export quota far in excess of what was fixed to his credit by the Committee. A clerk of the Committee whose duty was to check whether the transferor had in fact the quota sought to be transferred to his credit, wrote on the application that the quota mentioned therein was 'available' for transfer. Due to this false endorsement the transferor was granted the quota transfer certificate which enabled him to transfer export quota rights far in excess of what was to his credit and thereby made a huge wrongful gain:

Held, that the fraud was committed at the instance of the transferor and as the quota transfer certificates were by themselves property and the documents of title both the transferor and the clerk were guilty under ss. 420 and 120-B, I. P. O. 165 Ind. Cas. 505 (1), 56 Ind. Cas. 510 (2) and Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vaithilinga Mudali (3), relied on.

Cr. A. against the order of the Sessions Court, Coimbatore Division, in C. O. No. 77 of 1938.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, E. Antony Lobo and G. Gopalaswami, for the Appellants.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—Appellant No. 1 was the ledger clerk of the Tea Licensing Committee at Coonoor and appellant No. 2 is the proprietor of the Kudikadu Estate. Both have been convicted under s. 120-B read with s. 420, I. P. C., of the offence of conspiracy to cheat and obtain tea export quotas of the value of Rs. 22,523-15-0 and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The Tea Licensing Committee was constituted in 1933 for regulating the export of tea from India to foreign countries, and the Office of the Committee for Southern India was located at Coonoor. It consisted of P. W. No. 5 the joint controller, and P. W. No. 7, the assistant joint controller, with an establishment, and it was the function of the committee to distribute the right of exporting the quantity allotted to Southern India to the various Estates in Southern India according to productive capacity, and issue licenses to export the tea. Sales of export quota rights were permitted and it was part of the duty of the committee to facilitate them. The vendor had to submit an application in the prescribed form signed by himself and the vendee, and on receipt, the application would go to the transfer clerk to ascertain whether the transferor and transferee were on the books of the committee. The application would then go to the accountant to verify whether the necessary fees had been paid by the parties and it would then be sent to appellant No. 1, the ledger clerk, to ascertain whether the transferor had to his credit the export quota rights intended to be transferred. It was the duty of appellant No. 1 to write the word 'available' on the form if the transferor had to his credit the export quota sought to be transferred, and the application would then go to the transfer clerk for preparing the quota transfer certificates in triplicate. The transfer certificates and the application would then be sent to P. W. No. 7, the assistant joint controller and he would initial the certificates if the word 'available' is found written on the application by appellant No. 1. The transfer certificates without the application form would then go to P. W. No. 5 and they would be signed by him if P. W. No. 7's initials are seen there. The certificates would then be sent to the despatching clerk and one copy of the certificate and duplicate copy of the application would be sent to the transferor. Another copy of the certificate would be sent to the transferee and the third copy and the original application would be retained in the office. The necessary debit and credit entries would be made in the ledgers and a cursory glance at the ledgers would show the amount of export quota to the credit of the respective estates. Appellant No. 1 was in sole charge of these ledgers and the transactions had also to be entered in a transfer register, Ex. F. There was also "the main controlling account" which used to be written by appellant No. 1, and P. W. No. 7 used to act as joint controller during the absence of P. W. No. 5 on leave. Appellant No. 1 used to act as assistant controller in addition to his duties as ledger clerk and dealings of Kudikadu Estate were carried on by appellant No. 2.

The joint controller went on leave from April to October 1937 and P. W. No. 7 was acting for him. Appellant No. 1 was acting as assistant joint controller in addition to his duties as ledger clerk and Exs. B-3, B-5, B-7, B-9, B-11, B-13, B-14,

B-16, B-17, B-19, B-21, B-23 and B-25, the transfer applications, were received from appellant No. 2. The word 'available' was written on them by appellant No. 1 though the estate had not the necessary quota to its credit and Exs. B-6, B-8, B-10, B-12, B-13, B-20, B-22 and B-24 the quota transfer certificates, were prepared. Appellant No. 1 initialled them as acting assistant joint controller, and they were signed in the usual course by P. W. No. 7 the acting joint controller and issued to the parties. P. W. No. 5, the joint controller, called for the ledgers for his customary check, on his return in October, and appellant No. 1 stated that he was writing them up. They were called for again a few days later and appellant No. 1 replied that it would take some days to bring the balance up to date. Appellant No. 1 reported later that the ledgers had disappeared from the office, and a new set of ledgers were compiled under his direction from the office records including Exhibit F, the transfer register which was not in his custody. The balance would not tally and appellant No. 1 went on leave. P. W. No. 6, the accountant, was asked to verify the figures and Ex. A-1, the wrong credit entry for 63,597 lbs. of export quota rights transferred by the Achankoil Estate to the Denington Estate on June 4, 1937, was discovered in the re-constructed ledger of the Kudikadu Estate. The relative folio number was found altered in the transfer register, and Ex. O-2, the credit entry for 63,597 lbs. of export quota rights in the handwriting of appellant No. 1 was found interpolated in the reconstructed ledger of the Denington Estate. The failure to balance the figures was due to Ex. A-1, the wrong credit entry in the re-constructed ledger of the Kudikadu Estate and it transpired that appellant No. 2 had been enabled to transfer 48,249 lbs. of export quota rights in excess of the quota to the credit of the Kudikadu Estate and make a wrongful gain of Rs. 22,523-15-0. Appellant No. 1 was summoned by the joint controller but he made himself scarce.

That appellant No. 2 transferred 48,249 lbs. of export quota rights on behalf of the Kudikadu Estate in excess of the quantity to the credit of that estate and made a huge wrongful gain is beyond question, and it was not suggested that the account was overdrawn by any arrangement with the Tea Licensing Committee. That some others were permitted to transfer quota rights in anticipation of acquisition of rights has no bearing and it was not disputed in this Court that P. W. No. 7, the acting joint controller, would not have signed the quota transfer certificates but for the word 'available' written on the application forms by appellant No. 1 as ledger clerk and his initials thereon as acting assistant joint controller. It was not suggested hitherto that appellant No. 1 wrote the word 'available' and put his initials in ignorance of the state of accounts and his statement in answer to a Court question that he must have got the permission of the joint controller to do so is unfounded. The disappearance of the accounts, not to mention the subsequent conduct of appellant No. 1 belies it, and there is no ground for dissent from the conclusion of the learned trial Judge that the quota transfer certificates were obtained by cheating. There was no occasion for such fraud except it be for consideration, and the fraud must have been committed at the instance of the person benefited by it. Appellant No. 2 had dealings with appellant No. 1 direct as appearing from Ex. M-1 and he had contracted to transfer 59,000 lbs. of export quota rights in excess of the quantity to the credit of his estate on May 31, 1937. Copies of the quota transfer certificates used to be sent to the parties and Ex. H series show that appellant No. 2 knew the state of the account of the Kudikadu Estate in June, 1937. But the contracts entered into without the necessary export quota rights to the credit of the estate had to be fulfilled and as pointed out by the trial Judge in para. 21 of the judgment appellant No. 2 was in desperate straits. The conclusion is therefore irresistible that the fraud was committed at his instance, and the appellants would undoubtedly be guilty under ss. 415 and 120-B, I. P. C.: vide Aswini Kumar Gupta v. Emperor (1). The quota transfer certificates are by themselves property (vide In re Packinathan (2) and Ramaswami Ayyar v. Vaithilinga Mudali (3)) and even otherwise, what was transferred was not a "power" and the evidence is that export quota rights have an independent value. The quota transfer certificates would also be documents of title, and the appellants would be guilty under ss. 420 and 120-B, I. P. C. The conviction is therefore correct and it would make no difference in the sentence even if the conviction should

Res judicata—Suit against father and son for declaration that son had saleable interest in three properties—Suit dismissed against son but against father only in respect of two properties—No appeal preferred—Decision if can be attacked in appeal from decree relating to matters left undecided—Practice—Declaration of title, when refused.

A suit instituted under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. O., by a decree-holder against father and son for declaration that the son had saleable interest in certain properties and that all the properties were liable to attachment, was dismissed as against son in respect of all the properties and against the father in respect of two properties and it was held that the suit could proceed against the father in respect of one property. No appeal was preferred against this decision:

Held, that the decision was clearly a final adjudication between the parties relating to these matters and was, therefore, a "decree" as defined in s. 2, cl. (2), Civil P. O. No appeal having been filed, the decree became final and was not liable to attack on appeal from the decree relating to other matters, which had been left undecided.

Held, also that as the suit was a composite suit, relating to different subject-matters in which different reliefs were claimed against the two defendants it was competent to the Court to decide the dispute relating to the various properties separately. 15 Ind. Cas. 563 (3), distinguished.

Messrs. Mela Ram and Nand Lal Saluja, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. R. Sawhney, Gurbachan Singh and Shamair Chand, for Respondents Nos. 2 and 1 respectively.

Tek Chand, J.—The appellant, Sain Dass Chawla, obtained a money decree against Tikka Sant Singh, son of Baba Ujagar Singh Bedi, from the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, on November 20, 1933. In execution of the decree, he attached a bungalow known as "Oosynook" at Murree, and one-fourth share in Sarai Baba Khem Singh and in the building known as Damdama Sahib at Rawalpindi. Baba Ujagar Singh objected to the attachment, alleging that the attached properties belonged to him exclusively and that the judgment-debtor had no interest in them. The judgment-debtor also filed objections saying that he had only a right of residence in "Oosynook" and that this right was exempt from attachment and sale under s. 60 (1) (n), Civil P. O. He also averred that he had no interest in the other two properties which could be attached and sold. In the course of the inquiry into the objections, the decree-holder made a statement on November 2, 1935, that "for the time being" he did not wish to proceed against the judgment-debtor's alleged share in the Damdama Sahib and Sarai Baba Khem Singh and that execution should proceed against "Oosynook" only. On this statement, the executing Court released these two properties and restricted the inquiry to "Oosynook." Subsequently, relying on a decree passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, on February 27, 1928, in terms of the award of Nawab Mohammad Hyat Khan Noon, dated November 9, 1927, it held that "Oosynook" was owned by Baba Ujagar Singh and that Tikka Sant Singh had only a right of residence in it and that he had no power to dispose of this right. It accordingly allowed the objections and released "Oosynook" from attachment. From this decision the decree-holder preferred an appeal to this Court.

The appeal was decided by Agha Haidar, J., sitting in Single Bench on May 26, 1936: Sain Das v. Tikka Sant Singh (1). The learned Judge affirmed the finding of the executing Court that "Oosynook" could not be attached and sold in execution of the decree, but he held that it was liable to be dealt with by way of "equitable execution" and he ordered that a Receiver be appointed to collect the rent and after deducting the expenses, pay it to the decree-holder till the decretal amount was discharged. From this order the judgment-debtor preferred an appeal under the Letters Patent, but the appeal was dismissed on January 14, 1937: Letters Patent Appeal No. 103 of 1936 Tika Sant Singh v. Saindas Chawala (2). In the meantime, on October 13, 1936, the decree-holder had instituted a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., against Baba Ujagar Singh and Tikka Sant Singh for a declaration that the latter had a saleable interest in one-half of "Cosynook" and one-fourth of Sarai Baba Khem Singh and Damdama Sahib respectively, and that all the three properties were liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree to the extent stated. The suit was resisted by both the defendants on various pleas. The learned Subordinate Judge at first framed the following three preliminary issues:

"1. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain this suit in respect of Damdama Sahib and Sarai Baba Khem Singh?

2. How does the statement of the plaintiff, dated November 2, 1935, releasing these properties from attachment, affect the present suit?

3. What is the effect of the decision of the High Court, dated May 26, 1936, on this suit."

These issues were decided by the learned Subordinate Judge on December 21, 1937. He held that the plaintiff decree-holder having withdrawn the attachment against Damdama Sahib and the sarai was not entitled to maintain a suit for declaration against either defendant under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., or under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, in respect of these two properties. He further held that in view of the decision in the execution proceedings that the judgment-debtor's interest in "Cosynook" was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the decree, which had been affirmed by the High Court on appeal, the plaintiff's suit against the judgment-debtor Tikka Sant Singh was barred by s. 47, Civil P. C. He accordingly dismissed the suit against Tikka Sant Singh in respect of all the three properties and against Baba Ujagar Singh in respect of Sarai Baba Khem Singh and Damdama Sahib. He held however that the suit as regards "Cosynook" could proceed against Baba Ujagar Singh only. In accordance with this judgment a decree sheet was prepared on December 21, 1937, dismissing the plaintiff's suit against Tikka Sant Singh in respect of all the three properties and against Baba Ujagar Singh in respect of the sarai and Damdama Sahib. No appeal against this decision was preferred by the decree-holder.

The suit proceeded against Baba Ujagar Singh in respect of "Cosynook." Issues were framed on the merits and after evidence for the parties had been recorded, the learned Judge, on July 11, 1938, dismissed the suit against Baba Ujagar Singh qua this property also, leaving the parties to bear their own costs. From this decree, dated July 11, 1938, the plaintiff has appealed, impleading both Baba Ujagar Singh and Tikka Sant Singh as respondents. In this appeal the appellant has challenged not only the decision of the lower Court in favour of Baba Ujagar Singh in respect of "Cosynook," as given in the judgment of July 11, 1938, but also the decree of the lower Court, dated September 21, 1937, dismissing the suit relating to "Cosynook" against Tikka Sant Singh, and the suit in respect of the sarai and Damdama Sahib against both defendants.

A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondents that the plaintiff not having appealed against the decree passed by the lower Court on December 21, 1937, is not entitled to agitate in this appeal matters which had been finally decided between the parties by that decree. After hearing Counsel for the appellant I am of the opinion, that this contention is well-founded and must succeed. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that the decision of the lower Court dated December 21, 1937, did not amount to a "decree" but was merely an interlocutory order passed in the course of the suit and that the order was not appealable. This contention is without any force whatever. As has been stated above, the Court had, by its judgment of that date, dismissed the suit against Tikka Sant Singh with regard to all the properties which were the subject-matter of the suit and against Baba Ujagar Singh with regard to the sarai and the Damdama. This was clearly a final adjudication between the parties relating to these matters and was therefore a "decree" as defined in s. 2, cl. (2), Civil P. C. An appeal from this decree lay under s. 96 of the Code but no such appeal was filed within the period of limitation prescribed by law and therefore the decree has become final and is not liable to attack now on appeal from the decree relating to other matters, which had been left undecided. Mr. Mela Ram in support of his contention referred us to a decision of the Chief Court reported in Gehna v. Khuda Bakhsh (3). That case however is clearly distinguishable, as there an issue relating to res judicata had been decided in favour of the plaintiff, it being held that the suit could proceed and that the former decision relied upon did not bar the suit. That order was clearly of an interlocutory nature: there was no final determination of the rights of the parties in regard to the subject-matter of the suit or any part thereof and therefore it did not amount to a "decree".

It was further argued that the Subordinate Judge should not have decided the suit piecemeal. But the suit, in this case, was a composite suit, relating to different subject-matters in which different reliefs were claimed against the two defendants. It was therefore competent to the Court to decide the dispute relating to the various properties separately. It is conceded that the plaintiff could have brought three separate declaratory suits relating to each property and each suit could have been dealt with separately. It therefore makes no difference that the plaintiff has joined the three claims in one suit. Further the Court, in this case, did, as a matter of fact, give a final adjudication relating to some of the subject-matters in dispute on December 21, and passed a formal decree on that date. If the plaintiff considered the judgment or the decree to be illegal or wrong on the merits, his remedy was by way of appeal or review, but he not having availed himself of either of these remedies, the decision has become final and unassailable and cannot be challenged now in regard to the matters finally determined by it. The present appeal against Tikka Sant Singh is therefore clearly incompetent and so also against Baba Ujagar Singh with regard to the sarai and Damdama Sahib.

The only remaining point is the claim against Baba Ujagar Singh in respect of "Cosynook." Though the plaintiff's appeal against Baba Ujagar Singh relating to this matter is competent, but in view of the decision as regards the rights of Tikka Sant Singh in this property it is futile to give any adjudication on the merits in regard to this property. Admittedly, any declaration given by us would in the circumstances be entirely barren, and as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Janaki Ammal v. Nraayanaswami Aiyar (4), at p. 639 a Court will not grant a declaration of right which 'would be stamped with something in the nature of futility.' As stated already, it has been decided in the course of the execution proceedings—and that decision (whether right or wrong on the merits) is final in the present suit as between the plaintiff and Tikka Sant Singh—that the latter had no saleable interest in this property which could be attached and sold in execution of the plaintiff's decree against him, and the only relief by way of "equitable execution" which could be given to the plaintiff has been granted to him. This being so, it is wholly useless to decide, for the purposes of the execution of the decree of the plaintiff against Tikka Sant Singh, as to what the rights of Baba Ujagar Singh in this house are. The appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs. Baba Ujagar Singh has filed a cross-objection against that part of the decree of the lower Court which left the parties to bear their own costs of that suit. After hearing his Counsel I can find no substance in this objection. In the circumstances of the case, the lower Court had exercised a sound judicial discretion in leaving the parties to bear their own costs. I would therefore dismiss the cross-objection with costs.

S. A. against the decree of the Assistant District Court, Mandalay, dated July 20, 1938.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Clark and Surridge, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-appellant U Kyaw Dun is a resident of Prome while defendant-respondent No. 1 U Nge is a resident of Mandalay. Respondent No. 2 Daw Mi is the wife of respondent No. 1. In or about the year 1292 B. E. (1930) they commenced dealing with each other in the matter of manufacture and sale of Burmese cheroots. U Nge manufactured them in Mandalay and U Kyaw Dun imported them from Prome and sold them there. At that time the figure of a peacock was used by the respondent U Nge as his trade-mark; but some time later the trade-mark was changed. Instead of using the figure of a bird or an animal they used a combination of three names, Mandalay, Tin Tin Mya, Seinban, written in Burmese characters in the following manner:

The mark was registered in Mandalay by the plaintiff-appellant U Kyaw Dun as his trade-mark on March 4, 1931, vide Ex. B, and each cheroot imported by U Kyaw Dun bore this trade-mark. The cheroots thus became known as Tin Tin Mya cheroots or Tin Tin Mya say baw lait. This went on till about the end of 1937 when a difference of opinion took place between U Kyaw Dun and U Nge. U Kyaw Dun complained that the cheroots which he had been getting lately were not of the same quality as before; U Nge replied that as they were not made by machine he could not maintain their uniform quality. As a result of this difference of opinion U Kyaw Dun ceased dealing with U Nge and started placing orders for cheroots with a woman named Daw Mi of Sein Ban quarter, Mandalay. He sold these cheroots with his registered trade-mark, Tin Tin Mya, thereon. U Nge also used the same trade-mark with the addition of the words "... (golden spectacles) in very small type under the name "Tin Tin Mya." Unless one looks very carefully, one will not notice the words "golden spectacles" on the labels of the respondent U Nge. The two labels impressed with these trade-marks are thus in no way distinguishable from each other. In these circumstances the cheroots of one will and can easily pass off as the cheroots of the other.

For these reasons the respondent filed a suit, Civil Regular No. 25 of 1938, in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judge, Mandalay, asking for the cancellation of the registration of the trade-mark registered in the name of the appellant U Kyaw Dun alleging that he allowed the Tin Tin Mya trade-mark to be registered in the name of the appellant U Kyaw Dun as the appellant agreed to act as his sole agent in Prome. In reply thereto the appellant U Kyaw Dun launched both civil and criminal proceedings. In the civil proceedings out of which the present appeal arises U Kyaw Dun makes the following allegations:

"(1) That the plaintiff has for the last seven years or more sold in Prome District Burmese cheroots or saybawlaits manufactured by the defendants at Seinban Quarter, Mandalay, bearing a trade-mark or label round each cheroot or saybawlait and known as "Tin Tin Mya saybawlaits." This trade-mark was registered by the plaintiff at Mandalay on March 4, 1931. A sample of the trade-mark or label is attached to this petition, marked A. The plaintiff has extensively advertized and sold these saybawlaits. In consequence thereof the saybawlait with the said label have become known in both Mandalay and Prome Districts. ...

"(2) That the plaintiff's trade-mark or label bears the name "Tin Tin Mya," Maung Tin being the name of the only nephew of the plaintiff and Ma Mya being the name of the only grandchild of the plaintiff whom he has adopted as his keittima daughter, and thus "Tin Tin Mya" is a combination of these two names.

"(3) That during the period the plaintiff has been using the said "Tin Tin Mya" trade-mark or label affixed on them, these cheroots or saybawlaits acquired a very high reputation in Prome District, and the sales have been large and profitable.

"(4) That the defendants have been selling at Mandalay and Prome, the cheroots or saybawlaits manufactured by them at Mandalay during the last two months using the "Tin Tin Mya" trade-mark or label round each cheroot or saybawlait which closely resembles the trade-mark or label used by the plaintiff in colour, size, general make-up and marking in order to pass off fraudulently the cheroots or saybawlaits as those bearing the trade-mark or label of the plaintiff."

In reply the respondent states inter alia as follows:

"As regards para. 1 of the plaint these defendants admit that the plaintiff was the representative of the defendants at Prome to sell Burmese cheroots or saybawlaits manufactured by the defendants at Seinban Quarter, known as 'Mandalay Tin Tin Mya Seinban Quarter'. Defendant No. 1 was the owner of the said trade-mark and it was registered in the name of the plaintiff on condition that he the said plaintiff will act as the sole agent of defendant No. 1 at Prome for selling the abovementioned cheroots. Defendant No. 1 has already filed a suit in this Court for cancellation of the registration of the said trade-mark and for other relief being Civil Regular Suit No. 25 of 1938 of this Court."

On these pleadings suitable issues were framed and a good deal of evidence was produced by both sides. I have carefully examined the evidence and I am satisfied that the following points are satisfactorily proved: (1) That the plaintiff-appellant U Kyaw Dun was not the agent of the defendant-respondent U Nge, (2) that U Kyaw Dun was an importer and U Nge was a manufacturer of Burmese cheroots, (3) that U Kyaw Dun financed U Nge to a certain extent to carry on his business as a manufacturer, (4) that U Kyaw Dun himself selected leaves and sent them to Mandalay and with the leaves so sent U Nge made cheroots and sent them to U Kyaw Dun, (5) that U Kyaw Dun sold these cheroots with the Tin Tin Mya trade-mark thereon, and (6) that U Nge sent cheroots to other places bearing not Tin Tin Mya trade-mark, but some other trade-mark.

In holding that these points are proved, I rely on the letters written by the defendant-respondent U Nge to U Kyaw Dun, the evidence of U Nge's own witness, Beresford (D. W. No. 5), and the evidence of U Kyaw Dun and his grandchild, Ma Mya. Their evidence was also accepted by the trial Judge. On the facts thus found proved the question that arises is whether an importer can acquire a right of use to a trade-mark against a manufacturer. A good number of cases were cited at the Bar. As the facts of some of those cases are entirely different from the facts of the present case, they are of no help; but the principle enunciated in all these cases is the same, and the principle is as enunciated by Sir Basil Scott, C. J., in West End Watch Co. v. Berna Watch Co. (1). It is as follows:

"The importer, who by advertising and pushing the sale of goods under a particular mark secures a wide popularity for the mark in relation to the goods sold by him, is entitled to the protection of the Court for that mark in the country of importation, even against the producer of the goods."

In Hirsch v. Jonas (2), Jessel, M. R., made observations to the same effect. The learned Master of the Rolls said:

"I can understand a man saying, 'I am not the actual manufacturer of goods, but the selector of goods, and my reputation for cleverness and selection is so great that goods marked with a mark to shew that they had been selected and approved of by me will fetch a higher price in the market.' If Hirsch had put on the box 'Gloria de Inglaterra Havannah' (cigars, selected by Hirsch) he might have had a case to prevent other people imitating that. It would shew that the cigars selected were approved of by him. If he got a great reputation in that way, I can understand he would have a right of protection for that which indicates to the public that the cigars were selected and approved of by him."

The Privy Council also laid down the same principle in Imperial Tobacco Co. v. Albert Bonnan (3), where their Lordships said:

"It is possible for an importer to get a valuable reputation for himself and his wares by his care in selection or his precautions as to transit and storage, or because his local character is such that the article acquires a value by his testimony to its genuineness; and if therefore goods, though of the same make, are passed off by competitors as being imported by him, he will have a right of action."

The present case is much stronger than any of these cases inasmuch as, as I have pointed out above, it was the plaintiff-appellant who registered the trade-mark in his own name and had leaves selected for the cigars and sold them with his own trade-mark. Because of his care and precaution in selecting leaves and because of his advertisement and pushing, Tin Tin Mya cheroots have acquired a great reputation. In these circumstances I am clearly of opinion, that the plaintiff-appellant U Kyaw Dun is entitled to the protection of the Court. For these reasons I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court with costs throughout.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The dispute in the suit out of which the present appeal arises was with respect to the site of two houses that belonged to a tenant named Beni. We are concerned in the present appeal with the site of only one of the houses. Beni sold the house in dispute to certain persons in the year 1932 and the vendees in their turn sold the house to Darshan Singh, defendant-appellant. It is common ground that both Prag Singh, plaintiff-respondent, and Darshan Singh, defendant-appellant, are co-sharers in the site in which the house in dispute is situated. The suit was brought by the plaintiff-respondent for joint possession of the site after the removal of the materials thereon. Beni had died before the institution of the suit. The suit was contested on various grounds by Darshan Singh but most of those grounds were rightly overruled by both the Courts below and need not therefore be stated in this judgment. One of the pleas raised in defence by Darshan Singh, which found favour with the trial Court, was that no special damage was caused to the plaintiff in consequence of the purchase of the house by Darshan Singh, and as such the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for by him. This plea formed the subject of Issue No. 7 framed by the trial Court which ran as follows: "Whether the plaintiff suffered a loss? If not, how does it affect the suit?" The trial Court held that no loss was suffered by the plaintiff and the suit was not maintainable. In this connection the trial Court made specific reference to the fact that by the sale-deed the site of the house in dispute was not transferred and continued to belong to the zamindars. On appeal by the plaintiff the lower Appellate Court held that though there was no evidence of special damage to the plaintiff the plaintiff as a co-sharer in the village was entitled to a decree for joint possession of the site and accordingly reversed the decree of the trial Court and decreed the plaintiff's suit. In my judgment the decree of the lower Appellate Court is perfectly correct. At the very outset I must make it clear that in the present litigation we are concerned with a village in which no custom entitling a raiyyat to transfer his house along with the right of residence exists.

It cannot be disputed that all the co-parceners in a joint patti or mahal are joint owners of the site of the houses of tenants and raiyyats situated in that patti or mahal. If the tenants or raiyyat dies without leaving any heir or abandons the house the right to the joint possession of the site and the materials vests in all the co-sharers and in such a case one co-sharer has no right to take possession of the materials or of the site to the exclusion of the other co-sharers. It is also clear that a tenant or a raiyyat has the right to transfer the materials of the house to any person he likes provided the materials belong to him and there is no custom prohibiting such a transfer. The question then arises whether a sale of his house by a tenant or raiyyat to one of the co-sharers, entitles that co-sharer to retain possession of the house along with the site to the exclusion of the other co-sharers. In my judgment the answer to the question must be in the negative. The tenant or raiyyat has a disposing power only so far as the materials of the house are concerned and has not a transferable interest in the site of the house. The transfer made by him can therefore be operative only so far as the materials of the house are concerned and cannot adversely effect such right as the entire body of co-parceners have in the site.

I am unaware of any principle of law that may justify the inference that the fact that transfer is in favour of one of the co-sharers has the effect of depriving the other co-sharers of the right to the joint possession of the site. If the co-sharer who purchases the house enters into possession of the same, his possession constitutes an infringement of the right of the other co-sharers to the joint possession of the site. The other co-sharers therefore have the right to ask the purchasing co-sharer to remove the materials of the house and thus enable those co-sharers to take joint possession of the site of the house. In short the retention of possession by one of the co-sharers of the house of a tenant or raiyyat that has been purchased by him furnishes the other co-sharers with a cause of action for a suit for joint possession of the site by removal of the materials. The question of special damage does not arise and the cause of action in such cases is constituted by the invasion of the right of the co-shares to joint enjoyment of the site of the house. No case directly bearing on the point before me has been cited by either party, but the view that I take receives support from the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Shankar Lal v. Pati Ram (1). For the reasons given above I hold that the rights of the case were with the plaintiff and not with the defendant-appellant and that the suit was rightly decreed by the lower Appellate Court. Accordingly I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Section 92, proviso 3, Evi. F. A. from the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Broach, in Special Civil Suit No. 391 of 1932.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. G. Desai, T. C. Gandhi and Bansilal Kinkhabwala, for the Respondent.

Indarnarayan, J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Broach in Special Civil Suit No. 391 of 1932. The plaintiff herein sued the defendants on a promissory note dated November 5, 1929 for a sum of Rs. 6,784-13-6. The promissory note sued upon is signed individually by the three defendants and there is no mention therein of any partnership firm of Chhaganlal Kalyandas. The promissory note, as usual, contains a promise to pay the amount thereof on demand to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sent a notice of demand on October 20, 1932, and filed this suit on non-compliance thereof on November 4, 1932. The defendants filed written statements inter alia pleading that they were agriculturists within the meaning of the term under the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and alleging that it was agreed at the time when the promissory note in suit was passed that it was not to be enforced, but that the amount thereof was to be adjusted in the making up of the partnership accounts of the firm of Chhaganlal Kalyandas in which they alleged that the plaintiff himself and his third brother, Pasubhai, were also partners, and that the taking of such partnership accounts was a condition precedent to the attaching of any liability to them on this promissory note. They further denied that the plaintiff being one of the partners in the said firm could maintain the suit as he sought to do. The plaintiff is described in para. 10 of the written statement as "a learned and clever Pleader" and it is stated there that by reason of misrepresentation and fraud on his part in getting the promissory note executed the suit is not maintainable. The learned trial

Judge has rightly held that there is no fraud or misrepresentation proved on plaintiff's part. One of the defendants, defendant No. 2, is plaintiff's own brother and a partner in the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas. I do not think we are concerned here with the allegation that the taking of this promissory note by the plaintiff was a successful attempt to overreach the defendants. In the written statement the defendants pleaded their status as agriculturists and the plaintiff evidently appears to have got scared at this plea, and in order to avoid it he presented an application to the trial Court on March 4, 1933, praying for an amendment of the plaint. Permission was accordingly granted by the Court and hence he added para. 1-A to the plaint which reads as follows :

"1-A. There was a firm of Shah Ohhaganlal Kalyandas in Broach. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 mentioned above were the partners of the same. I the plaintiff had advanced money to the said firm. Accounts of the same were settled and an amount was found due with interest to me from the said firm. For the payment of the same, all the three partners, defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, mentioned above, executed the suit promissory note in favour of me, the plaintiff. At the top of the plaint, instead of mentioning in brief as the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas, the names of the three partners of the said firm are mentioned for the sake of clarity and in order that no confusion might arise."

The title of the defendants in the plaint stated :

"(1) Shah Ohhaganlal Kalyandas.

(2) Jethalal Gulabdas Modi.

(3) Shah Ohhotalal Kalyandas.

Partners of the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas."

The prayer clause however, which is para. 7 of the plaint, reads as follows :

"Therefore, I file this suit and pray that you will pass a decree for the principal Rs. 6,784-13-6 and Rs. 1,335-5-6 in all Rs. 8,120-3-0 which are due from the defendants with running interest and the costs of the suit against the property of the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas and against the person and property of the defendants and give such other relief as may seem proper, on considering the facts of the case."

It is to be noted here that the relief asked for is two-fold, viz. (a) against the property of the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas and (b) against the person and property of the defendants. It is extremely lucky, I think, for the plaintiff that this part of the prayer was left unamended. That the firm Ohhaganlal Kalyandas does not seem to have been intended to be sued is clear from the title of the suit, and the words "Partners of the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas" in the title are a mere description of the three partners named above who are sued individually as executants of the promissory note, which also mentions them as individuals, and not as partners of the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas. It is sought to be argued here with considerable stress by the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant that this amendment can leave no manner of doubt that the suit, as it stands, is against the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas only and not against the individual partners mentioned as (1), (2) and (3) in the title of the suit. Before I consider the merits of this argument, I consider it necessary to point out that in the trial Court the defendants themselves seem to have contended and they conducted their defence on the basis that the suit was against the defendants in their individual capacity, and not as against the firm. If the suit were against the firm only, there could have been no question of their going into the status of the defendants as to whether they were agriculturists or not. Evidence was led on this disputed question of status, and the learned Judge after trial has found against the contention of the defendants. It is however clear from this that the defendants were under no doubt that they were being sued in their individual capacity as executants of the promissory note and not merely qua partners in the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas. I do not think therefore that they are entitled in appeal here to contend that the suit is not against them individually but only against the firm. There is no doubt that the very unfortunate and ill-advised application for amendment which aimed at avoiding the plea of "agriculturists" has necessarily resulted in a hornet's nest for the plaintiff. But considering the two-fold prayer (in the prayer clause of the plaint) which are distinct and separate, I am not prepared to hold that the suit is against the firm only. While the learned Advocate for the defendants was entitled to emphasize the frame of the pleadings and the amendment application filed, it cannot be overlooked that the suit is substantially one based on the promissory note, and against the individuals signing it. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the language of pleadings which appear to have been entirely ill-drafted in Gujarati. After all the function of pleadings is to focus the attention of the parties and of the Court to the points in dispute and not to defeat justice. In connection with this it may be stated that Mr. Desai, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff, has frankly stated that he cannot support the latter part of the decree passed by the learned First Class Subordinate Judge, wherein it is stated :

"Decree for plaintiff Rs. 8,120-3-0 costs and future interest at 6 per cent. on Rs. 6,784-13-6 from date of suit against defendants and the firm of Chhaganlal Kalyandas."

Mr. Desai states that he has no objection to these italicized words being deleted from the decree. Though most of this trouble has been caused by the ill-considered amendment, I do not think we can well refuse this request, considering the two separate reliefs asked for in the prayer clause as it yet stands in the plaint. The next point which might be considered is the contention of the defendants that the plaintiff himself was a partner in the firm of Chhaganlal Kalyandas and hence cannot maintain this suit as final accounts have not been taken, and as it was agreed that the amount of this promissory note was to be adjusted in making up the final accounts. The cause of action on the promissory note is entirely independent of the partnership accounts; nor are the parties to this promissory note described anywhere therein as partners of the said firm. A promissory note is a document which confers special and valuable rights on the holder, e. g. by way of presumptions mentioned in the Negotiable Instruments Act, and if the defendants' contention were to be upheld, all these valuable rights arising from the promissory note would have to be entirely brushed aside and destroyed. I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Advocate for the plaintiff has rightly contended that this cannot be done. Assuming for the purposes of argument that the allegation of the defendants that the plaintiff was their partner in the firm of Chhaganlal Kalyandas is in fact correct, there is ample authority to show that even without a final settlement of partnership accounts a partner may, in certain circumstances, such as those in the present case, well sustain an action against his partners and be entitled to a decree. In Venkata Reddi v. Narasayya (1), it was held by Sir Arnold White, C. J. and Abdur Rahim, J.

"In regard to suits by one partner against another for a partial account, the general rule, as applied in India, is that if the account is sought in respect of a matter, which, though arising out of partnership business, or connected with it does not involve the taking of general accounts, the Court will as a rule give the relief applied for."

It may here be noticed in passing that the promissory note sued upon in this case mentioned the amount in annas and pies. and even if this was the result of the adjustment of a part of the partnership account, or even assuming that the plaintiff was a partner, yet the suit on this independent cause of action could well be maintained. Lindley in his Treatise on Partnership, Edn. 10, at p. 653, states :

"Again if one partner gave to his co-partner a bill or note which was in such a form as to bind, not the firm, but the partner who gave it, he might be sued by his co-partner thereon, whatever the state of the accounts between the two might be, and although the bill or note in question had reference to some partnership transaction; for by giving the bill or note, the demand in respect of which it was given was isolated from the general partnership account."

In Ramnath Gagoi v. Pitambar Deb (2), it was held by Mookerjee and Roe, JJ. that an action on the balance of a settled account would not be restrained merely because there were other unsettled accounts between the parties, and at p. 741* in the judgment therein occurs the following passage :

"In this situation, the principle formulated by Lord Cottenham in Rawson v. Samuel (3) applies, viz. that an action for the balance of a settled account would not be restrained merely because there were other unsettled accounts between the parties. In the present case, there are not even cross-demands: the defendant has not chosen to sue the plaintiff for adjustment of the partnership accounts and he cannot invite the Court to assume that the balance of that account would be found to be in his favour. Reference may be made to the earlier decision in Preston v. Strutton (4) where the pendency of an unsettled partnership account, upon which the balance was in dispute, was held to be no ground for an injunction to restrain execution upon a judgment which had been obtained upon a note given for a balance upon a former settlement."

If the contentions of the defendants (in which plaintiff's brother defendant No. 2 joins) to the effect that plaintiff is on the whole a debtor and not a creditor are correct, it was certainly open to them to have filed a suit against the plaintiff for rendition of partnership accounts immediately the plaintiff filed this suit on this promissory note against them. The plaintiff's suit was filed as far back as 1932, and it appears that no suit for partnership accounts has yet been filed by the defenddants against him. Another allegation made by the defendants in their written statement was that a third brother of the plaintiff by name Pasubhai was also a partner in the firm like defendant No. 2, and that he was a necessary party to this suit. It is, I think, the plaintiff's choice which partners of the firm he chooses to proceed against for his claim. This, of course, presupposes that Pasubhai was a partner (though the plaintiff does not admit it), and I hence fail to see how it can be said that Pasubhai was a necessary party to the suit.

Under s. 92, Proviso 3, Evi Act, it is contended by the learned Advocate for defendant No. 1 that his client was entitled to show by evidence that there was a condition agreed to at the time the promissory note was passed, which was a sine qua non for the attaching of liability on this promissory note. Section 92, proviso 3 speaks of the existence of a separate oral agreement, constituting a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under any such contract, grant or disposition of property which may be allowed to be proved. This clearly presupposes to my mind that in a case to which it could be applied the contract, grant or disposition of property itself remains intact, but that the condition precedent pleaded must in its very nature be extraneous to the contract, grant or disposition itself and as agreed must come into existence before the obligation attaches thereunder. Applying that to the facts of the present case, it seems to me that what is pleaded in the written statement to resist the liability on the promissory note is a virtual negation of the promissory note as such, for in effect the written statement states that the promissory note was never to be paid in cash, nor demanded payment of, nor was it to be sued upon, but that the amount thereof was only to be adjusted in the final making up of accounts. It is obvious that, whether this promissory note existed or not, in the taking of accounts the amounts debit and creditable in the partnership accounts would have to be set down and the result found out as to what was due by each partner to the other. It is difficult to see how in this process this promissory note could come in as an instrument which was being enforced or given effect to according to its contents. I am of opinion that the facts pleaded do not aim at proving a condition precedent to the attaching of the legal liability to this document, but lay the axe at the very foundation of it nullifying entirely the effect of the promissory note and its existence. I do not think that the language of s. 92, Proviso 3, can bear such strain, and I therefore agree with the opinion of the trial Judge when he decided Issue No. 6 (c) in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff is not suing in his capacity as partner, nor does he admit that he was a partner. His suit is entirely based on the promissory note which he holds and in which there is no mention of partnership. I am therefore of opinion that the principle embodied in O. XXX, r. 9, Civil P. C., does not apply to the facts of this case. In Maung Kyan Nga v. Arunachalam Pillai (5), it was held by Brown, J. that:

"Where the defendant pleaded that he had given the on-demand promissory note in suit to the plaintiff not for a loan, but for an advanced account of a partnership to be accounted for when the partnership account was gone into, that such a defence cannot be allowed, and that was not a defence of no consideration or a condition precedent to the attaching of an obligation; but an attempt to set off an unliquidated claim against a claim on a promissory note, which is not permissible."

In Vishnu v. Ganesh (6), it was held by Macleod, C. J. who stated (pp. 489-91*):

"The question before us is whether the defendant having passed a promissory note payable on demand in favour of the plaintiff, can be allowed to lead evidence to prove a contemporaneous oral agreement whereby the plaintiff is said to have agreed that he would not present the note, although it was payable on demand, until he had discharged certain incumbrances on the property he had sold to the defendant's brother-in-law."

This question came before the High Court of Calcutta in Ramjibun Serowgy v. Oghore Nath Chatterjee (7). There the defendant gave the plaintiff a promissory note for Rs. 7,000 in full discharge of his debts and all other claims of the plaintiff against him up to that time. It was further agreed, according to the defendant's case, that the plaintiff should not bring any suit on the promissory note until the defendant's share in certain compensation money had been received by him. Sale, J. in giving judgment said (pp. 403, 404†):

"Under the promissory note the engagement is an absolute engagement to pay on demand. The defendant seeks to set up a contemporaneous oral agreement, the effect of which is to qualify or restrict that engagement. The case in Moseley v. Hanford (8) is clear authority to the effect that in England the evidence of such an oral agreement would be inadmissible..... There are numerous other English authorities to the same effect to which I need not refer, inasmuch as the argument for the defendant is not so much that under the English Law the evidence is admissible, but that Proviso 3 to s. 92, Evi. Act, has the effect of altering the English Law.....

Those remarks apply equally well to the case before us."

The facts of the present case are by no means dissimilar, and I am therefore unable to hold that the learned trial Judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion that it was not open to the defendants to lead evidence to prove the arrangement alleged. Besides it is obvious, even if such an arrangement as alleged ever existed, it must have been some time before the execution of the promissory note for it is said that it was passed in pursuance of it. The subsequent written promissory note cannot be altered by any such prior arrangement. The appeal will therefore be dismissed and the words "and the firm of Ohhaganlal Kalyandas" will be deleted from the decree of the lower Court. In view of the fact that most of the trouble has been caused by the ill-considered amendment made by the plaintiff in his plaint, we think he is entitled only to half his cost in this appeal.

N. J. Wadia, J.—I agree.

RANGOON HIGH COURT
Insolvency Case No. 14 of 1930
April 24, 1939

DUNKLEY, J.

In re T. S. N. CHETTYAR FIRM.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909) (Rangoon), s. 7, Proviso—S. 7, scope—If limited only to matters where Official Assignee claims higher title than insolvent—Proviso to s. 7, scope and application.

Section 7, Rang. Insol. Act, is not limited in its scope to matters in which the Official Assignee by the operation of the Insolvency Law claims a higher title than that which the insolvent himself would have had. [p. 46, col. 2.]

Where the Official Assignee, standing in no higher position by reason of the special provisions of the Insolvency Law than the bankrupt himself, seeks to recover a debt which is not admitted, it is a matter of discretion for the Judge sitting in insolvency whether in any given case he should deal with such a claim in the Insolvency Court, or refer it to the machinery of the ordinary Court. 93 Ind. Cas. 834 (1) and 118 Ind. Cas. 506 (2), relied on. [p. 46, col. 1.]

There is nothing in Proviso to s. 7 limiting its application only when the third party has been actually examined under s. 36. But its application is restricted to the two matters arising under sub-s. (4) and (5) of s. 36, that is, under sub-s. (4) the question whether the third party is indebted to the insolvent, or under sub-s. (5) the question whether the third party is in possession of property belonging to the insolvent. Unless all parties agree, if such indebtedness or such possession is denied by the third party, the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court to try the matter is, wholly excluded, and it does not matter whether the denial has been made in the course of examination under s. 36 or at any other time. But sub-s. (5) of s. 36 has in view only the case of property admittedly belonging to the insolvent, and the object of the sub-section is to enable the Official Assignee to discover its whereabouts; it relates to possession only and not to title. Where the ownership of, or title to the property, is in dispute this sub-section has no application, and consequently the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court under s. 7 is not barred in such cases by the proviso to the section. 118 Ind. Cas. 506 (2), dissented from. 135 Ind. Cas. 585 (3) and 172 Ind. Cas. 346 (4), referred to. [p. 47, col. 1.]

Mr. Clark, for the Official Assignee.

Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Respondent (Palaniappa).

Mr. Foucar, (in Petition No. 11)—for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Judgment.—In connexion with the insolvency of the T. S. N. Firm twenty petitions have been filed by the Official Assignee for setting aside certain transfers on various grounds, and declarations that certain immovable properties vest in the Official Assignee as being properties of the insolvent firm divisible among the creditors. These petitions have been numbered serially. In petitions Nos. 1, 8, 9, 11, 12, 15, 19, 4, 5, 14 and 16, Mr. P. K. Basu for A. P. L. Palaniappa Chettiar, and Mr. Foucar for respondents Nos. 1 and 2 in petition No. 11, have taken the objection that either the Insolvency Court has no jurisdiction to hear and decide these petitions, or if it has jurisdiction, then the exercise of that jurisdiction is discretionary and on the facts alleged in the petitions the Insolvency Court ought to decline to exercise jurisdiction and to direct the Official Assignee to prosecute his claims by instituting regular suits in the ordinary Civil Courts having jurisdiction in respect of the questions in dispute in the several petitions, in regard to which objection has been taken to jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court in matters of this kind is conferred by the provisions of s. 7, Rang. Insol. Act, (formerly the Presi. Towns Insol. Act), and the extent of the jurisdiction conferred by that section and the manner of its exercise have been considered in a number of decisions of the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras, and there are numerous decisions of the English Courts under the similar provisions of the Bankruptcy Acts. I am well aware that, according to the English decisions, where the trustee in bankruptcy claims to the property in dispute as against a stranger to the bankruptcy no higher right by reason of the special provisions of the bankruptcy law than the insolvent himself had, the question at issue between the trustee and such third party cannot be tried within the jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Court, and I consider it unnecessary to refer to the decisions on this point.

But it has been pointed out in many decisions that under the provisions of the Rang. Insol. Act the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court in regard to claims by the Official Assignee against third persons is a discretionary jurisdiction; that conditions existing in India and Burma are entirely different to the conditions existing in England, and for this reason in India and Burma the discretion of the Insolvency Judge cannot be fettered by such rigid rules as those imposed by the English Bankruptcy law. The leading cases of the Calcutta and Madras High Courts on this subject are Jnanendra Bala Debi v. Official Assignee of Calcutta (1) and Official Assignee of Madras v. Narasimha Mudaliar (2). Mr. Basu has argued that these decisions are opposed to one another and that in Calcutta the rigid rule of English Law has been adopted, but, in my opinion, that is not so. In my view, the principle of law laid down in both these cases is exactly the same and is correctly enunciated in the last paragraph of the head-note of the Madras case, which reads as follows:

"Where the Official Assignee, standing in no higher position by reason of the special provisions of the Insolvency Law than the bankrupt himself, seeks to recover a debt which is not admitted, it is a matter of discretion for the Judge sitting in insolvency whether in any given case he should deal with such a claim in the Insolvency Court, or refer it to the machinery of the ordinary Courts."

No doubt the application of this principle is divergent in the two Courts, and the Madras High Court in its insolvency jurisdiction is prepared to entertain and decide many disputes between the Official Assignee and strangers to the insolvency which would in the Calcutta High Court be referred to the ordinary Courts for decision,* but this is nothing more than a divergence of practice. It is, as a matter of law, clear that s. 7, Rang. Insol. Act, is not limited in its scope to matters in which the Official Assignee by the operation of the Insolvency Law claims a higher title than that which the insolvent himself would have had. So far as this Court is concerned I am, with the greatest respect, content to adopt and follow the practice of the Calcutta High Court. In Jnanendra Bala Debi v. Official Assignee of Calcutta (1) Rankin, J. said (at pp. 258 and 259*):

"When the Official Assignee made up his mind as a result of his investigation to move the Court to declare that the lady was a mere benamidar for the insolvent and had been so for something like ten years, he had to choose what course he would take. The ordinary course, having regard to the subject-matter and the length of time over which the investigation might have to be carried, would have been to commence a suit against the lady for a declaration that she was a benamidar for the insolvent. But under s. 7, Pres. Towns Insolvency Act, this Court in its insolvency jurisdiction has jurisdiction to determine such a point as that; just in the same way as where a person who carried on a retail business becomes an insolvent in this Court, the Court would have jurisdiction by motion in insolvency to collect debts due to the business by third parties in Tipperah or somewhere else. As a rule, however, that class of proceeding against a mere third person as against whom the Official Assignee claims no higher title than the insolvent's is not brought in the insolvency jurisdiction, and in any ordinary case any such motion brought in that jurisdiction unfairly and unreasonably, would be refused as the learned Judge is in no way obliged in the insolvency jurisdiction to try such a question. I would guard myself from being supposed to lay down that the only proper subjects for such a motion are cases within ss. 55 and 56, Pres. Towns Insol. Act. There are many other cases. There may be cases, for example, where a property is claimed as having been taken by the opposite party from the insolvent after an available act of bankruptcy and it can be successfully claimed if the opposite party cannot bring himself within the protective sections. There may be cases where a transfer can be set aside if it is after an adjudication order. There are cases which come under s. 53, T. P. Act, where the right asserted by the Official Assignee is a right which belongs to creditors as such. It is important that it should be understood, first, that the rule that the Official Assignee should have recourse to this jurisdiction only when he has a higher title than the insolvents is not a rule of law in the sense that the Insolvency Court has not the jurisdiction to entertain such a case and, secondly, that it is not restricted only to ss. 55 and 56. But the rule is well-established if it is not rigid, and it is necessary in fairness to third parties who cannot help their creditors debtors or cestuis qui trustent going insolvent, who may live far from Calcutta, and whose right may be difficult to ascertain apart from a regular suit. It is necessary also in the interests of this Court which cannot undertake in its insolvency jurisdiction to collect debts all over India or to decide on motion all classes of disputes merely because an insolvent or his estate is a party."

With the greatest respect, I am prepared to exercise my discretion in accordance with the rules laid down by Rankin, J. Since that judgment was delivered, a proviso has been added to s. 7, Rang. Insol. Act, in the following terms:

"Provided that, unless all the parties otherwise agree, the power hereby given shall, for the purpose of deciding any matter arising under s. 36 be exercised only in a manner and to the extent provided in that section."

This proviso was considered by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Official Assignee of Madras v. Narasimha Mudaliar (1) and it was held that the proviso applied only when the respondent third party had been summoned and examined under the provisions of s. 36 of the Act. With the greatest respect, I find myself unable, to accept such a narrow interpretation of the proviso. The provisions of the proviso have again been considered by the Madras High Court in Chinnappa Mudali v. Official Assignee of Madras (3) and very recently in Evelyn Popaly v. Official Assignee of Madras (4) and the original decision in Official Assignee of Madras v. Narasimha Mudaliar (2) appears to have been considerably modified. With the greatest respect, I am unable to agree that the proviso applies only when the third party has been actually examined under s. 36, for, I can find nothing in the proviso limiting its application in this manner. But I agree with the decision in Chinnappa Mudali v. Official Assignee of Madras (3) that the application of the proviso is restricted to the two matters arising under sub-ss. (4) and (5) of s. 36, that is, under sub-s. (4) the question whether the third party is indebted to the insolvent, or under sub-s. (5) the question whether the third party is in possession of property belonging to the insolvent. Unless all parties agree, if such indebtedness or such possession is denied by the third party, the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court to try the matter is, in my opinion, wholly excluded, and it does not matter whether the denial has been made in the course of examination under s. 36 or at any other time. But sub-s. 5 of s. 36 has in view only the case of property admittedly belonging to the insolvent, and the object of the sub-section is to enable the Official Assignee to discover its whereabouts; it relates to possession only and not to title. Where the ownership of, or title to the property, is in dispute this sub-section has no application, and consequently the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court under s. 7 is not barred in such cases by the proviso to the section.

Applying these principles to the facts of the present petitions, the insolvent firm is the T. S. N. Firm. The partners of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm of Pyapon were also partners of the T. S. N. Firm, and hence all the assets of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm have vested in the Official Assignee. A. P. L. Palaniappa, who has sought to disguise his identity under various Vilasams was at all material times the agent of T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. Both immediately before and after the adjudication of the T. S. N. Firm, he in his capacity as agent of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm has dealt in the most extraordinary way with the assets of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. A one-man firm, which adopted the Vilasam of M. R. M. S. was brought into existence for the purpose of receiving transfers of the assets of T. S. M. R. K. R. M. from Palaniappa and then re-transferring them to nominees of Palaniappa, with the object of disguising the real nature of the transactions. These facts have already been found in previous judgments of this Court and the Court of Appeal on appeal from this Court. In all the petitions now under consideration, Palaniappa is a respondent. In all except four he is the only respondent. In two of these four the other respondent is his brother-in-law and in one the other respondent is his wife. In the remaining petition (No. 11) there are three other respondents. One is Palaniappa's son and one is his brother-in-law; the third has not come forward to defend his interest. Palaniappa is intimately connected with this insolvency, and although the other respondents are not directly connected with it, their near relationship to Palaniappa shows that they were not, in fact, strangers to the insolvency, and in all these four petitions the affidavits supporting the petitions state that Palaniappa has remained throughout in possession of the properties in question, and this allegation has not been denied, and therefore the inference arises that the other respondents are the mere nominees of Palaniappa.

It is unnecessary for me to set out specifically the averments of each of the petitions now under consideration. I have considered each one separately and have satisfied myself that in no case is the jurisdiction of this Court barred by the provisions of the proviso to s. 7. In only two cases, namely petitions Nos. 8 and 15, is there any possibility of doubt on this point. Petition No. 8 is a simple claim that Palaniappa is in possession of property belonging to the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. Palaniappa admits possession of the property but denies that it has ever belonged to the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. Hence the dispute is as to the title to this property, and therefore does not come within sub-s. (5) of s. 36 of the Act. In Petition No. 15, it is averred that Palaniappa purchased certain property at a court-sale in execution of a personal decree obtained on a mortgage and that this mortgage was the property of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. Palaniappa has stated in his objection that he purchased the property in revenue recovery proceedings and that appears to be the case. The Official Assignee should consider whether he ought not to amend this petition in this sense before it comes on for trial. However the question at issue is whether Palaniappa's purchase, either at an auction-sale conducted in execution of a decree or at an auction conducted for the recovery of land revenue does not enure for the benefit of the estate of T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm and therefore it is not a matter arising under sub-s. (5) of s. 36. Hence it is clear that this Insolvency Court has jurisdiction in respect of all the petitions and the point for decision is whether in the exercise of my discretion I should try and decide the issues raised by the several petitions or whether I should direct that all or any of them should be tried and decided by the ordinary Courts.

On one general ground I have no doubt as to what the answer to this question ought to be. Palaniappa as agent of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm was acting in a fiduciary capacity towards the firm and was bound to account to the firm with the utmost strictness for all his dealings with the firm's property. He is bound to account to the Official Assignee with equal strictness as the Official Assignee has become vested with all the assets of the firm, and he must account in these insolvency proceedings and nowhere else. It would be monstrous if the Official Assignee in order to obtain a proper accounting from the agent of an insolvent and to investigate his dealings with his principal's property, were obliged to undergo the extreme inconvenience and incur the great expense of filing a series of suits against the agent in various Civil Courts. Clearly such an account can be taken and such an investigation can be made most conveniently and expeditiously in the Insolvency Court and ought to be done here. In my opinion, these petitions afford striking examples of the kind of exceptions to the ordinary rule which Raukin, J. must have had in mind when in Jnanendra Bala Debi v. Official Assignee of Calcutta (1), he said (at p. 259*):

"It is important that it should be understood first, that the rule that the Official Assignee should have recourse to this jurisdiction only when he has a higher title than the insolvent's, is not a rule of law in the sense that the Insolvency Court has not the jurisdiction to entertain such a case and secondly, that it is not restricted only to ss. 55 and 56."

In four of the petitions now under consideration, there are of course other respondents, but they are so intimately connected with A. P. L. Palaniappa as to raise the inference that they are his nominees and as it appears that even in these four cases Palaniappa is in possession of the properties concerned, the insertion of their names in certain transfers cannot be a sufficient ground for the exercise of my discretion in a different way. A further point has been raised on behalf of A. P. L. Palaniappa in connection with petitions Nos. 4, 5, 14 and 16; and that is that the properties concerned in these petitions originally belonged to the T. S. Firm, and that the original transfers by the T. S. Firm have been set aside by this Court, in previous judgments in this insolvency, only to the extent of the interest of the partners of T. S. M. R. K. R. M. in the T. S. Firm, and on this foundation an elaborate argument based on the law of partnership has been constructed. This point has, in my opinion, already been dealt with and answered in the judgment of my brother Braund, dated December 15, 1937 and in the judgment of the Court of Appeal on appeal therefrom (Miscellaneous Appeal No. 5 of 1938). In the course of his judgment Braund, J. said:

"The T. S. N. Firm took over from the T. S. Firm all those assets relating to that part of its business which was conducted in Rangoon, India, and Malay States, while the new Pyapon firm took over all the other assets of the T. S. Firm with one exception. It was in short a splitting up of the T. S. Firm into two parts and an apportionment of the assets between the two groups which emerged out of the T. S. Firm."

In his evidence in connection with the matters then before the Court Palaniappa said :

"I was connected with T. S. Firm of Pyapon for five or six years. After I was in T. S. Firm for three years it became T. S. M. R. K. R. M. T. S. business continued until it became T. S. M. R. K. R. M. T. S. was carrying on and T. S. M. R. K. R. M. was also carrying on; one did not replace the other. T. S. only existed for the purpose of winding up."

It is common ground that Palaniappa was the duly constituted agent of both firms. Later in his evidence he said "I renewed the mortgages in favour of T. S. Firm in the name of T. S. M. R. K. R. M. and put them in T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm." I myself was a member of the Appellate Bench which heard the appeal from the judgment of my brother Braund, and in the course of my judgment I said :

"The T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm took over as a going concern the T. S. business at Pyapon, and all the assets of the latter business were shown as assets in the books of T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. The agent who, as I have said, had a full power of attorney from the T. S. Firm, was obliged to deal with the properties remaining in the name of the T. S. Firm in accordance with the orders of the partners of the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. The T. S. Firm ceased to have any beneficial interest in these properties, the beneficial interest in which was vested in the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm; they in fact, constituted the assets of the latter firm."

It is therefore clear that when the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. came into existence the T. S. Firm ceased to exist except in name. In regard to the properties of which the T. S. Firm still continued to hold the legal title, that firm held such title as bare trustees for the T. S. M. R. K. R. M. Firm. The beneficial interest in all such properties belonged to the latter firm and has vested in the Official Assignee. Hence the whole of the interest originally held by the T. S. Firm in these properties has vested in the Official Assignee, and therefore, in my opinion, on this ground there is no substance in the point which has been raised. The plea in bar of jurisdiction of this Insolvency Court therefore fails in respect of all the petitions and the petitions will now be heard and decided on the merits by this Court in due course. The costs of the trial of this issue in regard to jurisdiction, which has been raised by A. P. L. Palaniappa, must in any event be paid by him to the Official Assignee; Advocate's fee twenty gold mohurs.

Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 9—Multifarious suit resulting in decree—Defect is considered to have been waived—Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1934), Sch. III, Art. 6—Execution held governed by Art. 6—"Decree under this Act"—Suit if should be framed in accordance with provisions of Act.

Under O. I, r. 9, Civil P. C., suits are not to be dismissed for misjoinder or non-joinder of parties and in case of misjoinder of causes, of action the Court can in proper cases call on the plaintiff to amend his plaint by limiting the relief claimed to what he is entitled to in respect of one cause of action so as to avoid embarrassment. When this procedure is followed the plaintiff can of course bring a separate suit in respect of the other cause or causes of action. But when this course is not taken nothing turns on the fact that it might have been taken. Once a multifarious suit has been allowed to proceed and has resulted in a decree, the defect is considered to have been waived and is irrelevant.

Sixteen annas proprietor instituted a suit for sixteen annas rents of two tenures recorded under different khewats held by different persons. The suit was decreed separately in respect of each of the khewats and separate decree for less than Rs. 500 was passed in respect of each khewat :

Held, that the decree-holder held two separate decrees each of them for amounts less than Rs. 500 and therefore execution in respect of either of them was governed by Art. 6, Sch. III, Bihar Ten. Act. Hriday Nath Das v. Krishna Prasad (1), 36 Ind. Cas. 3-8 (2) and 119 Ind. Cas. 618 (3), explained.

A suit need not at its institution be framed in accordance with the provisions of the Bihar Ten. Act, so that it could result in a decree under that Act. 91 Ind. Cas. 478 (4), distinguished.

At from the appellate order of the Additional Sub-Judge, Arrah, dated March 27, 1939.

Mr. D. N. Varma, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Mahabir Prasad and A. B. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtors against whom execution was taken. In the Munsif's Court they objected that the execution was barred by Art. 6 of Sch. III, Bihar Ten. Act, and this objection succeeded, the application to execute having been presented more than three years after the passing of the decree. On appeal the Subordinate Judge thought that limitation was governed not by Art. 6 of the said schedule but by Art. 182 of the Schedule to the Lim. Act. He, on this view, considered that the question whether the execution was time-barred would depend on whether there had been an intermediate application to execute the decree at a date which would save limitation under Art. 182.

Against that order this appeal is presented, and it is contended that the limitation for this application to execute the decree is that prescribed by Art. 6, Sch. III to the Bihar Ten. Act which cannot be extended beyond the period of three years in consequence of the presentation of an intermediate application to execute the decree. It is necessary to state the particulars of the suit and of the decree passed. The plaintiff, who is the sixteen annas proprietor of the estate, instituted a suit claiming the sixteen annas rents of two tenures for four years. These tenures are those recorded in khewats Nos. 2 and 4 of the Record of Rights, khewat No. 2 bearing an annual rent of about Rs. 47 and khewat No. 4 the annual rent of Rs. 69. The persons interested in khewat No. 2 were not identical with those interested in khewat No. 4, for the holders of khewat No. 2 were defendants Nos. 1 to 12 of the suit and the holders of khewat No. 4 were defendants Nos. 1 to 9 only. There was also a claim in respect of some jagir and balagan lands. The suit was defended and an objection taken on the ground of multifariousness. By compromise between the parties it was settled that the suit be dismissed as regards the jagir and other miscellaneous items claimed but be decreed separately in respect of each of the two khewats with the result that the decree-holder was given a decree for Rs. 204-4-6 against the defendants Nos. 1 to 12 in respect of khewat No. 2 and another decree for Rs. 309-11-9 against defendants Nos. 1 to 9 in respect of khewat No. 4. The Munsif thought that the judgment-creditor should be deemed to hold two separate decrees, each of them for amounts less than Rs. 500, so that Art. 6 was applicable. The Subordinate Judge thought that the decrees were money decrees and not rent decrees and also that they are to be treated as a single decree. In my opinion, the Subordinate Judge was in error in both these points. He has drawn a wrong inference from Hriday Nath Das v. Krishna Prasad (1) the true effect of which decision can best be gathered by reading it in connexion with subsequent decision of the same High Court and of the Privy Council in Dhirendra Nath v. Nischintapore Co., 36 Ind. Cas. 398 (2) and Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Satya Bhusan Das (3) respectively. The case in Hriday Nath v. Krishna Prasad (1) decided this, that if a single decree is obtained against more tenancies than one, and if those tenancies are put up to sale in execution of such a decree, the sale will not carry the special consequences which the Ten. Act attaches to the sale of a tenancy in execution of a decree for its own arrears. The consequences of the sale will be as against incumbrancers nothing more than the consequences of a sale in execution of a money decree. The Subordinate Judge appears to have read into this decision more than the Judges decided.

In the next case, Dhirendra Nath v. Nischintapore Co., 36 Ind. Cas. 398, (2) a single suit had been instituted by the plaintiffs for rent claimed from the defendants in respect of three distinct tenancies held under three separate contracts. It is clear that in such a suit if a decree was obtained for the entire sum due, such decree could not be executed as a decree for rent against any of the tenures. This is in accordance with what was settled by the case I have previously cited. So at the instance of the plaintiffs a decree was drawn up which specified the amount realizable by the sale of each of the three tenancies respectively. It was held that the position resulting was precisely the same as if the plaintiffs had brought three distinct suits for rent against the defendants, one in respect of each tenancy, and it was said to make no difference that instead of being drawn up on three different sheets of paper the three separate decrees had been drawn up on one sheet of paper. Each decree, it was said, carried the consequence that it could be executed as a rent decree against the tenancy in default, and it was further held that for the purpose of limitation also it was to be considered that there were three separate decrees. In the Privy Council case in Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Satya Bhusan Das (3) their Lordships had to consider the effect of a sale of a number of separate tenures in execution of a single decree with particular reference to the right of the auction-purchaser to annul incumbrances consisting of sub-tenures. Their Lordships held that it could not be said that each of the tenures had been sold for its own arrears, that the sub-tenure-holders were entitled each to save from sale the tenure under which he held by paying up the arrears of that tenure, and it would defeat the objects of the Act if several tenures could be lumped together in one order for sale. Thus, in deciding the case before them the decision of their Lordships was in agreement with that in Hridoy Nath Das v. Krishna Prasad (1) and other decisions of the Calcutta High Court. But their Lordships went on to comment on a view that had been expressed in this country that when a plaintiff has joined in one suit claims in respect of more than one tenure such a suit cannot result in a decree or decrees to sell the tenures separately so as to give the purchaser power to annul the incumbrances on each separate tenure. Their Lordships did not accept this view and pointed out that there was nothing in the Civil P. C. or the Ten. Act to prevent the decrees and orders from being so moulded as to enable their provisions to apply distributively to the separate holdings in respect of which the suit is brought. "It would be a misfortune," said their Lordships,

"to find a system of procedure so rigid as to lead to an illogical and inconvenient result and their Lordships are not prepared to hold that this difficulty exists. But obviously if the original suit is brought in respect of separate tenures the plaintiff must see that the subsequent process takes such a form that the tenures are in fact sold separately."

Reading these three decisions together, it is clear that the result of what was done in the original suit was to bring into existence two separate decrees, one against defendants Nos. 1 to 12 for the rent due to the plaintiff in respect of khewat No. 2 and another against defendants Nos. 1 to 9 for the rent due in respect of khewat No. 4. Each of these decrees was executable as a rent decree in accordance with the provisions of the Ten. Act; each of them is for a sum of less than Rs. 500; and I have no doubt that execution of either of them is governed by Art. 6 of Sch. III to the Ten. Act. It has been argued for the respondent that the nature of the decree depends on the frame of the suit and that this having been a suit for the rent of more than one tenure was a suit in which only a money decree could be passed. Indeed, it has been said that the suit was multifarious and was liable to be dismissed on this ground. As to that I must observe that under O. I,

r. 9, Civil P. C., suits are not to be dismissed for misjoinder or non-joinder of parties and that in case of misjoinder of causes of action the Court can in proper cases call on the plaintiff to amend his plaint by limiting the relief claimed to what he is entitled to in respect of one cause of action so as to avoid embarrassment. When this procedure is followed the plaintiff can of course bring a separate suit in respect of the other cause or causes of action. But when this course was not taken nothing turns on the fact that it might have been taken. Once a multifarious suit has been allowed to proceed and has resulted in a decree, the defect is considered to have been waived and is irrelevant.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad also invited me to hold that unless a suit was at its institution framed in accordance with the provisions of the Ben. Ten. Act, it could not result in a decree under that Act. He relied on Mahendra Nath v. Ashutosh Pradhan, 91 Ind. Cas. 478 (4) but the decision was on facts very different from those before me and does not seem to be applicable here. If it were applicable, I would point out that it was pronounced before the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Prafulla Nath Tagore v. Satya Bhusan Das (3), and in so far as it might lead to results at variance with the decision of their Lordships it could not be regarded as good law. The decision of the Munsif was correct and that of the Subordinate Judge erroneous. The appeal is allowed and the decision of the Munsif restored. The appellants will have their costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 8 (c) as amended in Bengal—Suit for declaration that plaintiffs were entitled to perform religious ceremonies every year in court-yards of defendant's palace—Enquiry under s. 8 (c), if justified.

The plaintiffs instituted a suit against a Ruling Chief for a declaration to the effect that they were entitled to perform certain religious ceremonies on the occasion of the Moharrum every year in one of the court-yards attached to the defendant's palace and they also asked for a perpetual injunction prohibiting the defendant from interfering with the plaintiffs by alleging his own title:

Held, that there was no difficulty in forming an estimate as to the extent of the loss which would be incurred by the defendant if the plaintiffs succeeded in their suit. Obviously in a case of this sort the extent to which the defendant's property will be depreciated should be taken to correspond to the value of the benefit which the plaintiffs seek to obtain if they succeed in their suit. From this point of view, therefore, there was objective standard of valuation which would justify the Court in holding an enquiry under s. 8 (c), Court Fees Act. Gahar Ali Sikdar v. Nesar Ali Sikdar (1), referred to.

C. Rule issued from an order of the Second Court of Munsif, and First Court of Munsif at Krishnagar (Nadia), dated January 16, 1939.

Dr. Basak, Dr. Pal and Mr. Shyamapada Majumdar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Abdul Ali and C. F. Ali, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—In this case the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the Maharaja Kumar of Nadia for a declaration to the effect that they were entitled to perform certain religious ceremonies on the occasion of the Moharrum every year in one of the court-yards attached to the defendant's palace at Krishnagar and they also asked for a perpetual injunction prohibiting the defendant from interfering with the plaintiffs by alleging his own title. The suit appears to have been one under ss. 74 (O) and (D), Court Fees Act, and the relief sought by the plaintiffs was valued by them at Rs. 165. The defendant contended that the suit had been grossly undervalued and he maintained that, according to a proper valuation, the relief sought by the plaintiffs should have been valued at more than ten thousand rupees. The question was considered by the learned Munsif as to whether or not he should hold an enquiry under s. 8 (C), Court Fees Act, but he decided not to adopt this course as he considered that there was no objective standard by which the requisite valuation could be made. In support of his conclusion he relied on a decision of this Court in Gahar Ali Sikdar v. Nesar Ali Sikdar (1). In that case it was held that ordinarily the objective standard of valuation should be regarded as the value of the benefit which the plaintiff sought to obtain if he succeeded in his suit. Having regard however, to the circumstances of that particular case, it was decided that no useful purpose would be served by holding an enquiry under s. 8 (C), Court Fees Act. The case with which we are now dealing however appears to be essentially one in which an enquiry under s. 8 (C), Court Fees Act, might be usefully held. In this case there can be no possible doubt that if the plaintiffs succeed in their suit, the value of a considerable portion of the Maharaja Kumar's palace at Krishnagar will seriously depreciate. It should be possible to estimate the extent of this depreciation by taking expert evidence of valuers or of other persons acquainted with the value of property at Krishnagar, and there should therefore be no difficulty in forming an estimate as to the extent of the loss which would be incurred by the Maharaja Kumar if the plaintiffs succeeded in their suit. Obviously in a case of this sort the extent to which the defendant's property will be depreciated should be taken to correspond to the value of the benefit which the plaintiffs seek to obtain if they succeed in their suit. From this point of view therefore I do not consider that the learned Munsif is correct in holding that there was no objective standard of valuation which would justify him in holding an enquiry under s. 8 (C), Court Fees Act.

Having regard to the considerations mentioned above, this Rule must be made absolute with costs. The order of the learned Munsif dated January 6, 1939 is set aside and it is directed that he should hold the requisite enquiry under s. 8 (C), Court Fees Act. The hearing-fee of this Rule is assessed at two gold mohurs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 22—Judgment-debtor dying after issue of sale proclamation—Execution, if can be continued—Legal representatives entering appearance—Notice to them under r. 22, necessity of.

When in execution of a money decree after the issue of the sale proclamation the judgment-debtor dies, the decree-holder is not at liberty to proceed with the execution against a dead man. Execution cannot be continued against the estate of a dead person without bringing on the record his legal representatives. While substituting them the Court should issue notice under O. XXI, r. 22 against them, and their objections, whatever they may have to urge, should be heard before the execution proceeding can be further continued against them. 162 Ind. Cas. 156 (1), relied on.

And the fact that the legal representatives enter appearance and file objections will not obviate the necessity of the notice because their appearance is in their personal capacity as owner of property sought to be taken in execution of a decree not passed against them and they could not be held to be judgment-debtors until the decree-holder has obtained a substitution of their names in his execution petition. 24 Ind. Cas. 304 (3) and 138 Ind. Cas. 99 (4), relied on, 117 Ind. Cas. 648 (2), distinguished.

O. A. from the appellate order of the District Judge, Saran, dated November 30, 1938.

Messrs. S. K. Mitra and M. Rahman, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, Jaleshwar Prasad and Thakur A. D. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Chatterji, J.—The respondents obtained a money decree against one Zafarullah. In execution of that decree in Execution Case No. 54 of 1935, Zafarullah was arrested. When brought to Court he intimated that he would file an application for adjudication as an insolvent and in accordance with the provisions of s. 55 (4), Civil P. O., one Razaq Mian stood surety for him. In the surety bond Razaq hypothecated certain properties belonging to him. Zafarullah did file an application for insolvency, but it was dismissed by the District Judge. On appeal to the High Court, the order was confirmed. Soon after the disposal of that insolvency case by the District Judge, the decree-holder filed on March 5, 1937 an application for execution of the decree against Razaq, the surety. On April 5, 1937, notice under O. XXI, r. 22, was issued on Razaq fixing April 26, 1937 for his appearance. On April 26, 1937, Razaq appeared and filed an objection mainly on the ground that the application for execution was not maintainable against him as the provisions of law had not been complied with. On the same day the Court issued a notice against Razaq calling upon him to produce the judgment-debtor and also to show cause why the execution should not proceed against him. On May 22, 1937, the date fixed in the notice, Razaq neither produced the judgment-debtor nor showed cause; but he filed an application for time and it appears that time was allowed and the case was adjourned to June 12, 1937.

On June 12, the Court issued an order of attachment of the properties mentioned in the security bond. In the meantime, the execution proceedings were stayed pending the disposal of the High Court appeal arising out of the insolvency proceeding. As the execution proceeding was stayed, Razaq did not want to proceed with his objection which was dismissed for non-prosecution on September 21, 1937. After the High Court appeal was disposed of, the decree-holder made an application to continue the execution proceeding which was allowed. On May 4, 1938, after the sale proclamation had been issued Razaq died. Thereafter, on May 17, 1938 his legal representatives appeared and filed an objection stating that the execution could not proceed against them. This objection was allowed by the Subordinate Judge on June 24, 1938. He held that there were certain irregularities in the execution proceeding and in face of them he would not continue the execution. Against that order the decree-holder filed an appeal to the District Judge who allowed it. He took the view that the liability of Razaq under the surety bond having been admittedly incurred, the decree-holder was entitled to proceed in execution against his properties. He further held that it was not necessary in the execution proceeding to substitute the heirs of Razaq or to issue any notice against them. Against this decision this miscellaneous second appeal has been preferred by the heirs of Razaq.

Three points are urged in this appeal; first, that the execution which was started on March 5, 1937 against Razaq was not maintainable; because the requisite notices were not served on him; second, that the decree-holder should have, after the death of Razaq, substituted his legal representatives under s. 50, Civil P. O., and issued notices against them under O. XXI, r. 22; third, that the decree-holder could not proceed at the same time both against the surety and the judgment-debtor. In connexion with this last point, I ought to have mentioned that when the Subordinate Judge allowed the objection of these appellants, the decree-holder prayed for arrest of the judgment-debtor which was granted.

I will deal with the second point first.

Indeed the execution proceeding had already reached the stage of the sale proclamation having been issued when Razaq died; but it by no means follows that the decree-holder was at liberty to proceed with the execution against a dead man. The learned District Judge seems to be of opinion that in the circumstances the execution proceeding can be continued without substituting the heirs of Razaq. I am unable to support this view of the law. Suppose, in an execution proceeding, the judgment-debtor dies after attachment and issue of sale proclamation and the property is sold without substituting his heirs, who in that case will exercise the statutory right conferred by O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., and make the necessary application? A dead man is on the record and his legal representatives may have no knowledge of the proceedings. On principle, I do not think the Court can sell the property of a dead man. I am therefore of opinion that the decree-holder before he could proceed with the execution should have substituted the heirs of Razaq. In this connexion reference may be made to the Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court in Kanchamalai Pathar v. Shahaji Rajah Sahib (1) where though the facts were dissimilar, the principle was laid down that execution proceeding could not be continued against the estate of a dead man without bringing on the record his legal representatives. What happened there was that after the sale proclamation the judgment-debtor died and the sale was held without substituting his legal representatives. Subsequently they made an application to set aside the sale. It was held by their Lordships that the sale was void and was liable to be set aside at the instance of the legal representatives. The proper order therefore to be passed in the present case is that the decree-holder should, in order that he may continue the execution proceeding, substitute in the place of deceased Razaq his legal representatives. While substituting them the Court should issue notice under O. XXI, r. 22 against them, and their objections, whatever they may have to urge, should be heard before the execution proceeding can be further continued against them.

On behalf of the respondents, Mr. Jaleshwar Prasad contends that inasmuch as the legal representatives already entered appearance in the execution proceeding, there was no necessity of issuing a notice under O. XXI, r. 22. He has relied on a decision of this Court in Fakhrul Islam v. Bhubaneshwari Kuer (2) where a notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was in fact issued but not served and the legal representatives entered appearance and filed objections. It was held that no fresh notice under O. XXI, r. 23 was necessary. That case is quite distinguishable from the facts of the present case. It has been held by the Privy Council in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das (3) and also by this Court in Smith v. Kailash Chandra (4) that the issue of a notice under O. XXI, r. 22 unless the Court dispenses with it, is necessary to give jurisdiction to the Court to execute the decree.

In this view it is not necessary to deal with the other objections because when the legal representatives, the appellants, have been substituted and been served with notices they will be at liberty to urge their objections and they will be dealt with according to law. I would therefore allow the appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and direct that the Subordinate Judge do proceed with the execution in accordance with law giving opportunity to the decree-holder to substitute in the place of the deceased Razaq his legal representatives, the present appellants. In the circumstances the parties should bear their own costs throughout. I may mention that the attachment that has already been effected of the properties of Razaq should continue so long as the present execution proceeding is to last.

Rowland, J.—I agree. The case illustrates the difficulties that arise out of attempts to take short cuts in matters of procedure. The correct procedure for the initiation of proceedings against the surety was first to call on him to produce the judgment-debtor; next on his failure to do so to call on him to show cause against forfeiture and execution; next on failure to show cause to the satisfaction of the Court to obtain an order of the Court directing execution to proceed against the person and properties of the surety. The correct procedure after the death of Razaq was to substitute his heirs in the execution proceeding and obtain the leave of the Court to continue the execution against them; thereafter to serve them with notices under O. XXI, r. 22 and on their appearance the Court after hearing and determining any objections that they might make, would permit or disallow the continuance of the execution. When the heirs of Razaq appeared in this case they seem to have appeared in their personal capacity as owners of property sought to be taken in execution of a decree not passed against them. They were not yet persons who had taken Razaq's place as judgment-debtors, a position which would not be theirs until the decree-holder had obtained substitution of their names in his execution petition. The Subordinate Judge's order seems to have been understood by the parties as meaning that the execution could not proceed against the heirs of Razaq though the point he had to decide was that the sale could not be held so long as no representative of Razaq was on the record. In that view he was certainly right and the District Judge was in error. Some colour is lent to the view of law taken by the District Judge by a decision in Doraiswami v. Chidambaram Pillai (5) where it seems to have been held that a sale of the effects of a deceased judgment-debtor was merely irregular and not illegal. But this decision was overruled by the Full Bench of the same Court in Kanchamalai Pathar v. Shahaji Rajah Sahib (1) a decision based on the Privy Council authority in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das (3) which was interpreted in a similar sense in this Court in Smith v. Kailash Chandra (4). The view taken by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court was that such a sale was void and not merely voidable. Such a sale cannot proceed.

When the execution case is properly constituted by bringing heirs of Razaq on the record, the time will come for them as his representatives to raise objections, if any, as to the result of the departure from the regular order of procedure in the matter of the initiation of execution proceedings against Razaq, and for the Court to consider those objections.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Goods of judgment-debtor attached and kept in premises occupied by judgment-debtor as lessee, in possession of Nazir—Lessor, if can claim rent for period during which goods were in his premises as part of costs of realization out of sale proceeds.

Where the goods attached by the creditors have continued to remain in possession of the Nazir in the premises which were in the occupation of the judgment-debtors as lessees, and the lease has not been terminated, the relationship between the lessor and the judgment-debtors as lessor and lessees continues unaffected and there is no privity either of contract or of estate between the lessor and the Nazir. The lessor, however, is entitled to claim rent for the period during which the attached goods were kept on the premises as part of the costs of the realization to be deducted from the sale proceeds before distribution to the judgment-creditors is made under s. 73, Civil P. O. It is claimed that this amount is payable to the applicants under s. 73, Civil P. O.

Mr. Dingomal Narainsing, for the Creditors.

Mr. Balkrishen H. Lulla, for the Debtors.

Order.—This is an application by Messrs. Nusserwanjee & Co. for an order of this Court directing payment to them of a sum of Rs. 981 as rent for the occupation of their premises during the period August 4, 1938 to June 9, 1939 out of the sale proceeds of the judgment-debtors' goods now in Court. The rent for this period during which the attached goods of the judgment-debtors were kept after the attachment in the premises, is claimed as part of the costs of the realization to be deducted from the sale proceeds before distribution to the judgment-creditors is made under s. 73, Civil P. O. It is claimed that this amount is payable to the applicants under s. 73 and under Chap. VIII, r. 11 (p. 132) of the Rules of this Court. I have also been referred to the order passed by me in Misc. No. 82 of 1938 which was subsequently upheld in appeal.

It may be mentioned that there are numerous decrees and execution applications against these same judgment-debtors the proprietors of a concern known as the Royal Toyland which consisted of a toy shop in occupation of certain premises, leased from the applicants. The goods in this shop in their entirety were first attached on August 4, 1938. These goods continued to remain in the same premises, in the possession of the Nazir until they were sold by the Court in execution, and vacant possession of these premises was handed over by the Nazir to the applicants on June 7, 1939. It may further be mentioned that no steps were taken by the judgment-debtors or by the applicants at any time before June 7, 1939 to terminate the existing lease. The applicants had however addressed certain letters to the Nazirs of the attaching Courts demanding rent from them for the occupation of the premises. This claim of the applicants is objected to by Mr. Lulla who appears on behalf of some of the judgment-creditors. He contends that this payment cannot be properly ordered under r 11 or s. 73 and an elaborate and somewhat subtle argument has been addressed to me on the point.

Mr. Lulla admits that in cases where the Nazir acting under the orders of the Court engages any premises for the custody of property attached the rent for the premises so engaged by him would be payable as costs of realization out of the sale proceeds of the property attached before distribution could take place. In such cases, he argues the liability to pay the rent to the landlord could properly be said to have been incurred by the Nazir, and the landlord could properly be said to be entitled to receive the rent from the Nazir. He points out that in such a case there would be a privity of contract as well as of estate between the Nazir and the landlord. But, he argues, the position was a very different one in the present case, where the goods attached continued to remain in the premises which were in the occupation of the judgment-debtors as lessees, and as this lease had not been terminated the relationship between the applicants and the judgment-debtors as lessors and lessees continued unaffected. He contends therefore that the obligation to pay the rent to the applicants lay throughout exclusively on the judgment-debtors. There was no privity either of contract or of estate between the applicants and the Nazir and the applicants did not at any time acquire any legally enforceable claim against the Nazir. As the applicants therefore had no claim which they could enforce against the Nazir, it is argued that the Nazir could not be said to have incurred any liability to the applicants; and in the absence of any such liability being incurred in law, the rent could not be said to be a part of the costs actually incurred by the Nazir; nor could the applicants be held to be entitled to receive the amount from the Nazir as costs incurred by him.

In reply to this argument, Mr. Dingomal for the applicants insists that there was in this case a privity both of contract and of estate between the Nazir and the applicants. He argues that from the date of the attachment the actual possession of the premises was not that of the judgment-debtors but of the Nazir. This, he argues, was not the result of an act of trespass, but occurred admittedly with the knowledge and continued with the permission of the applicants. Relying on the cases, Gobindram Uttamchand v. Mohamad Hussain (1) and Kunhanujan v. Anjeli (2) Mr. Dingomal argues that persons in actual occupation were liable to owners of premises for rent, and further that such occupation created a privity of estate between the landlord and the occupier. He further argues that from the circumstances and the conduct of the parties this Court ought to infer that there existed an implied contract under which the Nazir from the date of the attachment was to be liable to the landlord for rent. He also argued that under such circumstances the parties should be regarded as having assented to an assignment of the lease to the Nazir from the date of attachment, and then the law admittedly was that an assignment of a lease resulted in a privity of estate vesting in the assignee.

I am not able to accept Mr. Dingomal's argument that in this case there was a privity between the applicants and the Nazir. The attachment did not in any manner affect the existing relationship between the applicants and the judgment-debtors as lessors and lessees. The Nazir had no authority in law either to disclaim or to adopt the lease granted to the judgment-debtors and had done neither, and the privities of the judgment-debtors did not by the act of attachment, carried out by the Nazir vest in the Nazir in the manner in which such rights and obligations vest in the Official Receiver by a vesting order under the Insol. Act. On the other hand, although I am unable to accept Mr. Dingomal's argument, and although I am prepared for the purposes of this application to assume that there was no privity of any kind between the applicants and the Nazir, I do not think that the decision of this application in any way depends upon this conclusion or that this conclusion prevents me from granting the applicant's application.

(1) A I R 1925 Sind 296; 87 Ind. Cas. 802.

(2) 17 M 296.

Section 73, Civil P. C. permits costs of realization to be deducted from assets held by a Court before such assets are distributed among judgment-creditors and r. 11 empowers the Court to require judgment-creditors to pay such sums as in its opinion are necessary for the custody of attached property at any place either at the place where the property was attached or elsewhere. The simple question here is therefore whether the sum claimed by the applicants was or was not necessary for the custody of the property while it was attached. There can be no question in this case that it was. Although under the terms of the lease the judgment-debtors remained liable to the applicants, the rent for the period in question, nonetheless was a sum which had in fact necessarily been incurred for the custody of the property during the period it was attached by the Court and as such was a part of the costs of realization. It is obviously because attachments are made and subsist at the instance and for the benefit of judgment-creditors, and because it is equitable for all parties that such costs should be paid out of the proceeds of the goods attached, that Courts are empowered to direct payments of sums so incurred even when incurred by judgment-debtors out of the assets before distribution. It makes no difference whether the goods are kept at the premises in the occupation of the judgment-debtors, or whether they are placed for custody in other premises rented by the Nazir. Thus, although perhaps, apart from s. 73, only the judgment-debtors may be liable in law to pay the amount claimed to the applicants, and the Nazir may not have incurred any liability legally enforceable against him at all, the equitable course is that this sum should be ordered to be paid to the applicants, as can clearly be done under s. 73, out of the amount now in Court, and I order accordingly and grant this application.

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 13(a), (b).—Mortgage suit against minor daughter of deceased mortgagor in Osmanabad Court.—Daughter's husband appointed guardian ad litem but not appearing.—Court appointing its nazir as guardian ad litem and deciding case on merits.—Decree for sale passed giving right to mortgagee to apply for personal decree if sale proceeds were insufficient.—Suit by mortgagee for personal decree in Court in British India.—Defendant held, could get benefit of cl. (a) and not of cl. (b) of exceptions to s. 13.

The plaintiffs filed a mortgage suit against the minor daughter of the deceased mortgagor in the Osmanabad Court (Nizam's State) to recover the amount due under the mortgage deed by the sale of the mortgaged property and the balance out of the assets of the deceased mortgagor in the hands of the defendant. The defendant, was then living with her husband in the Sholapur District in British India. Her husband was appointed her guardian ad litem. The defendant's husband, however, did not appear to defend the suit, and the Osmanabad Court appointed its nazir as the defendant's guardian ad litem. The nazir put in a written statement denying the mortgage, and after recording the statement of the writer of the mortgage deed, the Osmanabad Court passed a mortgage decree, which further provided that if the decretal amount was not satisfied out of the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property the plaintiffs were at liberty to apply for a personal decree against the defendant to the extent of the assets of her father in her hands. The decree was executed by the Osmanabad Court, and as the sale proceeds of the mortgaged property, were not sufficient to discharge the decretal amount the plaintiff filed a suit in the Court at Sholapur on the judgment of the Osmanabad Court, for personal decree against the defendant:

Held, that as the Osmanabad Court considered the plaintiffs' claim on its merits, and after taking evidence, disposed of the suit on the merits the defendant could not get the benefit of the exception contained in cl. (b) of s. 13, Civil P. C. 105 Ind. Cas. 186 (1) and 128 Ind. Cas. 609 (2), relied on. [p. 19, col. 1.]

Held, also that that part of the decree passed by the Osmanabad Court against the defendant which was a personal decree against her must be regarded as a nullity. Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), relied on. [p. 59, col. 2.]

Held, further that the Osmanabad Court acted beyond its jurisdiction in appointing its nazir as the defendant's guardian when her husband, who was her de jure and de facto guardian and had been appointed guardian ad litem by the Court itself, had never expressed his unwillingness to act as her guardian. In such circumstances the Court acted against the interests of the minor and against natural justice by indirectly compelling her to appear in the suit by appointing its own officer as her guardian ad litem. Moreover, it could not be said that the officer of the Court who was thus appointed guardian ad litem voluntarily appeared to defend the suit. He was after all an officer of the Court and had to obey the orders passed by the Court. When the Court appointed its nazir as the guardian, he had to appear and say something. Thus his appearance could not be regarded as a voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. When such submission was not voluntary, then, it could not be said that the defendant rendered herself willingly amenable to the jurisdiction of the foreign. Hence, under the circumstances the personal decree passed against the defendant was an ex parte decree and the defendant did not voluntarily submit herself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. She was, therefore, not bound by the personal decree against her; and the suit, based on such a personal decree passed by the foreign Court, was liable to be dismissed. 26 Ind. Cas. 287 (4), relied on. [p. 59, col. 2; p. 60, col. 1.]

S. A. against the decision of the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 49 of 1935.

Mr. D. A. Tulzapurkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. A. Adarkar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit on a foreign judgment. The defendant's father Shankar Komti mortgaged his house within the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court to the plaintiffs, and after his death, his daughter, the defendant, inherited his property as his sole heir. The plaintiffs filed a suit against her in the Osmanabad Court (Nizam's State) to recover Rs. 1,300 due under the mortgage-deed by the sale of the mortgaged property and the balance out of the assets of the deceased mortgagor in the hands of the defendant. The defendant was then a minor and was living with her husband in the Sholapur District. Her husband was appointed her guardian ad litem, and notices were served both on the minor defendant and on her husband. The defendant's husband however did not appear to defend the suit, and the Osmanabad Court appointed its nazir as the defendant's guardian ad litem. The nazir put in a written statement denying the mortgage, and after recording the statement of the writer of the mortgage-deed, the Osmanabad Court passed a mortgage-decree, which further provided that if the decretal amount was not satisfied out of the sale proceeds of the mortgage property the plaintiffs were at liberty to apply for a personal decree against the defendant to the extent of the assets of her father in her hands. The decree was executed by the Osmanabad Court, and after the sale of the mortgaged property a sum of Rs. 598-11-9 still remained due to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs therefore filed this suit in the Additional Joint Second Class Subordinate Judge's Court at Sholapur, on the judgment of the Osmanabad Court, to recover Rs. 598-11-9, costs and future interest from the defendant out of her father's assets in her hands. Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on the ground that the judgment of the Osmanabad Court was not binding on the defendant as the personal decree against her was passed ex parte and she had not submitted to the jurisdiction of that Court and as the suit had not been disposed of on its merits. The case is governed by s. 13, Civil P. C. which says that:

"A foreign judgment shall be conclusive as to any matter thereby directly adjudicated upon between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title."

Then follow six exceptions, of which we are concerned only with exceptions, (a) and (b), which says: "(a) where it has not been pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction;" and "(b) where it has not been given on the merits of the case."

It is urged on behalf of the defendant that as her husband was her de jure and de facto guardian and was appointed by the Osmanabad Court to act as her guardian ad litem in the suit, the Court had no jurisdiction to appoint its own officer unless the defendant's husband refused to act as her guardian. It is clear from the notices (Ex. 36) served upon both the defendant and her husband that neither of them objected to her husband's appointment as her guardian ad litem. He did not refuse to act as her guardian for the suit. In these circumstances the Osmanabad Court should not have appointed its own officer as her guardian for the suit. Assuming this to be so, the most that can be said in favour of the defendant is that her guardian ad litem, viz., her husband, having remained absent, the suit was tried against her ex parte. Even then the judgment delivered by the Osmanabad Court (Ex. 33) shows that the suit was heard on its merits. From the roznama (Ex. 37) it appears that several adjournments were given to the plaintiffs to enable them to lead their evidence to prove the mortgage. Ultimately, the writer was examined, and on the strength of his evidence the plaintiffs were given a decree. As observed in Ishri Prasad v. Sri Ram (1), the question to be considered in such a case is whether the judgment is given on the merits or whether it is only by way of penalty. The true test is whether the judgment has been given as a penalty for any conduct of the defendant or whether it is based on a consideration of the truth or otherwise of the plaintiffs' case. The Osmanabad Court did not give a decree to the plaintiffs merely because the defendant was unrepresented or that the defendant did not raise any objection to the plaintiff's claim; but it considered the plaintiff's claim on its merits, and after taking evidence, it came to the conclusion that the claim was proved. In Ephrayim H. Ephrayim v. Turner Morrison & Co. (2), the defendant's Pleader did not defend the suit on its merits owing to absence of instructions from the defendant, and it was held that the decree did not on that account cease to be one passed on the merits. It is obvious that in this case the suit was disposed of on the merits and the defendant cannot get the benefit of the exception contained in cl. (b) of s. 13, Civil P. O.

But whether the defendant can claim the benefit of the exception contained in cl. (a) of s. 13, Civil P. O., is not so easy to decide. The claim made by the plaintiffs before the Osmanabad Court consisted of two different parts. They first claimed to recover the amount due under the mortgage by the sale of the mortgaged house. They also further claimed that if the amount realized by the sale of the mortgaged house was found to be insufficient, the deficit should be recovered from the defendant out of the assets of her deceased father in her hands. The wording of the judgment is not so clear since it merely says that the deficit should be recovered out of the assets of the deceased mortgagor, and it does not clearly say that so far as the deficit was concerned a personal decree was passed against the defendant; but the effect of the decree is obvious. After the sale of the mortgaged house, no property of the deceased was left within the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court and that Court had no jurisdiction to pass any decree against the property of the mortgagor situate outside its jurisdiction. That property was neither pledged nor mortgaged to the plaintiffs, and no decree against the property itself could be passed. But what the decree did actually say was that the deficit should be recovered from the defendant personally, but that her liability was limited to the extent of the value of her father's assets in her hands. That was purely a personal decree against her though her personal liability was not unlimited. That personal decree could be made final only after the sale proceeds from the mortgaged property were found to be insufficient. Thus, the foreign judgment on which the present suit is based consists of two different parts, one of which the foreign Court had jurisdiction to pass and the other was purely a personal decree limited to a certain sum. If so, the principle laid down by the Privy Council in Gurdial Singh v. Raja of Faridkot (3), applies to the latter. In that case a suit was filed in the Native State of Faridkot to recover certain sums alleged to have been misappropriated by the defendant. The defendant did not appear at the hearing and an ex parte decree was passed against him. The defendant was a native of another Native State, and at the date of the suit he neither resided in the State in which the suit was filed nor was he a domicile of the State. On these facts, it was held that the Court in that Native State had on general principles of international law no jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the claim which was a mere personal claim as distinguished from a claim relating to land, and that decree was therefore held to be a nullity. In the same way that part of the decree passed by the Osmanabad Court against the defendant which was a personal decree against her must be regarded as a nullity. But even the personal decree would be binding upon her if it is found that she submitted herself to the jurisdiction of that Court voluntarily. It is therefore urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that the appointment of the nazir as her guardian ad litem was legal and valid, and that as he appeared on her behalf and put in a written statement contesting the plaintiffs' claim, it must be held that the defendant submitted herself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court.

If this contention be upheld, it follows that even the personal decree against her is not a nullity and is conclusive in a British Court under s. 13, Civil P. O. But, as I have already pointed out, the Osmanabad Court acted beyond its jurisdiction in appointing its nazir as the defendant's guardian when her husband, who was her de jure and de facto guardian and had been appointed guardian ad litem by the Court itself, had never expressed his unwillingness to act as her guardian. Order XXXII, r. 4, Civil P. O., which enables a Court to appoint any of its officers to be the guardian ad litem for a minor defendant, specifically provides that this power can be exercised when there is no other person fit and willing to act as the guardian for the suit. It is not suggested that the defendant's husband was not a fit person to be her guardian for the suit. His endorsement on the notice served on him shows that he was not unwilling to act as her guardian for the suit. The mere fact that he did not appear in the Court and put in a written statement on behalf of the defendant does not lead to the presumption that he was not willing to act as her guardian. It was open to him in her interests to refrain from submitting himself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court and thereby laying the minor defendant open to a personal decree against her. If the defendant herself was then a major, she could have refrained from submitting herself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court and thereby saved herself from a personal decree against her. She could not have been compelled to submit herself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. If so, the mere fact that she was a minor should not put her to a disadvantage when her guardian who was interested in her took the same attitude and refrained from submitting himself, that is to say the minor, to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court. In such circumstances the Court acted against the interests of the minor and against natural justice by indirectly compelling her to appear in the suit by appointing its own officer as her guardian ad litem. Moreover, it cannot be said that the officer of the Court who was thus appointed guardian ad litem voluntarily appeared to defend the suit. He was after all an officer of the Court and had to obey the orders passed by the Court. When the Court appointed its nazir as the guardian, he had to appear and say something. Thus his appearance cannot be regarded as a voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. When such submission is not voluntary, then, it cannot be said that the defendant rendered herself willingly amenable to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court: Veeraraghava Ayyar v. Muga Sait (4). Hence, under the circumstances of the present case, it must be held that the personal decree passed against the defendant was an ex parte decree and that the defendant did not voluntarily submit herself to the jurisdiction of the Osmanabad Court. She is therefore not bound by the personal decree against her, and the present suit, which is based on such a personal decree passed by the foreign Court, was rightly thrown out. For these reasons I confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Where three persons entered into a contract to the effect that they would jointly put up the money (though in different shares) necessary to purchase a certain village that was about to be put up to auction, and the village was purchased by the agent of one of them acting on behalf of all the three, but the sale certificate was issued in the name of the principal alone and the other two filed suits for their share and for possession:

Judgment.—In this second appeal two points of law, apart from the hopeless one under O. II, r. 2 which was only very faintly argued before us and which we do not propose further to consider, were taken. Before they can be understood a few facts are necessary.

In 1923 the plaintiff, another person who has assigned to the plaintiff his rights, and the defendant entered into a contract to the effect that they would jointly put up the money (though in different shares) necessary to purchase a certain village that was about to be put up to auction. The village was sold to a person who attended and who was the agent of defendant but who was acting, or should have been, on behalf of all three. As soon as the sale was over, or rather next day time being given, the 25 per cent. which has to be paid at the time of sale was paid. The purchase price was Rs. 32,000. The 25 per cent. was Rs. 8,000 and the plaintiff and his transferor Bakhtawarmal contributed their respective shares. They also contributed their respective shares in payment of the balance which balance was paid in time.

The sale certificate however was taken in the name of the defendant and upon the defendant (who was the largest shareholder) fell the burden of fighting a litigation that arose out of this sale. That litigation he won but it cost him money. Then he obtained mutation in his sole name and so far as we can see he has been enjoying the property ever since.

Naturally after this transaction had been gone through plaintiff and Bakhtawarmal wanted their share and asked to be put in possession. They were told that there were other expenses which they had first to pay. As a result they brought a suit founding not on the contract above mentioned but on the fact that the defendant had bought at the auction and had then sold to them. In that litigation the present defendant denied that contract and alleged the one above set forth but said that the others had to pay their share of the litigation expenses. In the result the plaintiff's suit was dismissed on the ground that the contract was not as stated by the plaintiff but as stated by the defendant.

Thereupon this suit was brought.

In this suit there are 37 typewritten pages of pleadings which lasted over 3½ years. It is now not disputed that the contract above stated now found for constitutes these persons partners in a single adventure. The claim is for possession not for distribution of assets as upon a dissolution with consequential taking of accounts. No particular point is made as to the form of the action but the defendant says the relief asked for should only be granted if at all on his being recouped all his losses not only in respect of the litigation over the sale but also in respect of managing the village.

Even before the lower Appellate Court the defence had narrowed down to the points under O. II, r. 2, and under s. 66, Civil P. O. As above stated the point under O. II, r. 2 was only faintly argued and the argument on that branch of the case was turned into one based on s. 11, Civil P. O., Expl. IV. It was urged that as the plaintiff could, in the earlier litigation, have sought the remedy he is now seeking he must be deemed to have litigated the present matter and, as he lost, had it decided against him. In other words constructive res judicata is urged. We consider there are two answers: (1) The cause of action is not the same. (2) The matter now in dispute was in dispute in that case and was decided not against the plaintiff but against the defendant. This point accordingly, in our opinion, fails.

"(1) No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims.

(2) Nothing in this section shall bar a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of any purchaser certified as aforesaid was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser, or interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner."

It is clear from the pleadings that the agent who bought acted as agent for all three when buying. At one point the defendant alleged that the agent bought for him alone but later he corrected that and said that he bid for all three.

Our attention has been drawn to a number of cases Harendra Chandra Roy v. Ram Kumar Roy (1) being the nearest to the present. In that case (which would appear to contain a number of slips which make it difficult to follow) the facts would seem to be that the plaintiff (singular—there is only one) had many decrees against X and in execution X's property was being brought to sale. It is not stated in the report but may reasonably be inferred that the plaintiff did not get leave to bid. He made an arrangement whereby the properties were to be purchased (by whose act is not clear) in the name of his brother (apparently) who would have a half interest, the plaintiff was to have one quarter and another brother (apparently) a quarter. Who the decree holders were is not clear some of the decrees being apparently in favour of the brothers other than the plaintiff. The brother in whose name the property was bought undertook to execute a "deed of relinquishment" in favour of the other brothers after purchase. He refused to execute any such deed and was sued. Apparently without any pleadings s. 66 was held to be a bar. It is unnecessary for us to express our opinion on that case. The facts were different. It would appear there to have been established or admitted that the arrangement was that one should purchase in his sole name and hold on behalf of others. Here an agent was to buy on behalf of a firm and got instead of the firm's name his master's name put in the sale certificate. It has not been established that this was any part of the arrangement. We are also of opinion that in Harendra Chandra Roy v. Ram Kumar Roy (1) (owing it may be to the fact that s. 66 was raised so late) it was not considered what had to be established before s. 66 applies. In Harendra Chandra Roy v. Ram Kumar Roy (1) obiter dicta in Vadivelu Mudaliar v. Peria Manicka Mudaliar (2) were relied upon. Their Lordships at p. 649 observe :

"The object of s. 66 was to put an end to purchases by one person in the name of another; and the distinction between a purchase on behalf of another, and a purchase coupled with an undertaking to convey to another at the price of purchase, is somewhat narrow. But whatever doubt might be caused by the character of the original agreement is removed by the events which happened after the sale."

Their Lordships then consider the subsequent agreements and approve Venkatappa v. Jalayya (3). Here, however, those observations have no relevance. This is not a case of A buying in the name of B but of A, B, and C instructing X to buy for A, B and C and X buying in the name of A either through some fraud or, more probably, mere error.

In Iswar Chandra Pal v. Kabirud-Din Ahmad (4) the facts were that A, B, C, D agreed that the property would be purchased in the names of A, B, A to have $\frac{1}{4}$, B $\frac{1}{4}$, C $\frac{2}{8}$ and D $\frac{1}{8}$ share respectively. This therefore would appear to be a case of a partnership the partners agreeing to buy in the name of two of the partners. Mallik, J., however observed at p. 375* (founding on the definition of partnership in s. 239 of the Contract Act) "there can be no manner of doubt that the present case was not a case of partnership". However that may be no one has suggested that there was no partnership in the present case. This is stronger than Vishwanath Dhondiraj v. Pandharinath Ganesh (5). There the facts were that A purchased in A's name but it appeared that B supplied half the consideration and that the purchase was really a joint venture in which A and B were partners. The suit was to obtain by partition half the subject-matter purchased. There was there, as here, no proof that it was agreed that the certificate should be taken in the name of A. Macleod, C. J., at p. 604* observes (relying on observations made by Richards, J., in Achhaibar Dube v. Tapasi Dube (6) :

"I do not think there is any difference between the case where one of the partners in a partnership, which is in existence for other purposes, buys property from the joint funds in his own name, and the case where there is a partnership in a single adventure in which two or more persons agree to unite their funds for the purpose of purchasing the property. There is no intention then of a secret purchase by one person in the name of another. It is a joint transaction. The fact that it is conducted by one partner on behalf of himself and as agent of the other partner or partners, takes it out of the range altogether of benami transactions."

As the Judicial Committee observe in Ganga Sahai v. Keshi (7) :

"In their Lordships' opinion the provisions of that section have no application to the present case. They were designed to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at the execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors, and in no way affect the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase."

In that case A and B were joint holders of a mortgage decree for sale. B died leaving X, Y, Z. A applied for execution reserving the rights of X, Y, Z. A purchased. X, Y, Z claimed that he had purchased for the benefit of heirs of B. It was urged that the old section (which s. 66 replaces) was a bar to any such claim. Their Lordships disposed of the matter as above stated adding:

"The Courts in India were perfectly right in refusing to allow (A) to perpetrate a fraud against his co-decree-holders under cover of this section."

Chin Ah On v. Chin Ah Foo (8) is a case of a benami transaction apparently. It is chiefly useful for the observations on the desirability of pleading fraud with particularity. It appears to overlook the fact that absence of consent attracts the provisions of s. 66 (2).

In Govind Singh v. Mungaji (9) Macnair, A. J. C. held that s. 66 applies where the ostensible purchaser is the real purchaser to the extent of a fraction. The learned Judge, however, quotes Achhaibar Dube v. Tapasi Dube (6) and distinguishes it on the ground that there was no question of partnership in the case before him.

In Bishan Dayal v. Kesho Prasad (10) it was held that s. 66 does not apply to the case of those persons who by operation of law and not by virtue of any private agreement or understanding are entitled to treat as joint property an acquisition made by the use of joint funds, e. g., members of a joint Hindu family (see the Privy Council decision in Bodh Singh v. Gunesh Chunder Sen (11)), or members of a partnership firm, or joint decree-holders. The Bench of the Allahabad High Court limit Vishwanath Dhondiraj v. Pendharinath Ganesh (5) as follows : (see p. 123*)

"With great respect, we are unable to agree with the view expressed....that if two persons privately enter into an agreement to purchase property in the name of one at auction s. 66 of the Civil P. C. would have no application."

Thakur Das Nath v. Keshab Chandra (12) does not carry the matter any further. As Sulaiman, C. J., observed in Lal Singh v. Chotey Beti (13).

"...There is plenty of authority for the proposition that where there is a fund belonging jointly to several persons and one of such persons makes a purchase of land with that fund the purchase enures for the benefit of the persons entitled to share in the fund."

In the light of the above and bearing in mind the purpose and wording of the section we are of opinion that it is no bar to this suit. This is not a case of some agreement secret or otherwise whereby A bought in B's name. The plaintiff's rights spring out of the fact that this purchase was made out of a joint fund, contributed to by three persons who formed a partnership having for its purpose the carrying out of this purchase transaction.

Section 14 of the Partnership Act provides:

"Unless the contrary intention appears, property and rights and interests in property acquired with money belonging to the firm are deemed to have been acquired for the firm."

This is a case where with partnership money an agent bought a village which became partnership property. The partnership will become dissolved under s. 42 (b) (which reproduces the old law) when the adventure for which it was constituted is completed. In the meantime the defendant does not and never has claimed title under the purchase certificate. He has been saying all along that the purchase was on behalf of all and the others ought to contribute their share of the expenses as well as their share of the cost. Moreover here there is nothing to show that the consent of the partners was given to the sale certificate being made out in one name and it is common ground as above stated that the agent bid, not on behalf of the defendant, not on behalf of the plaintiff, but on behalf of the partnership. The plaintiff is not here suing "on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims". Here the plaintiff is claiming his share in a partnership adventure and the defendant is not disputing that it was bought for the partnership. In such circumstances, in our opinion, s. 66 has no application.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92, Proviso (4)—Mortgage deed registered—Deed containing express term that payment to be made in a certain way and discharge to be endorsed therein—Subsequent oral agreement varying terms of deed to prove discharge, admissibility.

It is always open to a mortgagor to prove that on a certain day he discharged the mortgage. But when in a registered mortgage deed there is an express term that payment should be made in a certain way and unless endorsed on the deed it should not be regarded as payment at all, the mortgagor will not be allowed to prove discharge of the mortgage by subsequent oral agreement which goes to vary the terms of the mortgage.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Purnea, dated January 29, 1938.

Messrs. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha and R. K. Chaudhuri, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harihar Prasad Sinha for Mr. Saiyid Hasan, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal against concurrent decrees of the Courts below passed in favour of the defendants. It appears that defendant No. 1 and his cousin Zalim owed a sum of Rs. 400 to one Darsan Mandal. To pay off this sum each of them borrowed Rs. 200 from the plaintiffs, and on October 21, 1928, defendant No. 1 and Zalim each executed mortgage bonds in favour of the plaintiffs. By these bonds they mortgaged their respective shares in certain holdings. The landlord of defendant No. 1 and Zalim obtained a rent decree against both of them and in due course put the property to sale. This was part of the property covered by the mortgages executed by defendant No. 1 and Zalim. On May 8, 1935, the property was to be put up for sale in satisfaction of the rent decree, the decretal amount being Rs. 93. On that day defendant No. 1 paid Rs. 45 in part satisfaction of the decree and obtained an adjournment of the sale to June 3, 1935. On June 3, 1935, the property was put up for sale and purchased by one Ramnath, a relation of the plaintiff, for Rs. 70. In August 1935 Ramnath took delivery of possession of the property. In the year 1936 the plaintiff brought two mortgage suits, one against Zalim and the other out of which this appeal arises against defendant No. 1. Zalim did not contest the suit and allowed it to be decreed ex parte. Defendant No. 1 however hotly contested the suit brought against him and alleged that the mortgage had been fully satisfied and discharged.

According to defendant No. 1, the mortgage was discharged by an arrangement entered into between the parties. As I have stated earlier, the holding in question in the present case was being put up for sale by the landlord in execution of a rent decree. Part of that decree had been satisfied and adjournment of the sale obtained. Defendant No. 1 had until June 3, 1935, to pay the balance of the decree amounting to some Rs. 48; but it is said by arrangement between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 the latter refrained from paying the balance of the decretal amount bidding at the sale and allowed the property which was worth, according to defendant No. 1, about Rs. 1,500 to go to Ramnath as benamidar of the plaintiff for Rs. 70. It was agreed that the mortgage should be regarded as a complete discharge on the part of defendant No. 1. Both the Courts below have accepted the defendant's case and have held that the mortgage was discharged. In second appeal it has been urged that no evidence was admissible of this agreement which led to the discharge of the mortgage. Reliance has been placed upon s. 92, Proviso (4), Evidence Act, that proviso is in these terms:

"The existence of any distinct subsequent agreement to rescind or modify any contract or disposition of property may be proved in cases in which such contract or disposition of property is by law required to be in writing, or has been registered under the law in force for the time being as to the registration of documents."

The plaintiffs contend that defendant No. 1 in this case has sought to prove the mortgage agreement rescinding or modifying the original agreement or contract between the parties. The mortgage was a contract required by law to be in writing and was in fact registered. That being so it is urged that no oral agreement can be proved varying the terms of that contract. On the other hand, it is argued by the respondents that it is always open to a mortgagor to prove discharge of a mortgage by oral evidence. It is always open to a mortgagor to prove on a certain day he paid the sum due under the mortgage. Such is not evidence of a subsequent oral agreement varying the terms of the mortgage. In the present case however defendant No. 1 cannot prove discharge of this mortgage without an oral agreement varying the express terms of this contract. The mortgage itself there is a stipulation for payment and discharge and that is the substance of these words:

"And whatever money or interest I owe on this bond will be first set off towards the principal and after this set off towards compound interest and after this set off towards interest the remainder will be set off towards principal, that is to say, the principal shall be paid and the interest shall remain unpaid. The payment (that is to say) I will at once write and get it written on this bond. I will not raise any (regarding payment) without its being endorsed on the back of the bond. That is to say I will not produce any receipt or evidence of witnesses regarding plea of payment. If I produce it, it will be deemed useless and incorrect."

In short there is an express term in this mortgage that payment towards either principal or interest could only be made in a certain way, and unless endorsed on the mortgage it should not be regarded as a payment at all. In these circumstances is it open to the mortgagor to attempt to prove discharge or satisfaction in any other manner? As long as this term remains payment can only be proved by endorsements on the mortgage bond. What defendant No. 1 now seeks to do is to establish that the mortgage has been discharged by reason of a verbal agreement which is in conflict with the express terms of the mortgage. Until the term as to payment in the mortgage is varied, a transaction such as is put forward by defendant No. 1 can never amount to a discharge. In my view the whole case of defendant No. 1 depends on a verbal agreement which modifies and varies the terms of this written and registered document. No such variation or modification is admissible in evidence unless it has been made by a written and registered document. In my judgment the Courts below should not have admitted oral evidence in this case to prove the agreement alleged by defendant No. 1 which amounted to satisfaction of the mortgage. Once any evidence of this agreement is excluded, then there is nothing to establish satisfaction of the mortgage. All that remains is the fact that Ramnath purchased the property and that defendant No. 1 neither paid the small balance of the decree nor bid for the property nor interfered in any way with Ramnath's purchase. There is even nothing to show that Ramnath was in any way benamidar of the plaintiffs. Unless the evidence which I hold is inadmissible, is admitted the case made by defendant No. 1 that he has discharged the mortgage wholly fails.

The result therefore is that this appeal must be allowed and the decrees of the lower Courts set aside. I would pass a mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiffs for the principal amount together with interest at the rate of nine per cent. per annum simple from the date of the mortgage to the end of the period of grace. Three months is given to defendant No. 1 to pay the sum due. After the expiry of the period of grace the amount due will carry interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum simple. I would direct that each party pay their own costs here and in the Courts below.

Fazl Ali, J.—I agree.

Contempt of Court—Defendant's written statement containing defamatory matter regarding plaintiff's son—Plaintiff applying to Court for striking out these matters—Notice on defendant, by plaintiff's son, demanding payment of damages within certain time or else he would institute action for defamation—Application and notice held no contempt of Court.

Where in a suit the defendant files a written statement describing the plaintiff's son with a defamatory and abusive epithet, and the plaintiff makes an application to the Court for striking out the defamatory epithet and his son serves a notice on the defendant demanding payment of damages for defamation within certain time or that an action would be brought for defamation, the application and the notice do not amount to contempt of Court. 159 Ind Cas. 193 (1), distinguished.

Mr. Brij Lal Gupta, for the Applicants.

Mr. N. U. A. Siddiqi, for the Opposite Party.

The Government Advocate, for the Crown.

Bennet, J.—This is an application, purporting to be under the Contempt of Courts Act, brought by Baldeo Sahai and Sumat Prasad against Shiva Datt and his father Ram Swarup. Pt. Ram Swarup, opposite party No. 2, has brought a suit for possession of certain land and removal of constructions against the applicant Baldeo Sahai. The applicant filed a written statement in which he alleged that the suit had been brought at the instance of Bhagwan Das, brother of the plaintiff, and of Shiva Datt, opposite party No. 1, son and pairokar of the plaintiff, and he described Shiva Datt as awara. On March 27, 1939, Ram Swarup, opposite party No. 2, filed an application for this word awara to be struck out and asking for an apology and stating that on failure of an apology proceedings would be taken. On April 5, 1939, the Munsif passed an order stating :

"The defendant's Vakil has stated that the word awara be substituted by the word awaragard, which simply means an aimless wanderer while awara might also mean a vagabond. Let the amendment be made and filed."

On April 14, 1939, Shiva Datt Sharma, opposite party No. 1, sent a notice to applicant No. 2 who is the Counsel for applicant No. 1 in the civil suit. This notice is to the effect that the use of the word awara in the written statement filed by applicant No. 2 was without justification and defamatory, that Shiva Datt was an Insurance Agent of the Hindustan Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd. at Calcutta and that the words would affect him in his business. The notice ended by stating :

"Therefore I hereby inform you to pay me Rs. 1,000 as damages for defamation within a week otherwise I will take action against you in law."

The present application claims that both the application to strike out the word awara made in the Court of the Munsif and the notice constitute contempt of Court in regard to the civil suit. Now as regards the application to the Munsif, the Munsif is empowered under O. VI, r. 16, Civil P. C., to strike out anything in the pleadings which is unnecessary or scandalous. The Munsif was clearly acting within his jurisdiction in this matter and the application was made to the Munsif within the jurisdiction of the Munsif. We do not think that any Contempt of Court arises from such an application to the Munsif. In regard to the notice, learned Counsel stated that he had one authority for the proposition, that is, Rajendra Singh v. Uma Prasad (1). Now this ruling was in a very different case. There was a suit on a mortgage executed by the deceased father of the minor defendant in favour of the deceased father of the plaintiff. The usual plea was taken in para. 9 of the written statement that the mortgage was not binding on the minor because it was tainted with immorality. After the issues had been settled and the plaintiff's evidence had closed and the defendant's evidence had begun, a notice was sent by the plaintiff to the defendant's guardian. The notice quoted para. 9 of the written statement in full and stated that this was defamatory of the plaintiff's deceased father and lowered his reputation in the estimation of his fellow-men and stated that, unless an unqualified apology and withdrawal was sent within a week and Rs. 10,000 was paid as damages, action would be taken in the Civil and Criminal Courts. It is clear that a distinction is to be drawn between that case and the present case because the notice in the ruling required that the plea of the mortgage being invalid because of immoral consideration was to be withdrawn. In the present case there is nothing in the notice asking that any action should be taken in the conduct of the civil suit. The present notice is merely the usual notice which is given as a preliminary to filing a suit for damages for libel. The ruling itself on p. 32 distinguishes the case in the ruling from such cases;

"Learned Counsel for Dr. Misra has cited before us some English cases in which it has been held that in cases of libel or defamation it is not objectionable to serve notice on the offending party giving him an opportunity to withdraw the defamatory words and threatening to take legal steps against him if he fails to do so. Such cases obviously stand on quite a different footing. We are not here dealing with the case of a private defamation. The present case is one where an attempt was made to put pressure on the defendant to withdraw a plea which had been taken in the written statement, duly filed in Court, which was the subject of consideration by the Subordinate Judge of Dehra Dun. We think there can be no doubt that such an action amounted to a direct interference with the administration of justice in preventing the defendant from pressing his defence and putting forward the plea which might, if established, prove fatal to the suit; and in that way an indirect attempt was made to exclude the plea taken on behalf of the minor from the consideration of the Court."

As the ruling itself clearly distinguishes a case like the present from the cases in the ruling we do not think that the ruling can be cited for a case like the present. It appears to us that in the present case the notice did not require any action to be taken in regard to the civil suit. On the other hand, the ruling did require the withdrawal of a plea which was a most material plea in the civil suit. To put pressure on a party to withdraw a plea in a civil suit is quite a different matter from a notice stating that a suit for defamation or libel will be brought. The notice in fact had been given after the Munsif had passed his order directing the substitution of the word awara. Learned Counsel for the applicant admits that the opposite party would be within their rights in bringing this suit for libel and that the bringing of such a suit for libel would not amount to contempt of Court. He is not able to explain how the notice for such a suit could amount to contempt of Court if the filing of the suit itself would not amount to contempt of Court.

Learned Counsel asks us to draw the presumption that the notice was not bona fide and that the suit for libel would not be filed.

(1) A. I. R. 1935. All. 117; 159 Ind. Cas. 193; 57 A. 573; (1935) A. L. J. 29; 1935 A. L. R. 1083; 8 R. A. 404.

for any other motive except to bring pressure on the applicant in the present civil suit. There is no reason why such a presumption should be drawn. Where a word has been used which the user himself has withdrawn in the Court of the Munsif there is no reason to suppose that a suit for defamation in regard to that word is inspired by any other motives than the usual motives for a suit for defamation. We consider that no case has been made out under the Contempt of Courts Act and accordingly we dismiss this application with costs.

Verma, J.—I entirely agree. A Hindu son is entitled to impugn alienations made by the father, and one of the grounds on which he can impugn such alienation is the ground that the consideration for the alienation was tainted with immorality. Such a plea, if established, is fatal to the case of the alienee, and is thus a material plea. The plea taken in para. 9 of the written statement in Rufendra Singh v. Uma Prasad (1), was a plea of that nature. But a statement that the plaintiff's suit, which according to the defendant is false, has been instigated by the plaintiff's son, and the use of abusive epithets about the plaintiff's son, do not in my opinion constitute a "plea" recognized in law.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Appeal No. 261 of 1938

July 4, 1939

R. C. MITTER AND MOHAMMAD AKRAM, JJ.
MANMATHA PAL CHOUDHURY AND OTHERS—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

SARADA PRASAD NATH, DECREE-HOLDER
AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 39—Application for transfer of decree, if falls under s. 47—Objection opposing such application, whether comes under s. 47—Order on such objection—Appealability—Objections under s. 47, if can be taken at any stage—Discretion under s. 39 to be exercised judicially.

An application for transfer of a decree, to the Court which passed the decree, is one relating to the execution of the decree and comes under s. 47, Civil P. O., and an objection by a judgment-debtor to such an application is an objection which can come within the purview of s. 47. The words "relating to execution of the decree" used in s. 47, are wide enough to cover such a case. The order passed by the Court on such objection is an order coming within the scope of s. 47 and the appeal from such order is competent: 132 Ind. Cas. 149 (1) and Bhabani Charan Dutt v. Pratap Chandra Ghose (2), relied on. [p. 69, col. 2; p. 70, col. 1.]

A judgment-debtor can prefer objections under s. 47, Civil P. O., at any stage of the execution proceedings. Those objections have to be determined on their merits, unless a particular objection had been adjudicated upon by the Court earlier, or unless the judgment-debtor is debarred from agitating the particular objection. Where the objection, that the decree ought not to have been transferred to other Court as the judgment-debtors, had properties within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy the decree, had not been adjudicated upon at a previous stage of the proceedings, and the order of transfer was made ex parte, and without giving the judgment-debtors an opportunity to contest the decree-holder's prayer for transfer, the Court ought to consider the objection on its merits. [p. 70, col. 1.]

The whole of s. 39, Civil P. O., gives a discretion to the Court in the matter of transfer. That discretion must be judicially exercised. [p. 70, col. 2.]

O. A. against the order of the Sub-Judge, Nadia, dated July 5, 1938.

Messrs. A. N. Bose and Hemanta Kumar Bose, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. Bagchi and Binayak Nath Banerjee, for the Respondents.

Judgment—This appeal has been preferred by three of the judgment-debtors, namely Manmatha Pal Choudhury, Amiya Pal Choudhury and Ranjit Pal Choudhury, and is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Nadia, dated July 5, 1938. A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies against the order complained of. A rule however in the alternative was issued by this Court. In order to decide not only the question as to whether the appeal is competent or not, but also the appeal on the merits, the following facts are necessary.

One Jagannath Khan and others, whom we shall hereafter call the Khans, took a loan of Rs. 1,80,000 from the Faridpur Loan office in the year 1924. They executed a mortgage bond by which touzies Nos. $\frac{336}{6}$ and $\frac{441}{6}$ of the Nadia Collectorate as also other properties were hypothecated. In 1931 the said Loan Office instituted a suit on their mortgage in the Original Side of this Court. A preliminary decree was passed on July 5, 1931 and the final decree on January 9, 1933. This decree was put into execution, and at the execution stage the judgment-debtors wanted time to pay up the decretal amount. There was an agreement between them, and the Loan Office by which time was given to the former to pay up the decretal amount on their giving as further security for the decretal amount three decrees for rent which they had already obtained against their tenants as also the growing rents. This agreement was given effect to by the order of the Court dated December 5, 1934 and the sale of the mortgage properties was postponed. The judgment-debtors however could not pay up the decretal amount within the extended period with the result that the sale was held. At the sale which was held on February 27, 1937 the respondent Sarada Prosad Nath purchased the properties. It is not disputed that he purchased touzies Nos. $\frac{368}{6}$ and $\frac{441}{6}$ of the Nadia Collectorate, but at one stage there was the question as to whether he had purchased the rights of the Khans to the rents which accrued in their favour up to that date from their tenants who held lands in the said two touzies. For the rents which accrued up to the year 1936, the Khans instituted a suit against their tenants who are ten in number, three of them are the Pal Choudhuris, the appellants before us. The rent suit was decreed on April 15, 1936 for a sum of Rs. 26,8c4. Sarada Prosad Nath claims that by reason of his auction purchase on February 27, 1937 the right to this rent decree has also vested in him. This rent decree was obtained in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Nadia, in respect of a patni tenure situated in the District of Nadia, which was held by the defendants in the rent suit, under the proprietors of the aforesaid touzies. The respondent Sarada made an application before the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Nadia who had passed the decree for being substituted in place of the decree-holders, the Khans. This application was granted by the learned Subordinate Judge. An application for review was made by the judgment-debtors but that application has been dismissed. The question whether Sarada is entitled to be substituted in place of the original decree-holders, namely the Khans, is now finally concluded between the parties to this appeal. It is accordingly, as has been conceded by Mr. Bose for the appellants, no longer open to the parties to raise the said question.

The question involved in this appeal rests on the following facts. On March 10, 1938 Sarada Prosad Nath made an application for execution of the said rent decree in a tabular form before the Additional Subordinate Judge, Nadia. This was numbered as Rent Execution Case No. 5 of 1938. In column 2 he gave the names of the judgment-debtors, ten in number. In column 7, the amount due to him under the aforesaid rent decree is stated. In column 9 he stated that he wanted to proceed against seven out of the ten judgment-debtors, the last three being the appellants before us. In column 11 he prayed that

"orders may be passed for transmission of a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Subordinate Judge's Court, Alipur, District 24-Perganas for realization of the amount due on this decree."

In this tabular statement the place of residence of the three judgment-debtors-appellants is stated to be within the District of Nadia. With regard to some of the other judgment-debtors, it is distinctly stated that they reside within the jurisdiction of the Nadia Court, but with regard to some others their places of residence are not given. It is, however, not stated in the application that any of other judgment-debtors resides within the jurisdiction of the Alipur Court. On the same day, March 10, 1938, the Court registered the said application, and directed the matter to be put up on March 12, "for the preparation of the certificate and for orders." On 12th an order was passed transferring the decree to the Court of the Subordinate Judge Alipur, for execution.

These proceedings were ex parte proceedings. No notice was issued to the judgment-debtors when the order for transfer was made, and the judgment-debtors had accordingly no opportunity to come and contest those proceedings for transfer. On April 5, 1938, the judgment-debtors appellants before us, however, filed an application before the Additional Subordinate Judge, in the Rent Execution Case No. 5 of 1938 which was the case in which the order for transfer was made. This application was headed, as an application under O. XXI, r. 16 and s. 47, Civil P. O. In this application the facts are stated in some detail, and the Court was asked, amongst other things, in para. 25 of the said application, to recall the order transferring the decree for execution to the Alipur Court. This part of the case was placed upon two grounds which are grounds Nos. 5 and 9 namely that the decree-holder got the order for transfer and the certificate of non-satisfaction from the Court fraudulently and without any notice on the judgment-debtors, and that in any event, the order of transfer ought not to have been made, as there was property of the judgment-debtors within the jurisdiction of the Nadia Court, which was sufficient to satisfy the said rent decree.

The scope of this application was however wider. By the application the judgment-debtors wanted the Court to revise its previous order by which the respondent Sarada was substituted as the decree-holder in the place of the original decree-holders, namely the Khans, and for this reason the application was headed as one under O. XXI, r. 16 also. Another ground runs thus: "for that the application for execution is bad in law and is otherwise not maintainable." Analyzing this application it comes to this: The judgment-debtors said firstly, that the respondent ought not to have been substituted in place of the original decree-holders, their ground apparently being that he had not purchased the said rent decree; secondly, that the order of transfer which had been made by the Court on March 12, 1938 was not a good order, ought to be set aside by the Court itself, and the decree recalled from the Alipur Court and thirdly that the execution should not be allowed to be proceeded with as the application for execution was defective and otherwise bad. After this application was filed, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge in whose Court this was filed, registered it as a miscellaneous case and directed notice to be issued on the respondent. Thereafter the Additional Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia, was abolished and the business of that Court was taken over by the permanent Subordinate Judge of that place. The permanent Subordinate Judge dealt with this application finally by his order dated July 5, 1938. He held (1) that the question relating to the substitution of the respondent cannot be re-opened, (2) that as the application filed by the appellants on April 5, 1938 purported to be under s. 47, Civil P. O. that application was not entertainable by him, and it could only be entertained by the Alipur Court which was then executing the decree, it having been already transferred to that Court, and (3) that even if that part of the said application which asked for reconsideration of the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge dated March 12, 1938 be considered as an application for review, he could not entertain the same as no notice under the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 4 of the Code had been issued by the Additional Subordinate Judge who had passed the original order. He accordingly rejected the said application.

This appeal has been confined only to that part of the said order dated July 5, 1938 by which the learned Subordinate Judge refused to reconsider the order of transfer made by the Additional Subordinate Judge on March 12, 1938. A preliminary objection has been raised by the respondent to the effect that no appeal lies to this Court. The objection is founded on the ground that the learned Subordinate Judge refused the application which, in essence, was an application for review. The argument is that the appellants, in essence, asked for a review of the order dated March 12, 1938. So far as this part of the case is concerned, it was treated by the Subordinate Judge as an application for review and was refused by him on the footing that it was not entertainable by him. We will have to consider whether this contention is correct. In the first place the application in question does not purport to be an application under O. XLVII, r. 1. The judgment-debtors said in this application that the said order was passed ex parte and it was a wrong order on the ground amongst other that the order for transfer was made not in compliance with the provisions of cl. (b) of s. 39, Civil P. O. The question therefore depends upon the question whether an application for transfer of a decree, to the Court which passed the decree, can be regarded as an application relating to the execution of the decree, and secondly whether an objection by a judgment-debtor to such an application is an objection which can come within the purview of s. 47 of the Code. In our judgment, the application comes under s. 47 of the Code and the judgment-debtors rightly headed their application as an application under s. 47. When an application for transfer is made to the Court which passed the decree "that Court does not function merely as a sort post office for receiving the application for transfer of the decree and for transmitting them to the Court, within whose jurisdiction immovable property sought to be sold is situate, for execution; Greenath Chakravarty v. Priya Nath (1), at p. 846."

An application for transfer of a decree passed by a Muffasal Court is a step-in-aid of execution. By that application, the decree-holder asks the Court which passed the decree to assist him for the purposes of carrying further proceedings to realize his decree. An application for transfer is accordingly an application relating to execution of a decree. The Court to which the application for transfer is made does not merely function as a post office but it has judicial duties to perform. It is required by statute to exercise judicial discretion. An objection raised by a judgment-debtor opposing the transfer will be an objection relating to execution of the decree. The words "relating to execution of the decree" used in s. 47, are wide enough to cover the case. We accordingly hold that the order which has been passed by the Court is an order coming within the scope of s. 47 of the Code, and the appeal before us is competent. The view which we are taking is supported by the decision in Bhabani Charan Dutt v. Pratap Chandra Ghosh (2). In this view of the matter the rule issued by this Court is discharged on the ground that an appeal lies to this Court.

We will now deal with the merits of the appeal. We have already held that that part of the objection raised by the appellants which relates to the transfer of the decree is an objection which comes within the purview of s. 47. It is an established principle that a judgment-debtor can prefer objections under s. 47 at any stage of the execution proceedings. These objections have to be determined on their merits, unless a particular objection had been adjudicated upon by the Court earlier, or unless the judgment-debtor is debarred from agitating the particular objection by reason of the principles laid down in Mungal Pershad Dichit v. Girija Kanta Lahiri (3). The particular objection, namely that the decree ought not to have been transferred to the Alipur Court as the judgment-debtors had properties within the jurisdiction of the Nadia Court, sufficient to satisfy the decree, had not been adjudicated upon at a previous stage of the proceedings, nor can the principles formulated in Mungal Pershad Dichit v. Girija Kanta Lahiri (3), be applied, for the order of transfer made on March 12, 1938, was made ex parte, and without giving the judgment-debtors an opportunity to contest the decree-holder's prayer for transfer. The learned Subordinate Judge ought to have, accordingly considered the said objection on its merits.

We have already stated that in the tabular statement on the basis of which the order for transfer was made, it was not stated that any of the judgment-debtors resided within the jurisdiction of the Alipur

Court. The application for transfer accordingly did not purport to be on the ground mentioned in cl. (a), s. 39, Civil P. C. The application for transfer was apparently made under cl. (b) of the said section. But the whole of s. 39 gives a discretion to the Court in the matter of transfer. That discretion must be judicially exercised. If the application for transfer is under cl. (b), the Court must be satisfied that the judgment-debtor has not property within its jurisdiction sufficient to satisfy the decree. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the judgment-debtor has property within its jurisdiction sufficient to satisfy the decree, ordinarily it ought not to transfer the decree for execution by another Court. Even if the Court comes to the conclusion that the properties within its jurisdiction are sufficient to satisfy the decree, in special circumstances notwithstanding that fact, the Court may transfer the decree for execution to another jurisdiction for. cl. (d) of s. 39 is sufficiently comprehensive; but in the last mentioned case the Court should record its reasons for making the order of transfer. In any view of the matter, s. 39 indicates that the Court which passed the decree must apply its mind to the matter when an application has been made by the decree-holder for transfer of the decree to another jurisdiction for execution, and exercise its discretion vested in it by that section in a judicial manner. From the orders of the Court below as recorded on March 10, 1938 and March 12, 1938, it appears that the Court in this case did not apply its mind to the matter at all and did not consider at all that it had a discretion to exercise. We accordingly set aside that part of the order dated July 5, 1938, which deals with the question as to whether the order dated March 12, 1938, ought to be recalled or not.

The order which we propose to pass is this that the case should go back to the Subordinate Judge at Nadia to allow the parties to lead evidence bearing on the question as to whether the judgment-debtors against whom the decree-holder wants to proceed have or have not properties within the jurisdiction of the Nadia Court sufficient to satisfy the decree. If the Court finds that there are properties within the jurisdiction of the Nadia Court sufficient to satisfy the decree, it will consider whether a case has been made out for transfer in view of the provisions of cl. (d) of s. 39, Civil P. C. If it comes to the conclusion that the properties within its jurisdiction, are sufficient to satisfy the decree, or no other reason exists for granting the application for transfer, it will recall its order dated March 12, 1938, and in that event recall the decree from the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipur where execution proceedings are pending. Pending this enquiry by the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nadia, the attachment effected by the Alipur Court will remain in force. But further proceedings in the Alipur Court are stayed pending the final determination of the question for which we remand the matter to the lower Court. The appeal is allowed, the order of the lower Court is set aside and the case remanded to that Court. Costs of this appeal will abide the result, hearing-fees three gold mohurs.

Hindu Law—Debts—Antecedent—Alienation of ancestral property by father for antecedent debts—Son impugning alienation—Burden lies upon him to prove that debts were for immoral purpose—Such burden not discharged—Whether it must be shown that debt was for legal necessity or family benefit—Effect of alienation upon son's liability when it is sale and mortgage, explained.

A son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debt which is not immoral, illegal or Ayyavaharika. But this does not empower the father to alienate his son's share in the ancestral property except for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or for the payment of an antecedent debt not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. Once it is proved that there was an antecedent debt, genuinely independent of the subsequent transaction of alienation, or that the alienee inquired and believed in good faith that such a debt existed, and that the alienation was made for satisfying that debt, then the burden of proving that the antecedent debt was incurred for immoral or illegal purposes lies on the son who impugns the alienation. That burden is not discharged by merely showing that the father was leading an extravagant and dissolute life, but it must be proved that the particular antecedent debt was incurred for immoral purposes or was connected with some act of immorality. If this is not proved by the son, then it is not necessary to consider whether the antecedent debt was incurred for any legal necessity or for the benefit of the family. If the alienation challenged be a sale, it would not be set aside if a substantial portion of its consideration was required for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or to pay off an antecedent debt which was not immoral or illegal, although the remaining portion was not so required. The material question to be considered in such cases is whether the sale itself was justified. If so, the sale will be upheld as a whole. But the case of a mortgage stands on a different footing. If a part of its consideration is for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or for the payment of such an antecedent debt as to justify the alienation, and the other part is not so, yet not being borrowed for an immoral or illegal purpose, is such that the son is under a pious obligation to pay it, then the former alone will be a charge on the son's interest in the property, while the latter is not binding on the son as a mortgage debt, but only as an unsecured debt of the father. F. A. from the decision of the First Class Sub-Judge, Satara, in C. S. No. 21 of 1933.

Messrs. S. A. Desai, K. A. Padhye and R. R. Sabnis, for the Appellant

Messrs. S. R. Parulekar and J. S. Savant, for Respondents Nos. 4 and 13, and 5 to 7 and 9 to 12, respectively.

Lokur, J.—This is an appeal from a decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Satara dismissing the plaintiff's suit for partition against his father, defendant No. 1, his grandmother, defendant No. 14, and twelve others to whom the ancestral properties were alienated by his father. He claimed to have those alienations set aside on the ground that they were not supported by any legal necessity nor were they for the benefit of the family and that they were due to the immorality of his father. A preliminary objection was raised in the lower Court that the suit was bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action, but that objection was overruled and the suit was tried on its merits. As the alleged misjoinder has not affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, the decree of the lower Court cannot be reversed or altered in appeal on that ground by reason of the provisions of s. 99, Civil P. O., and the appeal has to be disposed of on the merits.

Defendant No. 1 was born in 1895 and he married the mother of the plaintiff in 1910 when he was about 15 years of age. Thereafter he went to live with his father-in-law, Govind Ganesh Riswadkar, who was serving in the Police Department. In his absence and during his minority, the family property was managed by his mother, defendant No. 14, with the help of her brother, defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 1 lived with his father-in-law till 1914, when he was transferred to Goghav. Thereafter he began to visit his village Ped off and on, and being dissatisfied with the management of the estate carried on by his mother and her brother (defendant No. 2), he filed a suit against them to recover possession of his property (Suit No. 109 of 1914). The suit was eventually compromised on November 5, 1914, and by the consent decree (Ex. 78) two lands were given by way of gift to defendant No. 2 as remuneration for his having managed his property during his minority. Two other properties had already been sold to defendant No. 2 and that sale also was confirmed by the consent decree. Two lands and a portion of the ancestral house were given to defendant No. 14 for her maintenance and residence. Even thereafter defendant No. 1 lived for some time with his father-in-law at Goghav, and finally returned to his village Ped in 1917. It is alleged that he then fell into bad company and began to dissipate the property. It appears that between the years 1917 and 1930 he alienated the bulk of his ancestral property. The plaintiff was born on February 2, 1918, and this suit was filed during his minority by his mother's father, Govind Ganesh Riswadkar, as his next friend, who has challenged all the alienations effected by defendant No. 1 both before and after the birth of the plaintiff. The major portion of the moneys realized by defendant No. 1 from the sale or mortgage of the ancestral lands is said to have been taken by him for building a house constructing wells in two fields called Bhutoba's field and Palashacha Mali, for purchasing an engine for pumping water, and for domestic needs. Though a good deal of oral evidence is adduced on behalf of the plaintiff to prove that his father was leading a dissolute life, was addicted to drink, ganja and women, and was dissipating the property, no attempt has been made to connect any of the alienations directly with his acts of immorality. An attempt is made to prove that as a matter of fact no house was built by defendant No. 1 nor was any engine for pumping water actually purchased. It is also pointed out that so much money must not have been spent in sinking or constructing the wells.

The principles of Hindu Law as to how far a son is bound by his father's alienations of the ancestral property are well settled. A son is under a pious obligation to pay his father's debt which is not immoral, illegal or Avyavaharika. But this does not empower the father to alienate his son's share in the ancestral property except for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or for the payment of an antecedent debt not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes: Asman Vaman Yadav v. Ganpat Tuka Ram (1). Once it is proved that there was an antecedent debt, genuinely independent of the subsequent transaction of alienation, or that the alienee inquired and believed in good faith that such a debt existed, and that the alienation was made for satisfying that debt, then the burden of proving that the antecedent debt was incurred for immoral or illegal purposes lies on the son who impugns the alienation. That burden is not discharged by merely showing that the father was leading an extravagant and dissolute life, but it must be proved that the particular antecedent debt was incurred for immoral purposes or was connected with some act of immorality: Bal v. Maneklal (2) at p. 69 and Shyam Narayan v. Suraj Narain (3). If this is not proved by the son, then it is not necessary to consider whether the antecedent debt was incurred for any legal necessity or for the benefit of the family: Shankar Narayan v. Tukaram (4). If the alienation challenged be a sale, it would not be set aside if a substantial portion of its consideration was required for a legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or to pay off an antecedent debt which was not immoral or illegal, although the remaining portion was not so required. As observed by the Privy Council in Ram Sundar Lal v. Lachmi Narain (5) the material question to be considered in such cases is whether the sale itself was justified. If so, the sale will be upheld as a whole. But the case of a mortgage stands on a different footing. If a part of its consideration is for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family or for the payment of such an antecedent debt as to justify the alienation, and the other part is not so, yet not being borrowed for an immoral or illegal purpose, is such that the son is under a pious obligation to pay it, then the former alone will be a charge on the son's interest in the property, while the latter is not binding on the son as a mortgage debt, but only as an unsecured debt of the father: Mahomed Ibrahim v. Shivalal (6). I will now proceed to consider the different alienations in this suit in the light of these principles.

The property in suit in which the plaintiff claims a half share by partition consists of twenty-three lands and one house described in the schedule attached to the plaint. It is not disputed that the plaintiff is entitled to one-half share in the joint family property. The lower Court has inadvertently dismissed the entire suit in spite of the fact that the first five lands described in the schedule are not alleged to have been alienated to anybody and are presumably still in the possession of defendant No. 1. The land at serial No. 7 (survey No. 494) and a portion of the ancestral house described at serial No. 24 are given to defendant No. 1's mother (defendant No. 14) for her maintenance and residence by the consent decree in Suit No. 109 of 1914 (Ex. 78). The plaintiff is entitled to his half share in these properties subject to the rights of defendant No. 14. Certain lands were alienated before the birth of the plaintiff and it is conceded in this Court that he is not entitled to challenge those alienations. Thus the only transactions which are impugned in this Court are those represented by Exs. 80, 83, 89, 95, 97, 99 and 88 and I will now consider how far each of them is binding on the plaintiff. (After considering the evidence in respect of these transactions his Lordship proceeded.) The other alienations mentioned in the plaint are not now challenged, and the result is that the appeal will have to be partially allowed and the plaintiff awarded his share in the light of the above findings.

For these reasons we partially allow the appeal and declare that the plaintiff-appellant is not bound by the alienations effected by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2 under the sale deed, Ex. 80, dated April 8, 1922, in favour of defendants Nos. 5 and 6 under the sale deed, Ex. 83, dated February 6, 1918, and in favour of defendants Nos. 11 and 12 under the sale deed, Ex. 88, dated April 1, 1924. The lands alienated by these documents and the lands described at serial Nos. 1 to 5 in the schedule attached to the plaint should be partitioned by metes and bounds and the plaintiff-appellant should recover possession of his one-half share in them. The plaintiff-appellant is also entitled to his one-half share in survey No. 494 described at serial No. 7 in the schedule attached to the plaint and the ancestral house described at serial No. 24 in the said schedule, subject to the rights of defendant No. 14 under the consent decree in Suit No. 109 of 1914. As regards the mortgage in favour of defendant No. 13 under Ex. 89, dated August 1, 1930, we declare that the plaintiff-appellant is bound by the mortgage to the extent of Rs. 4,900 but the remaining consideration of Rs. 1,100 will not be a charge on the plaintiff-appellant's share in the mortgaged property. We declare that the plaintiff-appellant is entitled to one-half share in the equity of redemption in respect of that property. The rest of the plaintiff-appellant's claim is rejected. A preliminary decree for partition should be drawn up accordingly. The plaintiff-appellant shall pay the costs in both the Courts of defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12 and 13 in proportion to the claim disallowed, and recover his costs in both the Courts from defendants Nos. 2, 5, 6 and 11 in proportion to the claim awarded. Defendants Nos. 1 and 14 shall bear their own costs, if any.

MUNNA LAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

CHATAN PRAKASH AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 84, 83—Amendment of s. 84, if retrospective—Subsequent mortgagee depositing amount of earlier mortgage in Court to be paid to rightful owner—Dispute regarding estate of earlier mortgagee—Proceedings under s. 83 terminated—Withdrawal and redeposit of deposit by subsequent mortgagee—Interest held ceased to run after date of first deposit.

An amendment will not in general have any retrospective effect unless it is specifically provided that the amendment is to have a retrospective effect. There is nothing in the amendment of s. 84, T. P. Act, which enacts that that amendment is in any way to be retrospective. [p. 75, col. 2.]

A mortgagor executed a subsequent mortgage of the same property in favour of another. The subsequent mortgagee deposited the amount of the earlier mortgage in Court to be payable to the party entitled to it. After this deposit there was a dispute between rival claimants regarding the title to the estate of the earlier mortgagee. One of the claimants made an application showing his willingness to hand over deposit to the depositor pending the litigation regarding title to the estate of the earlier mortgagee. When the proceedings under s. 83, T. P. Act, came to an end, the depositor (subsequent mortgagee) withdrew the deposit but subsequently redeposited it in the Court in which litigation regarding title to the estate of the earlier mortgagee was instituted:

Held, that interest ceased to run from the date of the first deposit.

F. A. from the decision of the Additional Judge, Bulandshahr, dated February 24, 1937.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and Hazari Lal Kapoor, for the Appellant.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Messrs. N. U. A. Siddiqui, Shiva Prasad, Sinha, K. C. Mital, Jagnandan Lal and R. N. Mukerji, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal by the sole plaintiff Munna Lal whose suit has been dismissed by the learned Civil Judge. The mortgage in suit was dated June 4, 1918 executed by Mst. Kirpa Devi, widow of Raghunath Prasad, in favour of Shambhu Nath, mortgagee. The amount was Rs. 40,650 at eleven annas per mensem with six monthly rests. The document is printed on p. 43 et seq. The main defence was that there had been a tender under s. 83, T. P. Act, by Shib Charan Das, defendant No. 6, on September 5, 1921 of Rs. 50,237-8-6 for payment, but that sum had not been withdrawn by the mortgagee. Subsequently there was payment of the amount which was withdrawn by the present plaintiff. The present plaintiff claims however that interest did not cease to run by the tender of September 5, 1921 under s. 83, T. P. Act, as the money was subsequently withdrawn by Shib Charan Das, defendant No. 6 and the claim is for various periods of interest after that tender. The claim has been disallowed in full by the Court below. The claim before it, was for Rs. 34,000. In appeal the amount has been reduced to Rs. 17,000.

The details are that on p. 49 there is a mortgage dated August 31, 1921 by Mst. Kirpa Devi for Rs. 64,250 in favour of defendant No. 6, Shib Charan Das, leaving with him Rs. 50,203 to be paid for the full satisfaction of the mortgage in the present suit. After the registration of that document, on September 5, 1921, defendant No. 6 made a deposit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut adding a small sum of Rs. 34-8-6 for the interest on the intervening five days, the total deposit being Rs. 50,237-8-6. The original mortgagee Shambhu Nath died on May 12, 1919 and was succeeded by his widow Bishun Devi. The deposit was made in the name of this lady, who was alive on the date of deposit, but it so happened that before she received notice and could withdraw the money she died. The exact date of her death is not given but these facts are admitted. It may be noted that on p. 55 of the paper book No. 13 in the array of the opposite parties in the application under s. 83, T. P. Act, was the present plaintiff Munna Lal. The other persons in that application Nos. 2 to 12 were trustees of a trust created of the property left by L. Shambhu Nath and the opposite party No. 1 was Mst. Bishun Devi. Therefore on her death the question was whether the plaintiff Munna Lal was entitled to withdraw the money or the trustees. On p. 59 there is an application by Munna Lal in the proceeding under s. 83, T. P. Act, claiming that he was entitled. On the other hand, the trustees claimed that they were entitled.

Some question arose as to whether the money would be placed in deposit in the Allahabad Bank at Meerut and there was no agreement on this point and eventually by an order Ex. 4 dated February 4, 1922 the Subordinate Judge stated that as the parties did not agree on the point the application should be filed. This means that the application under s. 83, T. P. Act, should be filed. A few days later, on February 8, 1922, defendant No. 6 withdrew the money as the proceedings under s. 83 had terminated. On November 29, 1922, Munna Lal brought a suit, No. 272 of 1922, against the trustees in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Ludhiana in the Punjab. In this suit there was an application made as shown on p. 73 by defendant No. 6, Shib Charan Das, on June 6, 1925 for the deposit of Rs. 50,000, which deposit was allowed with the consent of parties on June 16, 1925, and the amount was deposited in the bank as shown on p. 77. The plaintiff obtained a decree in his favour in this suit and eventually the plaintiff on p. 79 withdrew the money under an order dated December 13, 1926. The plaintiff has made in the present suit claims for interest for various periods between the dates September 5, 1921, of the original deposit and the date of his withdrawal under the order of December 13, 1926. The Court below has dismissed the suit on two grounds, one that the plaintiff was not entitled to obtain any interest after the deposit on September 5, 1921, by defendant No. 6, and secondly that the present suit is time-barred. The T. P. Act, before the Amendment Act of 1929 was the Act in force at the time of these transactions. In s. 84 of this Act, there was no provision in regard to the withdrawal of a deposit by a person who had made the deposit. Such a provision no doubt is contained in the amended Act and is as follows :

"Provided that, where the mortgagor has deposited such amount without having made a previous tender thereof and has subsequently withdrawn the same or any part thereof, interest on the principal money shall be payable from the date of such withdrawal."

Learned Counsel for appellant argues that the spirit of this proviso should be applied to the unamended s. 84 in the Act. We do not think that we can apply the spirit of an amendment or the letter of an amendment in this manner. Learned Counsel points out that the amendment to s. 84 was contained in s. 45, Amendment Act XX of 1929 and that s. 45 is not one of the sections mentioned in s. 63. That is so, but all that s. 63 provides is that nothing in certain sections shall be deemed in any way to affect certain things that have previously happened. The section does not provide that the other sections not mentioned in that Act are to have any retrospective effect. An amendment will not in general have any retrospective effect unless it is specifically provided that the amendment is to have a retrospective effect. There is nothing in the amendment of s. 84, T. P. Act, which enacts that that amendment is in any way to be retrospective. To make such a proviso retrospective would involve certain difficulties and it would have to be definitely stated how far it was to be retrospective and with what effect. Clearly, as there is no provision on these points, the intention was that it should not be retrospective. We do not think therefore that the amendment can affect the case before us. The case-law on the point under the unamended Act is as follows :

In Hukam Singh v. Babu Lal (1) it was decided that where the full amount due under a mortgage had been paid into Court under s. 83, T. P. Act and the mortgagee who had received notice had refused to accept the deposit and the mortgagor subsequently withdrew the deposit then interest would not run and the withdrawal did not affect this provision that interest would not run. In arriving at this decision the Court followed the ruling in Velayuda Naicker v.

Hyder-Hussain Khan (2) and did not follow the ruling in Krishnasami Chettiar v. Ramasami Chettiar (3). This appears to be the only ruling of this High Court on the subject. The Madras rulings which had differed were the subject of a decision by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Ramabhadra Thevar v. Arunachalam Pillai (4). It was laid down that where a proper deposit had been made and the mortgagee after notice of the deposit refused to accept it and the mortgagor thereafter withdrew the deposit there was still a presumption that the mortgagor continued ready and willing to pay and this presumption cast the onus of proof on the mortgagee to prove the contrary. Therefore in such a case the interest would not run after the deposit, and the withdrawal would not affect this provision. The case-law therefore under the unamended Act was, so far as this Court and the Madras Court are concerned, against the appellant. We find that no case has been made out for the claim of the appellant to interest. As we do not accept the case for the appellant on this point learned Counsel did not argue the case in regard to limitation. We, therefore, dismiss this first appeal. In regard to costs we follow the procedure of the Court below as there are two sets of defendants-respondents and we allow separate costs of each set of defendants-respondents.

Verma, J.—I agree that the appeal is without force and should be dismissed. The only point urged before us is that interest did not cease to run after the deposit under s. 83, T. P. Act, because Shib Charan Das subsequently withdrew the money after the proceedings under s. 83 had terminated. It is argued that Shib Charan Das ought to have left the money in Court even after the termination of the proceeding and that as he did not do so, he is liable to pay interest. It seems to me that this argument is not open to the plaintiff Munna Lal. The material facts bearing on this point are these. As will appear from the judgment delivered by my learned brother the mortgage in suit was executed by one Mst. Kripa Devi in favour of one Shambhu Nath on June 4, 1918. Shambhu Nath died shortly afterwards and his widow Mst. Bishun Devi succeeded to his estate for life by right of inheritance as a Hindu widow. She executed a deed of trust in respect of the property that she had inherited from her deceased husband and appointed trustees. In the meantime, the mortgagor Mst. Kirpa Devi had on August 31, 1921 executed another deed of mortgage in favour of the present defendant No. 6, Shib Charan Das, for Rs. 64,250 and out of the mortgage money had left the sum of Rs. 50,203 in the hands of Shib Charan Das for payment to the prior mortgagee, Mst. Bishun Devi.

On September 5, 1921 Shib Charan Das made an application under s. 83, T. P. Act, and deposited Rs. 50,237-8-6 the excess representing the interest for the intervening five days. He impleaded as opposite parties to this application Mst. Bishun Devi and the trustees and prayed that the money may be paid over to the party who may be entitled to it and the mortgage 'may be caused to be redeemed.' Mst. Bishun Devi died within a few days of the presentation of this application and the plaintiff-appellant Munna Lal then appeared on the scene. He was impleaded as an opposite party to the application under s. 83. He made an application (Ex. B-6, p. 59 of the paper-book) stating that he was the reversionary heir to the estate, of Shambhu Nath and that he had applied to the District Judge in respect of that estate under Act XIX of 1841 and praying that the money deposited by Shib Charan Das be given to him or may be kept in deposit in the Court till the determination of his rights. The trustees, on the other hand, filed an application asserting that they were entitled to the money and they also filed the mortgage-deed along with their application (vide Ex. B-1 dated November 9, 1921). Certain discussions as to whether the money should or should not be deposited in a bank followed. On January 13, 1922 Munna Lal made an application (Ex. 1-6, p. 69 of the paper-book) in which he stated that he had been directed by the Court of the District Judge to bring a regular suit to establish his title to the estate of Shambhu Nath, deceased, and that he proposed to do so shortly. He prayed that "either the parties may under order dated January 7, 1922 be directed to obtain succession certificate, or the money may be returned to L. Shib Charan Das from whom it can be realized again; otherwise the opposite party, the trustees who are not entitled to get the same under any law, would squander it away..."

He also prayed that he be granted more than one month's time to enable him to bring a regular suit for declaration of his title and made the further suggestion that till the disposal of the case

"the sale amount might remain in deposit in the Court or it might be deposited in some bank to the credit of the Court."

On February 4, 1922 the Court ordered Shib Charan Das's application to be "filed". The proceedings thus came to an end. A few days later Shib Charan Das withdrew the amount and subsequently tendered it again in the Court in which Munna Lal filed his suit for declaration of title. As has already been mentioned by my learned brother, this suit was subsequently decreed in favour of Munna Lal and it was under the orders of that Court that Munna Lal withdrew the money which had been deposited by Shib Charan Das in that Court. In my judgment Munna Lal having himself expressed in his application dated January 13, 1922 his willingness to the money being given back to Shib Charan Das and to its remaining in deposit with him until the settlement of the dispute among those who claimed title to the estate of Shambhu Nath, the argument now advanced by learned Counsel cannot be accepted.

I entirely agree with the Court below in holding that Shib Charan Das did all that could possibly be done to tender the mortgage money to whomsoever who might be entitled to it. That there was dispute among those who claimed title to it was no fault of his. He took proceedings under s. 83, T. P. Act, almost immediately after the execution of the mortgage-deed in his favour by Mst. Kripa Devi. Those proceedings proved infructuous as Mst. Bishun Devi died and there arose a dispute between the trustees appointed by her and Munna Lal. When those proceedings came to an end, he withdrew the money which he had deposited in that Court, but he tendered it again in the Court at Ludhiana where Munna Lal had filed his suit against the trustees. I am of opinion that, in the circumstances mentioned above, interest ceased from September 5, 1921.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 164—Statement recorded under s. 164—Its return to witness or Pleader is illegal—Merchandise Marks Act (IV of 1889), s. 14—Costs to be awarded under s. 14 and not under s. 546-A, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Such costs include Advocate's fees.

Under sub-s. (2) of s. 164, Criminal P. C., statements or confessions recorded are to be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be tried or inquired into. Returning of statements recorded under s. 164 either to witnesses or to the Pleader is wholly illegal.

On any prosecution mentioned in s. 13, or for an offence under the relevant sections of the I. P. C., the Court should award costs under s. 14, Merchandise Marks Act and not under s. 546-A, Criminal P. C. These costs include the Advocate's fees.

Cr. A. from an order of the Second Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, dated July 26, 1939.

Mr. Munshi, for the Appellant.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—As to the merits of this appeal, there is little to be said. The complainant adduced satisfactory proof of his claim that this trade-mark, which he had registered in 1930, was his property, and that he has used it since before then, in 1928. There is his own evidence, his registration, his vouchers supported by the voucher books themselves, his conduct in 1934, as evinced by the co-respondence, the evidence of the tinsmith, Sayed Mohammad, (P. W. No. 5), and the evidence of Venkataraman (P. W. No. 2), though the latter can only give evidence as to the complainant using the mark in the last four years.

The evidence for the defence is more voluminous, it is true, but the Magistrate thought that it was all concocted and false. I have gone through it very carefully, and I agree with the Magistrate. This defence, which is the only matter argued before me is that the mark was common to the trade long before the complainant registered it in 1930. I note that this defence was only put to the complainant at a very late stage in his examination. L. C. Madhani's business in this line has been wound up. The vouchers filed (Nos. 26, 29 and 30) purport to show that he sold oil and grease mixture described as "101." The appellant himself admits the case with which these vouchers can be manufactured from old voucher books; but Madhani was not even questioned about these, and they were not proved. He claims that his father used this trade-mark from 1915 up to 1930 as his father's own, and that after 1930 many traders adopted it. He had no documentary evidence, and admitted that though his father registered many other trade-marks, he did not register this one. (His Lordship further examined the defence evidence and continued). The only defence offered by the appellant as regards his correspondence with the complainant in 1934, (Exs. C and D) is a mere denial that he received any letter or sent any reply. It is suggested that this prosecution was instituted through malice. This is evidently not so from the several attempts made towards settlement, and I would note, on the other hand, that the accused was trying to harass the complainant from the very beginning by irrelevant and prolix cross-examination on such subjects as to the nature of the groundnut-oil which he used in his mixture, the firm from which he bought it, his account books relating to salaries paid to his employees and so on. This should have been much more rigorously stopped at the outset by the Magistrate. All sorts of delaying tactics were employed by the accused, and there were no less than thirty different adjournments for hearing in the case, which lasted over a year. I see no reason to interfere with the appeal against the conviction and sentence.

As regards costs, the trial Court awarded Rs. 37-8-0 costs, to the complainant, professing to act under s. 546-A, Criminal P. C. The Court should have awarded costs under s. 14, Merchandise Marks Act, which reads that on any prosecution mentioned in s. 13, or for an offence under the relevant sections of the I. P. C., a Court may order costs to be paid by one party to the other having regard to the information given by, and the conduct of, the parties; such costs, on application, to be recoverable as if they were a fine. These costs, of course, include the Advocate's fee. Section 546-A is limited in terms to process and petition-writers' fees. Another section, s. 148, however, specifically allows Pleader's fees in applications under s. 145 and this is the practice in maintenance cases, s. 488 (7). This appeal will be dismissed, and the appellant will pay the costs of this appeal, including Advocate's fee, ten gold mohurs, as the hearing has lasted nearly six hours spread over three days.

Note.—The only section of the Criminal P. C. under which the Magistrates are authorized to take such sworn statements is s. 164. I am informed that the accused and his Pleader took these witnesses to one of the Honorary Magistrates (I presume a First Class Magistrate or one specially empowered in this respect), and that the statement after being recorded was returned either to the witness, or, more probably, to the Pleader. This is wholly illegal. Under sub-s. (2) of s. 164, statements or confessions recorded shall be forwarded to the Magistrate by whom the case is to be tried or inquired into. The District Magistrate should warn Magistrates subordinate to him accordingly.

BHAGWANDAS GHANSHAMDAS—

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (IV of 1887), ss. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8—Person caught actually taking bets over telephone—Conviction under s. 5—Conviction of accused under ss. 4 and 5 on same facts and acts—There should be only one punishment—Money found in coat pocket of accused convicted of gaming—Seizure of, under s. 6.

Section 3, Bom. Prevention of Gambling Act makes "gaming" within the meaning of the Act the collection or soliciting of bets, and it makes no difference if these bets are brought by a messenger or person or sent by telephone or sent and received by telephone. It is gaming within the definition of s. 3, and in s. 7 the word "persons," includes "person" the plural includes the singular. Therefore, a person caught actually in the act of taking bets over the telephone can be rightly convicted of gaming, under s. 5.

Where the prosecution have relied upon the same facts and upon the same acts of the accused to prove that the offences, under ss. 4 and 5 were committed, the accused may be convicted under both sections but there should be one punishment for both.

It was not, the intention of the Legislature that moneys should be forfeited when there is no reason to believe that these moneys were connected with the gaming. The power of forfeiture exercisable by the Magistrate under s. 8 is discretionary. Where the money seized was found in the coat pocket of the accused, it cannot be said, in the absence of any satisfactory explanation by him that this money was not rightly seized under s. 6 and was not connected with the gaming of which he has been convicted.

Cr. A. against the conviction and sentences passed by the Second Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, dated February 20, 1939.

Mr. Gopaldas N. Lala, for the Appellant.
Mirza Nadirbeg, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant in this case, one Bhagwandās, has been convicted by the Second Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, of offences under ss. 4 and 5, Prevention of Gambling Act, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500 under s. 4 and to a fine of Rs. 200 under s. 5. I admitted this appeal because, though I thought it clearly proved from the evidence that the appellant was rightly convicted under s. 4, it did appear from the evidence that he was the only person gaming when he was arrested in the house on the night of August 12, and it was arguable that under s. 7 of the Act a person could not be convicted of gaming with himself, and the word "persons" is used in the plural in that section and not the singular. Further, it is argued that the acts of which the accused has been found guilty, and which brought him within the ambit of s. 4, also were relied on by the prosecution to bring him within the ambit of s. 5, and that though an accused person can be convicted of two separate offences constituted of the same acts, he cannot be punished twice over. Further, it is argued that the Magistrate was wrong in forfeiting money found in the house as it was not proved that the moneys forfeited were instruments of gaming within the meaning of ss. 3 and 8 of the Act.

So far as the offence under s. 5 is concerned, it is true that s. 7 refers to "persons" and not "person," and that ordinarily it might be said that a person cannot be convicted of gaming with himself, but in this case the evidence of the Sub-Inspector and the mashirs is to the effect that the applicant was caught actually in the act of taking bets over the telephone. The Sub-Inspector got information from one Behari-an informant, who was called as a witness, Ex. 1, and after having got a warrant in proper form from the District Superintendent of Police raided the house at about midnight. He actually took the telephone receiver from the appellant's hand and got into conversation with one Sadhusing who appears one of the appellant's best customers or agents, and whose name appears in the accounts, Exs. 9-A to 9-I and Ex. 10. The Sub-Inspector found two slips, Exhibits 4 and 5, on the table, and Ex. 6 on which the appellant was actually writing whole telephoning. These exhibits clearly show that the appellant was receiving bets in American Futures and are instruments of gaming. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector is sufficiently corroborated by the evidence of the mashirs and the mashirnama. But it is said that even so, only one person was found there, and there is no presumption that he was gaming; a person cannot game alone; but s. 3 makes "gaming" within the meaning of the Act the collection or soliciting of bets, and it appears to me it makes no difference if these bets are brought by a messenger or person or sent by telephone or sent and received by telephone. It is gaming within the definition of s. 3, and in s. 7 the word "persons" includes "person," the plural includes the singular. Therefore it appears to me that the appellant was rightly convicted of gaming, an offence under s. 5.

But it is said that upon these very acts upon which the appellant has been convicted of gaming, he has also been convicted of keeping a common gaming-house and that therefore he is being punished twice for the same acts, and reference is made to a Bombay case, Emperor v. Pyarilal Gokulprasad (1); in which, upon like facts, an accused was convicted under s. 4 only. It appears to me that each case must be considered upon its own facts. Facts proved may show an accused was committing an offence under s. 4; other facts proved may show he was committing an offence under s. 5. It depends upon the facts of each case, but in this case it appears to me that the prosecution rely upon the same facts to constitute the two different offences, Exs. 4, 5, 6 and 7. The accounts, Exs. 9-B to 9-I, do not appear to show dealings in American Futures but ordinary business; and it does appear that the appellant did two kinds of business, one the betting in American Futures, and the other the ordinary Teji Mandi business or speculation in cotton. This is no offence, so it does appear that the prosecution have relied upon the same facts and upon the same acts of the appellant to prove that the offences under ss. 4 and 5 were committed, and therefore it appears to me that while the convictions under both sections should be confirmed, there should be one punishment for both, the fine of Rs. 500 for the more serious offence, so that the fine of Rs. 200 for the lesser offence under s. 5 should be refunded, and I order accordingly.

On the question of the forfeiture of the money, I think however the appellant has no case. Mr. Gopaldas argues that money can only be forfeited if it is shown to be instrument of gaming, but that only refers to money found on the person of the accused and not in the house. "Therein" in s. 8 refers to the house and moneys may be seized under s. 6 (d) which are not instruments of gaming within the meaning of s. 3; but it was not, I think, the intention of the Legislature that moneys should be forfeited when there was no reason to believe that these moneys were connected with the gaming. The power of forfeiture exercisable by the Magistrate under s. 8 is discretionary. In this case, the money was found in the coat pocket of the appellant. I do not think it can be said, in the absence of any satisfactory explanation by the appellant, that this money was not rightly seized under s. 6 and was not connected with the gaming of which the appellant has been convicted. The Magistrate's order of forfeiture was, in my opinion, correct. Therefore I think the fine of Rs. 200 for the conviction under s. 5 should be remitted. Otherwise, the order of the Magistrate is proper and should be confirmed and the appeal dismissed accordingly. The balance of fine must be paid by tomorrow or the proportionate period of the sentence of imprisonment passed by the Magistrate in default must be served.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, s. 22—Decree amended—Limitation to be counted from date of amended decree.

The decree contemplated in O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C., must be the decree to be executed, not only when it is an appellate decree dealt with in cl. (2) but also when it is a decree which has been reviewed or amended as dealt with in cls. (3) and (4) of Art. 182, Lim. Act. Where, therefore, a decree is amended, the period of one year is to be counted from the date of the amended decree and not the original decree.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and Harinandan Singh, for the Appellants.

Sir M. N. Mukharji, Messrs. G. C. Das and M. N. Pal, for the Respondents.

Dhavlé, J.—This appeal arises out of an order dismissing an application under O. XXI, r. 90 for setting aside an execution sale. The only point urged before us is that the execution itself, which was based on an application of September 18, 1935, was incompetent because the decree under execution was passed on January 26, 1934, and no notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was either served or even taken out. It is however not disputed that the decree of January 26, 1934—it was a final decree in a partition suit—was amended after notice to the parties concerned on September 2, 1935. If limitation is counted from this date, no notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was at all necessary. The learned Advocate for the appellants has contended that the date of the decree contemplated in O. XXI, r. 22 must be the date of the decree as originally passed and cannot be the date of amendment of the decree; and in support of this contention he has referred to cl. (4) which was added in 1908 to Art. 182 (replacing old Art. 179), Lim. Act, and gives the starting point of limitation for the execution of a decree which has been amended as the date of the amendment. But that addition was only made in order to settle a conflict of views on the question whether the amendment of a decree did or did not come within the expression "a review of judgment" which occurred in cl. (3) and gave a fresh starting point. Unlike Art. 182 and unlike the Civil P. C. of 1882, O. XXI, r. 22 does not specifically deal with decrees which have been modified in appeal, and yet it is obvious that in such cases the period of one year will have to be counted from the date of the appellate decree which is the decree to be executed. The decree contemplated in O. XXI, r. 22 must, it seems to me be the decree to be executed, not only when it is an appellate decree dealt with in cl. (2) but also when it is a decree which has been reviewed or amended as dealt with in cls. (3) and (4) of Art. 182, Lim. Act. From the time the original decree was amended—I observe in passing that it was amended on notice and before it had become time-barred—the parties in the present case were all (as the case may be) bound by or entitled to execute the amended decree instead of the original decree; and the starting point for limitation for execution was the date of the amendment. Why then must O. XXI, r. 22 be so construed as to count the period of one year from the date of the original unamended decree? And the respondents took their stand so much on the amendment that they not only specified it in their particulars against the heading "the date of the decree" prescribed by r. 11 (2) (c) of O. XXI but further sought execution (in part) by proceeding against property which only came to the appellants as a result of the amendment. In my opinion the lower Court was right in counting the period of one year from the date of the amended decree and therefore holding that no notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was necessary. The appeal fails and I would dismiss it with costs.

Meredith, J.—I agree.

The guardian mother of minor has authority to agree to refer the disputes arising inside the family to the decision of arbitrators under Para. 17 (1), where she finds that it is for the benefit of the minor.

Where the parties have chosen the arbitrators to decide their disputes outside the Courts, considering that the knowledge of law of the arbitrators is sound the Courts would be very reluctant to interfere with the decision of the tribunal and would only do so in cases mentioned in Sch. Mr. Pt. Anindra Mohan Dutt, for Respondent No. 3.

Derbyshire, C. J.—The facts of this matter are set out very fully in the judgment which is appealed from. At one time it appeared that there were difficulties in this case, but that was before our attention had been drawn to the fact that the submission to arbitration here was made under Para. 17(1), Sch. II, Civil P. C. When that was realized it became clear—and indeed the learned Advocate for the appellants did not contend otherwise—that the guardian mother of the minor appellant in this case had authority to agree to refer the disputes that had arisen inside the family to the decision of arbitrators under Para. 17 (1). Those arbitrators who were a Barrister and a Pleader had made their award. It was contended first that the award was invalid because the guardian mother had no authority to agree to refer the disputes to arbitration. That contention has gone and with it the argument that the submission and the award were both invalid.

Next it was contended that the award was not in accordance with law. Now, the award itself in its operative parts is a simple and straightforward award which gives certain items of property and money to different people. On the face of the award there is no error in law. But it is said by the appellants that the arbitrators have acted on wrong legal principles in making those various items of award. It is not clear that they have: they may or may not have taken an erroneous view of the law on some of the items; it is impossible for us to say, although we may surmise. But if they have taken erroneous views of the law in certain parts of the case, it must be remembered that they were requested by all the parties to deal with the matters in dispute and decide them. In this particular instance they were both lawyers—one was a Barrister and the other was a Pleader—and so had a knowledge of the law which doubtless the parties intended that they should use. Doubtless the parties considered that their knowledge of law was sound and having chosen their tribunal to decide these matters outside the Courts, the Courts are very reluctant to interfere with the decision of the tribunal and will only do so in cases mentioned in Sch. II, Paras. 14, 15 and 16 of the Code. It is not contended that there has been corruption or misconduct of the arbitrators, or fraudulent concealment, or wilful misleading of the arbitrators, or that the award was made at a time when the tribunal had no jurisdiction. It is simply said that the tribunal has erred in law. I would recite here a passage from the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hussain (1), at p. 58, which deals with the position under an award made pursuant to the Code.

"The principle of finality which finds expression in the Code is quite in accordance with the tendency of modern decisions in this country. The time has long gone by since the Courts of this country shewed any disposition to sit as a Court of Appeal on award in respect of matters of fact or in respect of matters of law."

Whether there has been any error of law made by the arbitrators in coming to their decision, we cannot say. There is nothing apparent on the face of it, but in accordance with the principle of law enunciated we do not see our way to interfere. The result is that in my view, the judgment of the District Judge appealed from must stand and this appeal must be dismissed with costs, the hearing-fee in this Court being assessed at three gold mohurs. For the said reasons which Lord Macnaghten gave in the case cited above where there was an application in revision we refuse the application as made in the present case.

Nasim Ali, J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice, that the appeal should be dismissed and the application in revision under s. 115, Civil P. C. should also be dismissed. The learned Advocate appearing for the appellants attacked the award of the arbitrators on two grounds: (1) that the submission to arbitration was invalid in law, (2) that the decision of the arbitrators was 'otherwise invalid' within the meaning of Para. 15 (c) of Sch. II, Civil P. C. As regards the first objection it appears that the reference in this case was made under Para. (17) of Sch. II and not under Para. (1) of Sch. II. The natural guardian of the minors was under the law entitled to enter into an agreement to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration if she found that it was for the benefit of the minors. There was no suggestion in this case that the settlement of the disputes by arbitration was not for the benefit of the minors.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants that the submission was bad inasmuch as it included matters which were not the subject-matter of the proceedings for letters of administration de bonis non under the Succession Act. It has been already pointed out that this reference was under Para. (17) of the Code and not in any suit or proceedings under Para. (1) of the Code. It was also argued on behalf of the appellants that the District Judge had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the agreement as only the Subordinate Judge in view of s. 15, Civil P. C., would have jurisdiction over the subject-matter. It appears however from s. 18, Ben. Civil Courts Act, that the District Judge as well as the Subordinate Judge are Courts of ordinary original civil jurisdiction. It is true that the Subordinate Judge would ordinarily have jurisdiction to entertain suits relating to the disputes referred to arbitration, but as the value of the subject-matter referred to arbitration was over Rs. 5,000 there could have been no prejudice to any of the parties as the appeal would not lie to the District Judge but to this Court. The reference to arbitration by the District Judge even if it was not in accordance with the provisions of s. 15, Civil P. C. would be mere irregularity and it could be cured by s. 99, Civil P. C. The submission in this case was therefore perfectly legal and valid.

As regards the second contention the argument of the appellants is that the decision of the arbitrators was not in accordance with the reference. The learned Advocate for the appellants said that in the agreement the arbitrators were asked to divide the properties according to the terms of the will but they have not done so. Now from the agreement it appears that the dispute between the parties was about the partition of the properties according to the provisions of the will but in the operative portion of the document it is not stated that the arbitrators were to divide the properties according to the provisions of the will. Even if it be assumed that the agreement taken as a whole was that the arbitrators were required to divide the properties according to the terms of the will the award of the arbitrators cannot be said to be invalid inasmuch as it appears from the award that they have considered the terms of the will and have put their own interpretation upon the will. If the arbitrators have made any mistake in construing the will the parties are bound by the decision of the arbitrators as the latter are not only Judges of fact but also Judges of law.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Sufficient cause—Time taken by review application, if can be deducted—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 35—Costs—Discretion of Court.

Section 5 of the Lim. Act gives the Court discretion to excuse the delay in filing an appeal. An appellant who desires to be excused the delay must satisfy the Court that there were sufficient circumstances existing in the case to account for the delay and, therefore, the appellant must satisfy the Court that there were reasonable grounds for review. Mere presentation of an application for review does not entitle a litigant as of right to deduct the period during which the application for review remains pending from the period of limitation required for filing an appeal specially when the grounds for review were really grounds of appeal. 42 Ind. Cas. 43(1), distinguished, Ahsanullah v. The Collector of Dacca (2) and 90 Ind. Cas. 610 (3), relied on.

Costs are always in discretion of the Court.

Held, that the Appellate Court exercised a sound discretion in the matter of the award of costs.

Mr. Mohd. Hafeez, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. H. Kidwai, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Judgment.—This second appeal and the connected miscellaneous application arise out of a suit for possession by partition and mesne profits instituted in the Court of the Munsif, Kaisarganj, District Bahraich, by plaintiffs-respondents Nos. 1 and 2. The relationship of the parties will appear from the following pedigree:—

There were two sets of properties in the suit, viz. some zamindari detailed in list A and two houses mentioned in list B attached to the plaint. The plaintiffs claimed 7 annas 8 pies share of the zamindari on the ground that they were entitled to 5 annas 8 pies out of the 8 annas share of Amir Khan and 2 annas out of 8 annas share of Nawab Ali Khan. As regards the two houses the plaintiffs alleged that they belonged to Amir Khan alone and their share, therefore, came to 11 annas 4 pies which they claimed.

The defendants contested the shares claimed by the plaintiffs, the main contest being on behalf of the appellant, who was defendant No. 4 in the Court of first instance. The main pleas in defence were that the entire properties belonged to Mst. Umedan who had gifted them to Ahmad Ali Khan (husband of defendant No. 3 and father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2) and Mahbub Ali, father of defendant No. 4; that there was a suit in 1919 in which the present plaintiffs (respondents) and Ahmad Ali, predecessor-in-interest of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and the heirs of Nawab Ali Khan, including defendant No. 4 (appellant) were parties; and this suit ended in a compromise decree, which the defendants alleged operated as res judicata. The plea of adverse possession also was taken.

The trial Court held that the zamindari belonged to Amir Khan and Nawab Ali; that the compromise in the suit of 1919 was binding and the decree passed thereon operated as res judicata and that the plaintiffs were entitled to 5 annas 8 pies share only out of Amir Khan's share. As regards the claim to share in the two houses, the plaintiffs withdrew their claim to one and the trial Court held that the other house belonged exclusively to Amir Khan and the plaintiffs as his heirs were entitled to 11 annas 8 pies share therein. The plaintiffs' claim was, therefore, decreed in accordance with the finding.

Against this decree an appeal was filed on behalf of defendant No. 4. Mahmud Ali Khan, mainly on the grounds that (1) the principle of res judicata applied also to the house property and (2) that 5 annas 8 pies share of the zamindari decreed to the plaintiffs should not be out of the entire property but only out of 8 annas share of Amir Khan. The appeal was heard before Mr. Badri Prasad, Additional Civil Judge, Bahraich, on October 23, 1936. At the time of argument the defendant-appellant did not challenge the decree of the trial Court with respect to plaintiffs' share in the zamindari property and the plaintiffs-respondents also put in an application praying that they had no objection if the appeal was allowed with respect to the house. The result was that the lower Appellate Court by its order dated November 8, 1937, modified the decree of the trial Court by passing a decree in favour of the plaintiffs respondents for 5 annas 8 pies share of the zamindari properties and dismissing the plaintiffs-respondents' suit with respect to the houses and directing that "the parties shall bear their own costs of the appeal and they shall pay and receive their costs of the suit in the trial Court in proportion to their success and failure in the case."

Thereafter on November 16, 1937, an application was filed on behalf of the defendant No. 4 appellant before the lower Appellate Court for review of the order in respect of costs as passed by the said Court. This application was dismissed on August 26, 1938.

The present appeal was filed in this Court on November 1, 1938, which is admittedly beyond the period of limitation. Together with the appeal the appellant has filed an application under s. 5 of the Indian Lim. Act (which is the connected Miscellaneous Application No. 882 of 1938). The appellant's contention is that the time taken by the review application, viz., from November 16, 1937, to August 26, 1938, should be excluded in computing the period of appeal filed by him, as he did not file the appeal, because "he thought that the matter was so simple and small" that it could be easily corrected by the Court below, and there was no need for filing a second appeal.

After hearing the Counsel for the parties, I am of opinion that there is no force in the appeal and the application under s. 5 of the Indian Lim. Act. The appeal is admittedly against the decree of the lower Appellate Court dated November 8, 1937, and is thus clearly beyond time. The appellant seeks the benefit of s. 5 of the Indian Lim. Act. Section 5 lays down that an appeal may be admitted after the period of limitation, when the appellant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within time. The Counsel for the appellant has argued that prosecution of an application for review (infructuous though it was) was sufficient cause, and he was entitled to have that time deducted in his favour. I do not agree to this contention. Mere presentation of an application for review does not entitle a litigant as of right to deduct the period during which the application for review remains pending. The Privy Council decision in Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (L. R. 44 I. A. p. 218) (1) cited by the Counsel for the appellant does not lend support to any such wide proposition of law. Section 5 of the Indian Lim. Act gives the Court discretion to excuse the delay in filing an appeal. An appellant who desires to be excused the delay must satisfy the Court that there were sufficient circumstances existing in the case to account for the delay and therefore the appellant must satisfy the Court that there were reasonable grounds for review. In this opinion of mine I am supported by the observations in the cases reported in Ahsanullah v. The Collector of Dacca (I. L. R. 15 Calcutta 242 at 243) (2), and Mahadeo Govind Wadkar v. Lakshminarayan Ramnath Marwadi (A. I. R. 1925 Bombay 521 at 522) (3). In this particular case I am not satisfied that the appellant had reasonable grounds for review. Strictly speaking the application dated November 16, 1937, does not come within the purview of conditions for review laid down in O. XLVII, r. 1, of the Civil P. C. His grounds for review were really grounds of appeal. That being so, I am of opinion that there was no sufficient cause for filing the application for review and therefore there was thus no sufficient cause for the delay in filing the appeal. Therefore the application under s. 5 of the Indian Lim. Act for excusing the delay must be dismissed, and in consequence the appeal must fail, as it has been filed long after the period of limitation expired.

On merits too, I am of opinion that the appellant has no case. Costs are always in discretion of the Court (vide s. 35 of the Civil P. C.). In this case I think the Appellate Court exercised a sound discretion in the matter of the award of costs. That being so there can be no appeal against the decree of the lower Appellate Court as to costs only.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal as well as the Miscellaneous Application with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 16—Decree transferred to another Court—Decree-holder dying before starting execution proceedings—Legal representative cannot institute execution proceeding there until he obtains from Court passing decree an order under O. XXI, r. 16—Legal representative, when is clothed with status of decree-holder—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 2 (?), 14—Proceedings contrary to express provision of law—Whether prosecution in good faith.

When a decree is transferred to another Court and the decree-holder dies before starting the execution proceedings in that Court, his legal representatives cannot institute the execution proceedings there until they obtain an order from the Court which passed the decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. Therefore the darkhast which was started by the legal representative without getting an order under r. 16, O. XXI, must be held to be bad from its inception, and cannot be legalized by any waiver on the part of the judgment-debtors or by the production of an order that may be subsequently obtained under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree. Hence the transferee Court is not bound to stay the proceedings in order to enable the legal representatives to obtain such an order from the Court which passed the decree. 75 Ind. Cas. 893 (5), followed. [p. 86, col. 2; p. 88, col. 1.]

If a decree is once transferred to another Court for execution and the decree-holder who obtains such a transfer dies, the proper remedy for his legal representatives is to seek an order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree, and have that order remitted to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution under O. XXI, r. 6 (c). If the application under O. XXI, r. 16, is granted by the Court which passed the decree, it may make an endorsement of that order on the decree and send a copy of the order along with the other papers to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution. It is after such an order is passed that the legal representatives are clothed with the status of decree-holders and are then empowered to institute execution proceedings in the Court to which the decree is transferred. [p. 88, col. 2.]

Proceeding contrary to a clearly expressed provision of law cannot be regarded as prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith in the sense in which the words "good faith" are defined in the Lim. Act. 120 Ind. Cas. 236 (10), relied on. [p. 89, col. 2.]

Mr. J. G. Rele, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. G. Desai and P. S. Joshi, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Judgment.—One Gopaldas Damodardas obtained a money decree against the respondents in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar on October 1, 1930. When the decretal amount fell due, he made an application to that Court on July 11, 1932, to have the decree transferred to the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Parner for execution. The order transferring the decree was passed on July 26, 1932, and the certificate of non-satisfaction was handed over to the decree-holder Gopaldas on August 8, 1932. Before Gopaldas presented an application for the execution of his decree in the Parner Court under O. XXI, r. 10, Civil P. C., he died on November 22, 1932. Nothing was done for nearly two years, and on August 18, 1934, the brother and sons of Gopaldas, claiming to be his legal representatives, presented darkhast No. 423 of 1934 in the Parner Court to recover the decretal amount in execution of the decree. The respondents were served with notices and they put in their written statement on March 30, 1935, contending that they were agriculturists and as such not liable to be arrested in execution of the decree. Before the question of their status was decided, they put in another application (Ex. 62) on August 24, 1935, contending that as the appellants had not obtained an order from the Court which passed the decree recognizing them as the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder, they had no right to execute the decree in the Parner Court.

Before this application was put in by the respondents, the appellants had made an application to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar on August 8, 1935, requesting that the certified copy of the decree and the certificate of transfer of the decree should be called back from the Parner Court and their names should be substituted as the legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder both in the decree and in the certificate. The Parner Court framed an issue as to whether it had jurisdiction to hear the appellants' application for execution, and holding that as the appellants had obtained no order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree, they had no right to institute the execution proceedings. It dismissed their darkhast with costs. That order was upheld in appeal by the learned District Judge of Ahmednagar on the same ground. The application under O. XXI, r. 16, was granted by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmednagar, who ordered that the names of the appellants should be shown as the legal representatives of the deceased Gopaldas Damodardas in the decree. Against that order the judgment-debtors appealed and the learned District Judge held that the application made by the appellants was not in the proper form, that they should have made a proper application for execution of the decree and not merely for the substitution of their names as the legal representatives of the deceased, and that that application was incompetent. The appeal was therefore allowed and the order passed by the lower Court was set aside. These two second appeals are presented by the legal representatives of the decree-holder Gopaldas, one from the order passed by the learned District Judge confirming the order of the Second Class Subordinate Judge of Parner, and the other from the order of the learned District Judge setting aside the order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Ahmednagar.

In the former appeal (S. A. No. 413 of 1937) it is urged that as the judgment-debtors did not object to the darkhast proceedings started by the appellants in their written statement (Ex. 7), they should be deemed to have waived their right to object to their names being brought on the record by the Parner Court, and also that in any case the Parner Court should have stayed the proceedings in order to enable the appellants to obtain the necessary amended certificate from the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar and should not have dismissed the darkhast. The procedure to be followed by the legal representatives of a deceased decree-holder is now well-settled. It is not disputed that a legal representative of a deceased decree-holder is to be deemed as a transferee of the decree by operation of law, and as such is entitled to apply for the execution of the decree to the Court which passed it under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. Order. XXI, r. 10, provides:

"Where the holder of a decree desires to execute it, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree or to the officer (if any) appointed in this behalf, or if the decree has been sent . . . to another Court then to such Court or to the proper officer thereof".

As held in Jasoda Deye v. Kirtibash Das (1), it is only the person appearing on the face of the decree as the decree-holder who is entitled to execution, unless it be shown by some other person under O. XXI, r. 16, that he has taken the place of the decree-holder. "Decree-holder," as defined in s. 2. sub-s. (3), means any person in whose favour a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made. The definition in the Code of 1882 included a transferee of a decree. But now the transferee of a decree or the heir of a decree-holder cannot present an application for its execution unless he first obtains an order under O. XXI, r. 16, that he is the person entitled to execute the decree as the legal representative of the original decree-holder. It follows from this that when a decree is transferred to another Court and the decree-holder dies before starting the execution proceedings in that Court, his legal representatives cannot institute the execution proceedings there until they obtain an order from the Court which passed the decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. It was once thought that when a decree-holder dies during the pendency of the execution proceedings his legal representative cannot continue those proceedings, but must start fresh proceedings under O. XXI, r. 16: Palaniappa Chettiar v. Valliammai Achi (2). But that was overruled by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Venkatachalam

(2) 50 M 1; 99 Ind. Cas. 627; A I R 1927 Mad. 184; 51 M L J 745; (1926) M W N 981; 25 L W 354.

Chetti v. Ramaswamy Servai (3), and it was held that it was open to the legal representative of a deceased decree-holder to continue the execution proceedings already started by him. The same view was taken by this Court in Kacharabhai v. Kacharabhai (4), where it was held that an application to execute a decree filed by the decree-holder can, on his death, be continued by his son and heir, provided the heir first obtained an order of the Court under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. In that case the legal representative of the deceased decree-holder had made an application to the Court to which the decree had been transferred for execution to be allowed to continue the darkhast proceedings after being brought on the record. The trial Court had rejected the application, but in appeal three months' time was granted to him to obtain an order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree and then to continue the darkhast which had been already filed by the deceased decree-holder.

It is urged that on the same principle in this case also the Parner Court should have stayed the execution proceedings and allowed the appellants time to obtain the necessary order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Ahmednagar Court. But in that case the deceased decree-holder had already started the execution proceedings, and it was perfectly within the discretion of the executing Court to stay the proceedings and wait until the legal representative of the deceased came forward to proceed with the darkhast. But here the decree-holder Gopaldas did not take any steps to execute the decree after it was transferred to the Parner Court. It was after his death that the present appellants presented the darkhast in the Parner Court without obtaining any order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Ahmednagar Court which had passed the decree. As observed by the learned Chief Justice in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Jesu (5) (p. 647):

"The assignee or transferee of the decree cannot continue any proceedings previously commenced nor can he institute any fresh proceedings for the execution of the decree, unless he makes an application under O. XXI, r. 16, to the Court which passed the decree. That application will be heard by the Court, not as a Court executing the decree, but as a Court which passed the decree, and it seems clear to me that until an order is made by the Court which

At p. 651*, Crump, J. observed:

"It seems to me that where a Court has to deal with an application on the notice under O. XXI, r. 16, the question which arises is a preliminary question, that is to say, whether the person who comes forward as assignee is or is not entitled to execute the decree, and until that question has been disposed of, no question of execution can arise, and therefore there is no Court at that stage which can be termed 'the Court executing the decree'."

The principle laid down in this case was approved of and followed in Gangaya Narappa v. Krishnappa (6). The learned Advocate for the appellants relied upon Shailendranath Ghosh v. Surendranath De (7), and Manorath Das v. Ambika Kant Bose (8). The ruling in Shailendranath Ghosh v. Surendranath De (7), lays down that the legal representative of a deceased decree-holder must make an application under O. XXI, r. 16, to the Court which passed the decree before he can proceed with the execution of the decree, and that an order for substitution of the legal representative for the original decree-holder cannot be made by the executing Court to which the decree has been transferred by the Court which passed the decree. But it further says that if the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution makes an order substituting the legal representative for the deceased decree-holder, that is an irregularity which can be waived by acquiescence. In that case however the deceased decree-holder himself had presented a darkhast in the Court to which the decree had been transferred for execution. When he died during the pendency of the execution proceedings the legal representatives were brought on the record in spite of the objection of the judgment-debtors. They did not appeal against that order at that time. When subsequently the objection was repeated, it was held that they had waived their right. So in that case the darkhast proceedings were not bad from the inception. As I have said, it is open to the Court to which the decree is transferred to keep the darkhast pending until an order under O. XXI, r. 16, is obtained by the legal representatives. In the present case however the legal representatives themselves instituted the proceedings without obtaining such an order, and hence there is no question of waiver on the part of the judgment-debtors.

The ruling in Manorath Das v. Ambika Kant Bose (8) is more in point. But that ruling is apparently in conflict with the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court in Raghunath Gorind v. Gangaram Yesu (5). In Manorath Das v. Ambika Kant Bose (8) the executors under a will of the deceased had obtained a decree on behalf of the legatee. After the legatee attained majority he took over charge of the estate and presented a darkhast in the Court to which the decree had been already transferred at the instance of the executors. It was contended that, as the legal representative of the decree-holder, he should have first obtained an order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree. But he was allowed time to do so, and when he produced such an order when the darkhast was pending, it was held that the order related back to the date when he became entitled to execute the decree as the legal representative of the decree-holder and therefore the previous proceedings became legal on the production of the order. But the passage already quoted from Raghunath Gorind v. Gangaram Yesu (5) shows that unless an order under O. XXI, r. 16, is obtained by the legal representative he has no right to institute the execution proceedings. I am bound to follow this decision, and therefore the darkhast which was started by the appellants in the Parner Court must be held to be bad from its inception, and cannot be legalized by any waiver on the part of the judgment-debtors or by the production of an order that may be subsequently obtained under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree. Hence the Parner Court was not bound to stay the proceedings in order to enable the appellants to obtain such an order from the Ahmednagar Court. The darkhast was rightly thrown out, and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

As regards the other appeal (S. A. No. 425 of 1937), the lower Appellate Court has held that the application made by the appellants to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar should have been in the form of an application for execution under O. XXI, r. 16. This may not be absolutely necessary when a decree is transferred to another Court for execution, and the copy of the decree and the certificate of non-satisfaction have already been sent to the transferee Court. The legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder have no intention to execute the decree in the Court which passed the decree, and yet the application under O. XXI, r. 16, must be made to that Court. It is not therefore right to say that they must make an application for execution even though the decree has already been sent to another Court for the purpose of execution. Under O. XXI, r. 6, the Court sending a decree for execution must send three documents, viz., a copy of the decree a certificate of non-satisfaction or part satisfaction, and a copy of any order for the execution of the decree or, if no order has been made, a certificate to that effect. This last includes an order passed under O. XXI, r. 16. Hence if a decree is once transferred to another Court for execution and the decree-holder who obtains such a transfer dies, the proper remedy for his legal representatives is to seek an order under O. XXI, r. 16, from the Court which passed the decree, and have that order remitted to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution under O. XXI, r. 6 (c). But the appellants made an application to the Ahmednagar Court to have the copy of the decree and the certificate of transfer amended. As observed in Bhikaji v. Dattatraya (9):

"the Civil P. C. contains no provision under which a representative of a deceased decree-holder can have his name entered on the record when nothing remains to be done under the decree beyond its execution."

If the application under O. XXI, r. 16, is granted by the Court which passed the decree, it may make an endorsement of that order on the decree and send a copy of the order along with the other papers to the Court to which the decree is transferred for execution. It is after such an order is passed that the legal representatives are clothed with the status of decree-holders and are then empowered to institute execution proceedings in the Court to which the decree is transferred. Hence, technically speaking, the application made by the appellants to the Ahmednagar Court is not in the proper form. Assuming that they did really intend to ask for the relief to which they were entitled under O. XXI, r. 16, still it has to be considered whether the decree was executable on the date on which they made the application. That a question like this has to be considered. Before an order is passed under O. XXI, r. 16, is clear from the ruling in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu (5). In that case when the assignee of a decree made an application under O. XXI, r. 16, the judgment-debtor, contended that the decree had been satisfied as the decretal amount had been paid to the original decree-holder. The payment had not been certified to the Court as required by O. XXI, r. 2. Yet it was held that the Court hearing the application under O. XXI, r. 16, was a "Court which passed the decree" and not an executing Court, that it was open to the judgment-debtors to contend and prove in those proceedings that the amount due under the decree had been paid out of Court, and that if the decree was proved to have been already satisfied, then the assignee was not entitled to any order in his favour under O. XXI, r. 16. Similarly, if the decree sought to be executed has ceased to be capable of execution by being time-barred, then the appellants are not entitled to have an order passed in their favour under O. XXI, r. 16.

This point was considered by the Ahmednagar Court, and it held that the decree was still in time by reason of the darkhast proceedings taken by the appellants in the Parner Court. Gopaldas got the decree transferred to the Parner Court on July 26, 1932, and therefore "a darkhast should have been filed before July 26, 1935. Gopaldas died before the appellants presented the darkhast unauthorizedly on August 18, 1934, without obtaining an order under O. XXI, r. 16. They made the present application to the Ahmednagar Court on August 8, 1935 more than three years after the previous order about the transfer of the decree to the Parner Court was passed. Hence, prima facie, the decree had become time-barred before August 8, 1935. It is however contended that under s. 14, Lim. Act, in computing the period of limitation, the time during which the appellants were prosecuting the darkhast in the Parner Court in good faith should be excluded. Section 14, cl. (2), Lim. Act says:

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application, the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of Appeal, against the same party for the same relief shall be excluded, where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it."

Although the parties to the darkhast proceedings in the Parner Court were the same as the parties to the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 16, before the Ahmednagar Court, yet the reliefs claimed in the two proceedings were different. In the Parner Court the appellants wanted to execute the decree itself; whereas in the Ahmednagar Court the relief asked for by them was to have their names substituted in place of the deceased decree-holder. It is argued that the appellants had presented the darkhast in the Parner Court in good faith believing that they had a right to do so. The expression "good faith" has a special meaning in the Lim. Act. Section 3 (20), General Clauses Act 1897, provides that a thing shall be deemed to be done in "good faith," where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not. But s. 2 (7), Lim. Act, says that nothing shall be deemed to be done in good faith which is not done with due care and attention. As held in S. R. M. M. A. Firm v. Maung Po Saung (10) proceeding contrary to a clearly expressed provision of law cannot be regarded as prosecuting another civil proceeding in good faith in the sense in which the words "good faith" are defined in the Act. In that case a person against whom an order was passed under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C. instead of bringing a suit, applied for a revision of the order, and when that application was rejected, he filed a suit when it was time-barred. It was held that he was not entitled to the exclusion of the period during which he was prosecuting his application for revision. On the principle that gross negligence negatives good faith, it was held in Ghishulal Ganeshilal v. Gumbhirmull Pandya (11) that failure to inquire whether the necessary leave of Court had been granted; though applied for, was held to be such gross negligence as to deprive the plaintiff of the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act.

In the present case also the applicant recklessly disregarded the provisions of O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. C. and started to execute the decree without any authority from the Court which passed it. Hence, I do not think that the appellants are entitled to the exclusion of the time spent by them in prosecuting the darkhast in the Parner Court. The decree was therefore time-barred on the date on which they made the application to the Amednagar Court, and on the principle laid down in Raghunath Govind v. Gangaram Yesu (5) they are not entitled to an order allowing them to execute the decree under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil P. O. This appeal also must therefore be dismissed.

The respondents have put in cross-objections claiming their costs from the appellants. The lower Appellate Court has disallowed the costs on equitable grounds. Since the appellants have been deprived of the benefit of the decree obtained by Gopaldas owing to wrong legal advice, I do not think that I should interfere with the discretion exercised by the lower Appellate Court. Both the appeals are dismissed with costs. The cross-objections in both the appeals are dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Interest of undivided member attached in execution of money decree against him—Attachment released on objection by other members of joint family that property was sold to them—Suit to set aside sale as fictitious—Defendant dying—Plea that there is no property against which decree could be executed, if can be taken—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Creditor's proceeding under O. XXI, r. 63—Suit, if must be in representative character.

When a suit is brought against a member of a joint Hindu family for a declaration that the sale deed in favour of the defendant's nephews who formed along with the defendant the joint family of the property attached by the plaintiff in execution of his money decree was fictitious and fraudulent and was executed with the object of defeating the plaintiff's claim against the defendant and the defendant dies during the pendency of the suit in the original Court it cannot be said that as he was a member of a joint Hindu family, there was no longer any property against which the plaintiff could proceed. If the undivided interest is attached during his lifetime it may be sold after his death whether the order for sale was made in his lifetime or after his death.

The contention would be sound if the undivided interest of the defendant had not been attached in his lifetime in the execution of a decree against him for his personal debt.

There is no rule which forces a decree-holder to ask for execution against the whole of the undivided share of a Hindu co-parcener when the sale of only a part of it would be sufficient.

A creditor proceeding under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., who does not know of the existence of other creditors is not bound to bring a representative suit to represent persons of whose existence he is not aware. It is for the defendant who as debtor knows whether he has other creditors to object that there are other creditors and that a representative suit should be filed. If he does not raise such objection, the Court is entitled to hold that there are no other creditors and the plaintiff therefore can sue for himself alone for a declaration that the transfer by the defendant was fictitious and fraudulent with the object of defeating the plaintiff's claim.

S. O. A. against the order of the Civil Judge, Gonda, dated January 25, 1937.

Messrs. L. S. Misra and Sri Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by defendants.

The plaintiff Mahant Thakur Das held a decree for money against Mahabir Singh and when he applied for execution by sale of certain property, defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who are nephews of Mahabir Singh, filed an objection on the basis of a sale deed which purported to have been executed in their favour by Mahabir Singh and the property was released from attachment. The plaintiff then filed this suit for a declaration that the sale deed was fictitious and fraudulent and was executed with the object of defeating the plaintiff's claim against Mahabir Singh.

It was found that Mahabir Singh and these nephews formed a joint Hindu family and the deed of sale was fictitious and invalid.

Two points have been raised in this appeal, one that the plaintiff should have brought a representative suit and as he has not done so his suit must be dismissed and the other that Mahabir Singh died during the pendency of the suit in the original Court and when he died, as he was a member of a joint Hindu family, there was no longer any property against which the plaintiff could proceed.

This second contention can be disposed of quickly. The contention would have been sound if the undivided interest of Mahabir Singh had not been attached in his lifetime in the execution of a decree against him for his personal debt. After his death then it could not be attached as against his nephews as it ceased to be his interest and passed to the other co-parceners by survivorship. If however as here the undivided interest is attached during his lifetime it may be sold after his death whether the order for sale was made in his lifetime or after his death: vide para. 289 of Mulla's Hindu Law.

It has been urged here that the execution application was against a share of about five pies as if it was a separate share and not against the undivided interest of Mahabir Singh. Had partition been simultaneous with the attachment, the share of Mahabir Singh on partition would have been found to be about 8 pies so that the decree-holder was really seeking execution against part of the undivided share of Mahabir Singh. I know of no rule which forces a decree-holder to ask for execution against the whole of the undivided share of a Hindu co-parcener when the sale of only a part of it would be sufficient. The decree-holder would have been more correct had he applied for sale of a fraction of the undivided share of Mahabir Singh which would have worked out at about 5-8ths but as at the time of attachment the share would have worked out at about 8 pies and what was attached, which was about five pies, can be sold after the death of Mahabir Singh, there is no practical difficulty.

Taking now the first point the learned Counsel for the appellant says that under s. 53 of the T. P. Act a decree-holder being a creditor suing to avoid a transfer on the ground that it has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor must sue on behalf of or for the benefit of, all the creditors. There are certain cases which deal with the point before the amendment of s. 53 of the T. P. Act which came into force in April 1930, such as Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Purkum Chandrankandi Kunhamad (I. L. R. 42 Mad. 143) (1), R. R. O. O. Chettyar Firm v. Ma Sein Yin, (A. I. R. 1928 Rangoon 1) (2) and China Mal v. Gul Ahmad, (A. I. R. 1923 Lahore, 478) (3). The one decision after the amendment to which my attention has been called is Shrimal

Kasturchand Marwadi v. Hiralal Hansraj Marwadi, (I. L. R. 1938, Bom. 445) (4). It was there held that a suit brought under O. XXI, r. 63 of the Civil P. C., by a judgment-creditor, who has been defeated at the instance of an intervener in proceedings taken in execution of his decree, need not necessarily be a representative suit under s. 53 of the T. P. Act, on behalf of the general body of creditors. A number of earlier decisions have been referred to and there is a relevant passage on p. 451*. Reference has here been made to O. I, r. 8 of the Civil P. C., which deals with procedure in a representative suit. This O. I, r. 8 states that where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such persons may sue on behalf or benefit of all and notice has to be given to all such persons either by personal service or where from the number of persons or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable by public advertisement as the Court in each case may direct, and any of such persons may then apply to be made a party to such suit. The principle of a representative suit is to prevent a defendant from being vexed and molested by other similar suits by other persons of the body. Personal service can obviously not be made on non-existing persons and it is only when such existing persons are numerous that there may be another form of service such as public advertisement. No such service personal or otherwise can be of any use whatsoever when there are no persons in existence on whom service can be made. It appears to me, therefore, that O. I, r. 8, deals with persons in existence at the time the suit is brought and is to prevent an actual existing danger, namely, the bringing of suits by such persons and not a possible future danger which may never mature, namely, the coming into existence at some unknown period of persons who become creditors of the defendant in that suit.

If we consider s. 53 of the T. P. Act it is not easy to imagine a transfer made with intent to defeat or delay creditors who are not in existence at the time of the transfer. The wording of s. 53 indicates that it applies to cases where there are more than one creditor but only one brings a suit. To safeguard the defendant the plaintiff should name other creditors and other creditors are safeguarded against possible damage to their interest by O. I. r. 8, because they are allowed to join in the suit if they are not prepared to rely on the creditor who is actually suing. The learned Counsel for the appellant says that a creditor, even if he thinks he is the only one, must bring a representative suit or, at any rate, he must say that he is not bringing a representative suit because he does not know of the existence of other creditors. If he brings a representative suit believing that he has no other creditor I do not see how he can comply with the requirements of O. I. r. 8, as he cannot take steps for serving persons whose existence he does not know of. It seems to me that he is entitled at any rate if he does not know that there are other creditors, to bring a suit for himself alone and it is for the defendant then to object that a representative suit is required because there are in fact other creditors. In the present case there is no evidence that there are any other creditors. Girraj v. Sankanta Prasad, (1937 O. W. N. 1169) (5), expressed a doubt as to whether a plaintiff instituting a suit according to the provisions of O. XXI, r. 63, was not bound by the provisions of s. 53 (1) of the T. P. Act. The point did not have to be decided and in any case there was no consideration of the point whether a representative suit should be brought when there was no evidence of the existence of any creditor other than the plaintiff.

In A. K. A. C. T. V. Chettyar v. R. M. A. R. S. Firm, (1 L. R. 12 Rangoon, 666) (6), the suit brought was properly brought as a representative suit so that the remark that a creditor must bring a representative suit in view of the amendment of s. 53 was obiter dictum and anyhow it did not consider whether a representative suit must be brought when there is nothing to show that there are other creditors besides the one that brings the suit.

In my opinion a creditor proceeding under O. XXI, r. 63, who does not know of the existence of other creditors is not bound to bring a representative suit to represent persons of whose existence he is not aware. It is for the defendant who as debtor knows whether he has other creditors to object that there are other creditors and that a representative suit should be filed. If he does not raise such objection, the Court is entitled to hold that there are no other creditors and the plaintiff therefore can sue for himself alone.

I do not think it necessary to go further into the question whether a plaintiff suing under O. XXI, r. 63, must bring a representative suit if there are other creditors in existence.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), s. 299—Order to executor to furnish fresh security—If appealable—Administration—Surety—When entitled to be discharged—Executor adjudged insolvent—Surety, if can be released.

An order calling upon an executor to furnish fresh security is subject to appeal.

The surety is entitled to protection against the executor if it be shown that the latter is wasting the estate, and thereby rendering the former liable on his surety bond. The course to be adopted, on waste by the executor being established by the surety, is to call on the executor to furnish other security, and, on his doing so, to discharge the original surety in respect of future waste. Should the executor fail to furnish other security the probate should be revoked and the surety discharged. Raj Narain Mookerjee v. Full Kumari Debi (4), 51 Ind. Cas. 936 (5) and 140 Ind. Cas. 127 (7), relied on. Subroya Chetty v. Ragammall (1), In re Stark (2) and 1 Ind. Cas. 143 (3), not followed.

Where therefore the executor by being adjudged insolvent has demonstrated that he is unable to manage his own affairs it is reasonable for the surety to believe that he is not a fit person to manage an estate of somebody else and he is entitled to be released from his surety bond.

F. A. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated June 14, 1938.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Sleem, The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. Vishnu Datta, for the Respondent (Bhola Nath).

Judgment.—This is a first appeal against an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Delhi, directing one Sri Ram, who had obtained probate of a will, to lodge fresh security for the administration of the balance of the estate. This order was passed on an application by the surety Bhola Nath who had given security for the administration of the estate in the first instance. He sought to be released from his security bond on the grounds that Sri Ram had been adjudged insolvent and was not properly managing the estate. As a first step the Judge ordered Sri Ram to lodge fresh security. A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies. This is based on s. 299, Succession Act, which says:

"Every order made by a District Judge by virtue of the powers hereby conferred upon him shall be subject to appeal to the High Court

Admittedly there is no specific provision in the Act enabling the Court to take fresh security or cancel a security bond, and Mr. Vishnu Datta for the respondent Bhola Nath argues that there can therefore be no appeal. On the other hand, Mr. Shamair Chand urges that the Senior Subordinate Judge was seized of the case by virtue of the Act, that the order was passed in the ordinary course of the case under the Act and therefore s. 299 must be deemed to apply. I accept this argument. If a Court can pass an order calling upon an executor to furnish fresh security it is obviously right and proper that the order should be subject to appeal. Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellant takes the point that once a surety has given security that an executor shall administer the estate, he cannot be permitted to withdraw. He relies for this proposition on Subroya Chetty v. Ragammall (1) which did so hold relying on In re Stark (2) and Subroya Chetty v. Ragammall (1) was followed in Kandhya Lal v. Manki (3). On the other hand there are several cases in which a surety has been released from security: see Raj Narain Mookerjee v. Full Kumari Debi (4) where the applicant had become surety for his sister for the due administration of the mother's estate but alleged that the administration was wasting the estate. It was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the Court has jurisdiction to take a second bond with fresh sureties and that the surety could be released from his obligation by giving notice. In Surendra Nath Pramanik v. Amrit Lal (5) another Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that where the surety had become worthless the Court could call on the executors for fresh security. In Shahabuddin v. Fazal Din (6) a Division Bench of the Chief Court held "that a surety of an executor is entitled to be discharged from his liability as regards the future transactions of the latter when the executor for whom he is surety wastes the estate, and as the effect of his discharge would be to revoke the probate, if fresh security is not furnished an appeal lies against an order refusing such discharge."

The learned Judges said :

"The surety is.... entitled to protection against the executor if it be shown that the latter is wasting the estate, and thereby rendering the former liable on his surety bond. In our view of the law the course to be adopted, on waste by the executor being established by the surety, is to call on the executor to furnish other security, and on his doing so, to discharge the original surety in respect of future waste. Should the executor fail to furnish other security the probate should be revoked and the surety discharged."

In a recent case, National Guarantee and Suretyship Association v. Prayag Deb (7) it was held that :

"Although a surety for the due administration by a grantee of letters of administration cannot claim as of right to be relieved of all future liability by merely expressing his intention to revoke, either by notice or by an application to the Court.....yet the Court to which the guarantee is given has power, when good cause is shown, to grant a release from all liability for future transactions."

In the course of their judgment the learned Judges said :

"It may well be that at the time when the surety furnished security, the administrator was honest and was believed to be capable of administering the estate in a proper way, but he might subsequently become dishonest or might mismanage the estate, and so it would be astonishing if there was no provision of law which would give the surety remedy by way of objecting to the Court and asking to be relieved. He cannot merely sit idle and watch the administrator committing the waste and misappropriation, knowing fully well that the liability will be his own."

Mr. Shamair Chand suggested that as there is no authority of this High Court on the point it should be referred to a Division Bench, but I see no need for this course. There is a ruling of the Chief Court dealing with the point with which I am in respectful agreement. I also think the remarks in National Guarantee and Suretyship Association v. Prayag Deb (7) particularly apposite. The executor by being adjudged insolvent has demonstrated that he is unable to manage his own affairs and it is reasonable for the surety to believe that he is not a fit person to manage an estate of somebody else. I reject this appeal with costs to the respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Payment of interest—If must be in handwriting of or under signature of party making it—Whether can be inferred that payment was of interest "as such," from circumstances.

For a payment of interest to come within the purview of s. 20 of the Lim. Act, it is sufficient if circumstances exist which make the conclusion inevitable that the payment must have been made on account of interest. The payment of interest "as such" need not necessarily appear in the handwriting of or under the signature of the party making the payments. No doubt it is necessary that at the time of the payment it must be clearly mentioned that the payment was being made on account of interest but where the payment is proved to be on account of interest not only by the evidence of the witnesses but also from the fact that an account of interest due has been drawn up on the back of each bond and the payment has been shown as being out of that amount the payment falls within the purview of s. 20, Lim. Act. 35 Ind. Cas. 638 (1), and 43 Ind. Cas. 812 (2), relied on, 144 Ind. Cas. 899 (3), 120 Ind. Cas. 825 (4) and 128 Ind. Cas. 276 (5), distinguished.

O. R App. of the order of the Munsif (as Judge of Small Cause Court), Gonda, dated May 18, 1937.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. L. Saksena, for the Opposite Parties.

Order.—These applications have been filed by Bachchu Lal against decrees of the learned Judge Small Cause Court, Gonda by which two suits filed by the present applicant were dismissed as time-barred.

The suits were brought on two bonds dated November 20, 1929 and April 23, 1930, respectively. The suits were filed on April 14 and 15, 1937 but the plaintiff in each case calculated limitation from April 15, 1934, on which date the obligor of the bond was said to have paid Rs. 10 on account of interest due on each of the bonds. These payments were endorsed on the back of the bonds by one Bhai Lal and the endorsements were signed by the executant of the bond, Mst. Raghubar Dei, with her thumb impressions. Two witnesses, Mata Prasad and Swami Dayal signed their names below the endorsements as witnesses to the payment. The plaintiff examined Bhai Lal, the scribe of the endorsements, and Mata Prasad one of the witnesses, both of whom deposed that the payments were made by Raghubar Dei on account of interest. In spite of this evidence, the learned Judge held that the suits were barred by time as he thought that the payment of interest "as such" was not mentioned in the endorsements themselves. The learned Judge appears to me to have taken an entirely wrong view of the law. I know of no authority and none has been quoted before me, requiring that payment of interest "as such" much necessarily appear in the handwriting of or under the signature of the party making the payments. No doubt it is necessary that at the time of the payment it must be clearly mentioned that the payment was being made on account of interest but this is what is proved not only by the evidence of the witnesses mentioned above but also from the fact that an account of interest due has been drawn up on the back of each bond and the payment of Rs. 10, has been shown as being out of that amount. The case of Hem Chandra Biswas v. Purna Chandra Mukerji (I. L. R. 44 Cal. 567) (1), is an authority for the view that where there is nothing to show whether payment has been made in respect of principal or of interest, the Court is entitled to find out on the evidence for what purpose the payments were made. The learned Judge of the Court below has nowhere said in his judgment that he did not believe the witnesses produced by the plaintiff and in these circumstances their evidence was perfectly sufficient to prove that the payments in question were made on account of interest as such.

In Charu Chandra Bhattacharjee v. Karam Bux Sikdar, (27 Calcutta Law Journal, 141) (2), it was held that for a payment of interest to come within the purview of s. 20 of the Lim. Act, it is sufficient if circumstances exist which make the conclusion inevitable that the payment must have been made on account of interest. In the present case the circumstance of the interest being calculated on the date of the payment coupled with the evidence of the witnesses in whose presence the payments were made can lead to no conclusion other than that the payments were made on account of interest.

The learned Counsel for the opposite parties has relied on the cases of Ram

N. 420) (5), but they are not in point inasmuch as what they lay down is that it is necessary that at the time of a payment made under s. 20 of the Lim. Act, it should be specifically mentioned whether the payment is on account of principal or interest.

I allow both the applications with costs and setting aside the order of dismissal of the plaintiff's suits passed by the Court below, remand the cases to that Court for trial on the merits.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Surrender executed by widow held transfer within meaning of s. 53—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Transfer by party before decree—Transferee, if his representative.

A deed of surrender of the entire estate was executed by a widow according to the wishes of her deceased husband, in favour of her daughters. In the deed the widow stated that she had cancelled her ownership over the properties and made them over to the daughter's possession as full owners:

Held, that the surrender amounted to a transfer within the meaning of s. 53, T. P. Act. [p. 100, col. 1.] [Case-law discussed.]

A transferee of the interest of a party before a decree is passed against him or in his favour is not a representative of such party within the meaning of s. 47, Civil P. O. [p. 97, col. 2.]

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 83 of 1936.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshwar, for the Appellants.
Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The appellants were plaintiffs in a suit for a declaration that the plaint property was not liable for attachment and sale in execution of a money decree obtained by the predecessor-in-title of the defendant, in Suit No. 493 of 1923, against their mother Avubai as the heir and legal representative of their deceased father Krishna Joti, and also for an injunction against the defendant. The material facts are as follows: Krishna Joti died in May 1922, leaving his widow, Avubai, and two daughters, who are the plaintiffs. One Anantrao brought Suit No. 493 of 1923 on two promissory notes passed by Krishna Joti for the recovery of the amount due thereunder from the estate of the deceased in the hands of the widow. During the pendency of the suit Avubai executed a deed of surrender (Ex. 54) in the plaintiffs' favour on July 1, 1924, in respect of the whole estate of her husband. Suit No. 493 of 1923 ended in a compromise decree passed on October 25, 1924, under which Avubai was to pay the debt by instalments, and in default the plaintiff was to recover the decretal amount by sale of survey No. 381 and survey No. 443/1 on which a charge was created, and in case of deficit, from other properties of the deceased. The plaintiffs were not parties to this suit. The decree-holder assigned the decree to the defendant who has applied for execution by sale of survey No. 381. Before this, on September 21, 1924, the plaintiffs had mortgaged survey No. 381 for Rs. 1,000 to one Dadu. On a darkhast having been filed under the decree aforesaid for the sale of survey No. 381 (darkhast No. 392 of 1929) Dadu brought a Suit No. 647 of 1930 for a declaration that survey No. 381 was not liable to attachment and sale and for an injunction against the defendant. The defendant however by a purshis admitted the mortgage in favour of Dadu and asked for the right to redeem the property from such mortgage. The suit was accordingly dismissed on December 11, 1931, and under the darkhast only the equity of redemption in the property was put up for sale. The plaintiffs have accordingly brought the present suit.

The defence was that the deed of surrender had been passed with intent to defraud and defeat Avubai's husband's creditors and that therefore it was invalid under s. 53, T. P. Act, that it was also void under s. 52, T. P. Act, that the plaintiffs being the representatives of the widow, no separate suit on the present cause of action could lie under s. 47, Civil P. O., and that the plaintiffs being the universal donees under the surrender deed were liable under s. 128, T. P. Act. The plaintiffs contended that the defendant's conduct in Dadu's suit estopped them from challenging the surrender deed. The trial Court held that the surrender was invalid under s. 53 but not under s. 52, T. P. Act, that there was no bar of s. 47, Civil P. O., to the suit, that the plaintiffs were liable under s. 128, T. P. Act, and that the defendant was not estopped from challenging the surrender-deed. The lower Appellate Court held that the defendant was not estopped from challenging the deed, that Ex. 54 was a collusive document, passed with intent to defraud and deceive Krishna Joti's creditors, and that the suit was barred by s. 47, Civil P. O. In the present appeal, no contentions based on s. 52, T. P. Act, or estoppel have been raised. Mr. Murdeshwar has contended, firstly, that after the surrender

Avubai did not represent Krishna Joti's estate, and the compromise therefore could not bind that estate, secondly, that s. 53, T. P. Act, does not apply as the surrender was not a transfer and there is no evidence of fraud; and thirdly, that s. 47, Civil P. O. does not apply. Mr. Desai on behalf of the respondent has contended that Ex. 54 being a collusive document, it cannot be said that there was any real surrender at all, and that if it be held that it was a surrender, it amounted to or involved transfer, and therefore s. 53, T. P. Act, applies. Thirdly, he has contended that Avubai having entered the compromise in her character as representing the estate, the compromise decree is binding on the reversioners, the present plaintiffs. Fourthly, he has contended that the plaintiffs are liable under s. 128, T. P. Act, and that s. 47, Civil P. O., applies as the plaintiffs are Avubai's "representatives-in-interest."

The first contention of Mr. Desai is, in my opinion, clearly untenable. It was neither party's case that the transfer was a sham or colourable transaction and that it was therefore void ab initio. Though there are some indications that the Appellate Judge might have been inclined to regard it in such light, there is no such defence in the written statement of the defendant, and three of the issues raised by the trial Court expressly refer to the transaction in dispute as a surrender. Though the lower Appellate Court raised an issue No. 2, "Whether Ex. 54 is a collusive document passed by Avubai with intent to defeat and defraud the creditors of the deceased Krishna?", it is clear that this issue was raised in order to determine the applicability of s. 53, T. P. Act. With regard to this issue the learned District Judge said:

"I agree with the lower Court in holding that the deed (Ex. 54) was passed with intent to defeat and defraud the creditors of Krishna."

There was, thus, no actual finding that the transaction was sham or colourable. It is therefore too late for Mr. Desai to raise such a contention in the present appeal. The main issue in this case is whether s. 53, T. P. Act, applies and that is whether the surrender is a transfer within the meaning of that section. If it is a transfer, then, in view of the finding of fact arrived at by both the Courts below, that the transfer was made with intent to defeat and defraud the creditor of the deceased Krishna Joti, it would be voidable under s. 53. I see no difficulty in distinguishing between the two positions that the transfer was a sham or colourable transaction, i. e., it was not a real transaction at all, and that it was a transfer made with intent to defeat and defraud the creditors. If the surrender can be void under s. 53, T. P. Act, it cannot be fairly argued that Avubai did not represent Krishna Joti's estate at the time of the compromise and that the compromise does not bind the estate if the surrender is a transfer, it being without consideration will be a gift of the transferor's whole property, and the plaintiffs would be liable under s. 128, T. P. Act, for the liabilities of the donor existing at the time of the transfer to the extent of the estate.

As regards the applicability of s. 47, Civil P. O., the plaintiffs are not Avubai's representatives within the meaning of that section. It has not been seriously contended that a transferee of the interest of a party before a decree is passed against him or in his favour is such a representative. Thus, the real question at issue is whether the surrender in this case is a transfer within the meaning of s. 53, T. P. Act. No authority has been cited which covers this precise point. Mr. Murdeshwar however has relied on two Privy Council decisions, Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1) and Vytla Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (2). The first of these cases was not a case of transfer in any sense at all. In that case, upon the death of a Hindu in 1872 his nephew obtained a certificate under Act XXVII of 1860 as the sole survivor of his joint family; the widow of the deceased opposed the application and alleged a partition in 1864. By agreements made in 1874 the widow accepted the decision, recognized the nephew's title, and was granted by him a maintenance allowance which she continued to receive until her death in 1904. It was held that the widow's agreement of 1874, in conjunction with her acceptance of maintenance till 1904, amounted to a complete relinquishment of the estate to the nephew, then the next reversioner. At p. 270-71* their Lordships said:

"The power of Hindu widow to surrender or relinquish her interest in her husband's estate in favour of the nearest reversioner at the time has often been considered and was fully dealt with by the Board in the recent case in Rangasami Goundan v. Nachi- appa Goundan (3). As pointed out in that case, it is settled by long practice and confirmed by a series of decisions that a Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the nearest reversioner, and by a voluntary act efface herself from the succession as effectively as if she had then died. This voluntary self-effacement is sometimes referred to as a surrender, sometimes as a relinquishment or abandonment of her rights; and it may be effected by any process having that effect, provided that there is a bona fide and total renunciation of the widow's right to hold the property. In the present case there was indeed no formal surrender by the widow of her estate; but there was an express agreement, binding upon her, that for considerations which appeared to her sufficient she would abandon the claim which at the time she had a good right to make and would have no right, claim or demand in respect of the estate of her late husband. It is true that the documents were drawn up on the footing, not of a surrender of an acknowledged right, but of an admission that the right did not exist; but in substance, and disregarding the form, there was a complete self-effacement by the widow which precluded her from asserting any further claim to the estate."

In Vytla Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (2), the facts were that on the death of a Hindu in 1880 a dispute as to succession which arose between his widow and a claimant was referred to a panchayat which awarded that the property should be divided between them. In 1888 the widow conveyed half the property to the claimant, and the other half, reserving about six acres for her own maintenance, to her daughter who was the reversionary heir to the deceased. The daughter died in 1894. On the death of the widow in 1921, the heir of her husband claimed the whole estate. It was held that the award of the panchayat should not be interfered with, as it appeared to be fair and reasonable settlement of a doubtful claim based on both legal and moral grounds. A question that arose in that case was whether assuming that the award given in his favour was good the conveyance by the widow of the rest of the property, reserving only a few acres for herself, amounted to a surrender of her estate, her husband's next heir being her daughter who took only an estate for life. It was held that there was no reason for differentiation between the cases where the widow's husband's next heir was a male and where it was a daughter taking merely an estate for life. Their Lordships remarked in this connection (p. 759*):

"... though the doctrine of surrender by a widow has undergone considerable development in recent years, it must be remembered that the basis of it is the effacement of the widow's interest, and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about. The result is merely that the next heir of the husband steps into the succession in the widow's place."

Mr. Murdeshwar has relied on this description for the basis of the surrender by a widow, and he has contended that the "ex facie transfer" should not at all be considered in considering the nature of the transaction. He emphasizes the sentence, "... in substance, and disregarding the form, there was a complete self-effacement by the widow which precluded her from asserting any further claim to the estate," to be found at p. 271* in Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1). On the other hand, Mr. Desai has contended that such surrender has been regarded as a conveyance in several cases. For instance, in Vytla Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (2) their Lordships said (p. 759†):

"It follows therefore that the widow's conveyance to her daughter Nagamma in 1888 was a surrender of her estate."

In Rangasami Goundan v. Nachiappa Goundan (3) also, the nature of a Hindu widow's surrender of her estate was one of the matters considered. The suit was instituted by one Rangasami Goundan against the minor respondent and his father together with thirty other defendants. The lands in dispute had formed part of the estate of one Ramasami Gounden, who had died childless, and his mother had then succeeded to his property for a woman's estate. Thereafter she had executed a deed of transfer in favour of her nephew, who at that time was the nearest reversionary heir to her deceased son. At p. 84‡ their Lordships stated one of their conclusions as to the effect of the decided cases thus:

"An alienation by a widow of her deceased husband's estate held by her may be validated if it can be shown to be a surrender of her whole interest in the whole estate in favour of the nearest reversioner or reversioners at the time of the alienation."

At p. 79* their Lordships referred to Behari Lal v. Mascho Lal Ahir (4) from which the following passage was quoted (p. 32‡):

"... it may be accepted that, according to Hindu Law the widow can accelerate the estate of the heir by conveying absolutely and destroying her life estate. It was essentially necessary to withdraw her own life estate so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee."

Mr. Desai has contended that these decisions of the Privy Council sufficiently show that where a deed of transfer clearly shows on whom the estate is to devolve on the widow's surrender, there is a clear conveyance or vesting of the estate in the grantee. In Nilkant v. Muktabai (5), Pollock, J., sitting singly, decided that the word "transfer" in s. 53, T. P. Act. was wide enough to cover a surrender by a widow of her widow's interest. In that case the two widows of one Jagannath had surrendered their estate in favour of the daughter of one of the widows by a registered deed, and it was held that as the effect of the surrender was to deprive the creditors of one of the widows of their remedy against her, the transfer was voidable under s. 53. In Haribhai Nanaji Patil v. Narayan Hari Purvant (6) Rangnekar, J. has interpreted the doctrine of surrender in these words (p. 880) :

"The doctrine, as I understand it, is nothing more than this, that the widow, to use the words of Lord Dunedin, operates her own death. She withdraws her life-estate in the property and divests herself of her ownership and vests that ownership from the moment of surrender in the next reversionary heir, if he be one, or in all the reversionary heirs, or, as it is sometimes called, the whole body of reversionary heirs, if there happen to be more than one in the same degree."

His Lordship referred to Behari Lal v. Madho Lal Ahir (4) from which the following passage was quoted (p. 32*) :

"It was essentially necessary to withdraw her own life-estate so that the whole estate should get vested at once in the grantee. The necessity of the removal of the obstacle of the life-estate is a practical check on the frequency of such conveyances."

The contention of Mr. Murdeshwar however is that the conveyance or alienation is not essential to a surrender, as Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1) clearly shows, for in that case there was no conveyance nor any former surrender, but there was an ekrarnama passed by the widow which was construed to have the effect of a surrender. In the present case, the deed we are concerned with is Ex. 54, and in this Avubai plainly said that she had cancelled her ownership over the properties in suit and made them over to the plaintiffs' possession as full owners. Those last words, according to Mr. Murdeshwar, do not make the transaction a real conveyance. As in Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1), the actual form of the deed had to be disregarded and the basis of the transaction must be held to be "the effacement of the widow's interest, and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about": Vytla Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (2). If the words apparently amounting to transfer are used in a deed of surrender, it must be remembered that such surrender can only be made in favour of the next reversioner or the whole body of reversioners and that therefore no choice in the matter of the transferees is possible such as one would expect in the case of a real transfer. No doubt in several of the cases cited above, words have been used which purport to convey the property in dispute and the judgments also have not expressly stated anywhere that the transactions in question did not amount to transfers. Mr. Murdeshwar's contention however is that if the transaction be one and its basis be the self-effacement of the widow, it would be illogical to regard it as constituting a transfer also at the same time. What some of the documents appear to have considered in the cases cited above, according to him, is to state the effect of the surrender, i. e., the manner in which the property in question was to pass to other persons or person, and he contends that this is not essential to a surrender as can be seen from Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1).

The law as to the effect of surrender is considered at length by Rangnekar, J. in Haribhai Nanaji Patil v. Narayan Hari Purvant (6). I have already referred to a passage in which his Lordship held that according to the principle underlying the doctrine of surrender the widow withdraws her life-estate in the property, divests herself of her ownership and vests that ownership from the moment of surrender in the next reversionary heir or heirs. After referring to the dictum of Sir John Wallis in Vytla Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (2), that the basis of it is the effacement of the widow's interest, his Lordship said (p. 881*) :

"The principles therefore which I gather from these decisions and others referred to in the course of the argument are these ; (1) that there must be a complete self-effacement of the surrendering widow with the intention of accelerating the succession of the next apparent heir; (2) that the surrender must be bona fide and must not be a mere cloak, the real object of which was to divide the estate between the reversionary heir and the widow; (3) that it is the substance of the transaction that has to be considered in determining the question whether a conveyance operates as a good surrender or not."

The use of the word "conveyance" is again to be noted. Even in Bhagwat Koer

v. Dhanukdhari Prashad Singh (1), on which Mr. Murdeshwar relies, it is pointed out that it is settled law that the Hindu widow can renounce the estate in favour of the next reversioner. This case was not considered with reference to s. 53, T. P. Act, though it no doubt shows that there can be surrender without express transfer or conveyance. All the other cases considered however show that, as a matter of fact, the surrender was made in favour of the next reversioner. That being so, there is not reason to think that in such cases the conveyance is also not an essential part of the transaction; for one can hardly expect a widow to state in a deed merely that she is effacing herself from her husband's estate. It seems to me doubtful whether, were such a document executed it could be regarded as a proper deed of surrender. In Vytla Sitanna v. Marivada Viranna (2), it is no doubt stated at p. 759*, that the basis of the surrender is the effacement of the widow's interest and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about. I have shown above that this statement occurs in the discussion of the question whether there can be a valid surrender in favour of the widow's daughter, a discussion which arose for the purpose of the consideration of the question of limitation which was raised in that case. From this point of view, the aspect of surrender which gives rise to the question whether it amounts to a transfer or not within the meaning of s. 53, T. P. Act, was unimportant. There can be no doubt in the present case that Ex. 54 does not merely show the effacement of the widow. Before she made the statement, "I have cancelled my ownership." Avubai clearly stated, "I have given you the malki over the above-mentioned properties of my ownership in accordance with the wishes of my husband." I see no reason why this should not be regarded as amounting to a transfer within the meaning of s. 53, T. P. Act. As to the reason which actuated her in passing the deed she said:

"It is my desire that according to the wishes of my husband, the property of my ownership should go to you.....Lest there should be any impediment whatever in your way arising from claims of adoption, bhaubandi, etc., I am executing this malaki patra in your favour."

Thus, the desire that the property should vest in her daughters was even more prominent in Avubai's mind than her desire to "cancel her ownership," to use her own language. Psychologically considered, her self-effacement was but the means whereby the end she desired to attain was attained. I have therefore no hesitation in finding that the present case must be held to be one of transfer and not merely of self-effacement of the widow. In this view, it having been held by the Courts below as a finding of fact that Ex. 54 was passed with intent to defeat and defraud Krishna Joti's creditors, the transaction must be held to be void. The plaintiffs' suit has therefore rightly failed and the appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 61 of 1939

August 10, 1939

DUNKLEY AND WRIGHT, JJ.

P. M. HAMEED ROWTHER—APPELLANT
versusK. S. AIYAPPA MUDALIAR AND OTHERS—
RESPONDENTS

Partnership—Money borrowed by one of two partners utilized for joint benefit of both—Liability of other partner or his estate for such debt—Debt contracted by executor of his estate on his death—Liability of estate and executor.

Where only one of the two partners of a partnership has borrowed money and it is utilized for the joint benefit of both the partners, the creditor cannot have any right to recover the money from the latter partner or from his estate when there is no evidence that he assumed any liability for such loan, before his death. The partnership is dissolved on the death of such a partner and his estate is not liable for the debts contracted subsequently by the executor of his estate. For such debts the executor is personally liable.

F. A. against the decree of the Assistant District Court, Hanthawaddy, dated April 24, 1939.

Messrs. Clerk and M. Bhattacharya, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hay, H. Myo Kin, Kalyanvala and Wan Hock, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, respectively.

Dunkley, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit on a mortgage by deposit of title deeds for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 7,500 as principal and the interest due thereon. The suit has been dismissed by the learned Assistant District Judge of Hanthawaddy and it is against the judgment and decree of the Assistant District Court that the present appeal has been brought. It is common ground that defendant-respondent No. 1, K. S. Aiyappa Mudaliar, and one L. Subbiah Mudaliar jointly owned, as co-owners in equal shares, a considerable area of paddy land, and the title deeds, which were deposited with the plaintiff-appellant and have been produced by him, were the title-deeds of two of the holdings belonging to defendant-respondent No. 1 and L. Subbiah Mudaliar jointly. Defendant-respondent No. 2, S. Marimuthu Mudaliar, has been sued as the executor of L. Subbiah Mudaliar, who died on March 20, 1931. This date has been proved by the production of the death certificate. On August 1, 1932, by a registered deed of mortgage respondent No. 1 mortgaged his half share in one of the holdings concerned in this suit to the M. V. R. Chettyar Firm, who subsequently assigned the mortgage to defendant-respondent No. 3, K. N. V. K. N. Kannappa Chettyar, and respondent No. 3 has been joined as a defendant as the assignee of this mortgage by registered deed. On the same date respondent No. 2, as the executor of L. Subbiah Mudaliar, mortgaged L. Subbiah Mudaliar's half share of this same holding, by registered deed, to the M. V. R. Chettyar Firm, who subsequently assigned this mortgage to defendant-respondent No. 4, K. N. K. V. R. Venkatachalam Chettyar, who has been joined as a defendant-respondent as the assignee of this mortgage. The amended plaint of the plaintiff appellant, so far as it is now of any importance, reads as follows:

"1. That defendant No. 1 and one L. Subbiah Mudaliar now deceased were carrying on the business of acquiring lands, cultivating paddy on the same and selling paddy and rice jointly and in co-partnership.

2. That in or about the year 1931 the said L. Subbiah Mudaliar died leaving a will appointing defendant No. 2, the executor thereof who has since obtained probate of the said will from the High Court of Judicature at Rangoon, in Civil Miscellaneous No 128 of 1931 of the said Court.

3. That as such legal representative defendant No. 2 has been carrying on the said business in partnership with defendant No. 1 and has been in joint possession of their properties and assets.

4. That for the purpose of cultivating the partnership lands and expenses incidental thereto, at the request of defendant No. 1 and the said L. Subbiah Mudaliar, the plaintiff from time to time lent and advanced to them several sums of money, to wit a sum of Rs. 3,000 on March 13, 1931; a sum of Rs. 3,000 on March 23, 1931 and a sum of Rs. 1,500 on August 13, 1931 repayable with interest at Rs 1-4-0 per cent, per mensem on demand and in evidence thereof defendant No. 1 executed promissory notes in plaintiff's favour, the promissory note in respect of the second sum of Rs. 3,000 having been jointly executed by both defendants. (By this is meant respondents Nos. 1 and 2.)

5. That to secure the repayment of the aforesaid loans of March 13 and 23, 1931 as well as to cover future advances to the extent of Rs. 2,000 defendant No. 1 and the said L. Subbiah Mudaliar by his agent, defendant No. 2, with intent to create a mortgage deposited with the plaintiff title-deeds relating to their immovable property, viz. paddy lands. The said title-deeds are hereto annexed.

6. That subsequent to the death of L. Subbiah Mudaliar defendant No. 2 as legal representative agreed that the said property covered by the said title-deeds were to be treated as security for the aforesaid loan of Rs. 1,500 as well."

Now, the case set up in the plaint is a case of money lent to one of the partners of a trading partnership for the benefit of the partnership, and plainly the appellant's case must stand or fall by this averment. It is unnecessary to decide whether a partnership ever existed between respondent No. 1 and L. Subbiah Mudaliar, because, under the provisions of s. 253 (10), Contract Act, (which has now become s. 42 (c), Partnership Act), that partnership was dissolved by the death of L. Subbiah Mudaliar on March 20, 1931. It is said that the partnership was continued, or, more strictly, a new partnership was formed between respondent No. 2 as L. Subbiah's executor and respondent No. 1; but there is no evidence to show that any such partnership was formed, except a statement contained in the promissory note, Ex. C, which was written by respondent No. 2 and signed by both respondents Nos. 1 and 2. This promissory note says that it was written and given on March 23, 1931, by two persons, namely, (1) K. S. Aiyappa Mudaliar, and (2) S. Marimuthu Mudaliar, "carrying on business in rice in the above said place," and it further acknowledges that they owed the plaintiff Rs. 3,000 for value received in cash on account of their business. What this business was is not stated, and certainly this document cannot have any reference to the previous partnership business, if there was such a partnership business between, respondent No. 1 and L. Subbiah, Mudaliar, for the appellant's own case is that when this document was signed on March 23, he did not know that L. Subbiah Mudaliar was dead, and that respondents Nos. 1 and 2 represented to him that L. Subbiah was still alive. Consequently, there is no evidence of any partnership between respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

The first loan of Rs. 3,000 was admittedly borrowed by respondent No. 1 alone on March 13, and there is no evidence whatever to show that this money was utilized for the joint benefit of respondent No. 1 and L. Subbiah. Even if it were so utilized, that would not give the appellant any right to recover the amount from L. Subbiah or from the latter's estate. His debtor was respondent No. 1, and respondent No. 1 alone. Nowhere in his evidence has the appellant suggested that L. Subbiah, before his death, assumed any liability for this first loan. He says that a few days before L. Subbiah died he called him, the appellant, to his house and told him that he had handed over the conduct of his business to his son-in-law, who is respondent No. 2 and that he, the appellant, should carry on business with his son-in-law as if he was carrying on business with him (L. Subbiah). Then he states that subsequently, on March 23, respondents Nos. 1 and 2 came to him and borrowed the second sum, Rs. 3,000, and that at that time respondent No. 2 told him that he had got instructions from his father-in-law to say that the title deeds then deposited would be security for the loan then taken, the previous loan and future loans. It has now been proved that on that date L. Subbiah was dead and, consequently, even if it be accepted that respondent No. 2 did make such a statement, his statement in regard to the previous loan could not bind the estate of L. Subbiah. Hence, so far as the first loan of Rs. 3,000 is concerned, no liability can be attached to L. Subbiah's estate, and so far as the two subsequent loans of Rs. 3,000 and Rs. 1,500 are concerned, no partnership was in existence at that time (whether there was a partnership before L. Subbiah's death or not) and L. Subbiah's estate cannot be made responsible for either of these two loans. No doubt, respondent No. 2 is personally liable, by reason of the promissory note, Ex. C, for the second loan of Rs. 3,000 but he has not been sued in his personal capacity and, consequently, in this suit a decree cannot be passed against him personally. Hence no liability attaches to respondent No. 2 as the legal representative of L. Subbiah.

Turning now to the liability of respondent No. 1, he admits having taken these loans, but he denies the creation of a mortgage by deposit of title-deeds as security for these loans. The title-deeds have been produced by the plaintiff, and the presumption therefore is that they were so deposited as security for the debts which were due; and the burden was on respondent No. 1 to explain how the title-deeds came into the possession of the appellant. Respondent No. 1 has set up an absolutely incredible story to account for the appellant's possession of these deeds, and I can only express my astonishment that the learned Assistant District Judge has seen fit to give credence to it. Respondent No. 1 says that after he had made his mortgage by registered deed to the M. V. R. Firm in 1932 he was pressed by that firm to redeem the mortgage. At that time the title-deeds were deposited with the M. V. R. Firm and so in 1934 he took the title-deeds back to try and raise money on them elsewhere, and in 1936 he handed them to the appellant for this purpose and since that time the appellant has retained them. Only one of the two properties, of which the appellant holds the title-deeds, was mortgaged to the M. V. R. Firm, and therefore he has entirely failed to explain how the appellant came into possession of the title-deeds of the other property. Moreover, it is incredible that he would leave these deeds for a period of over two years in the hands of the appellant, for the purpose of the appellant raising money thereon, without demanding them back. He has called no evidence at all to support his story of the handing over of the title-deeds to the appellant in 1936. On December 30, 1936, the appellant's Advocate sent him a letter in which the mortgage upon which the present suit has been brought was specifically set out, and that letter elicited no reply. The only manner in which respondent No. 1 has attempted to support his story is by calling the evidence of two witnesses in an attempt to show that the title-deeds of the property mortgaged to the M. V. R. Firm were handed over to that firm in 1932. One of these witnesses is Veerappa Chettyar, who was the proprietor of that firm, and the other is Venkateswaran who is a clerk in a Rangoon Advocate's office. Veerappa had to admit in cross examination that the whole of this transaction of the mortgage to his firm was carried through by his agent, Ramanathan and that he knew nothing about it; and Venkateswaran had to admit that he merely typed the mortgage deed from a draft and that the draft was prepared by a Pleader named Rao. Consequently, the best evidence that these title-deeds were handed to the M. V. R. Firm was the evidence of Ramanathan and Rao, and yet neither of them has been called. It is said that they have both gone to India. But Ramanathan could have been examined on commission, and Rao was in Rangoon until January 1939, and therefore could easily have been examined de bene esse before his departure. The story which has been set up by respondent No. 1 to account for the appellant's possession of these title-deeds is clearly false. Therefore the appellant is entitled to a mortgage decree against respondent No. 1.

So far as respondents Nos. 3 and 4 are concerned, respondent No. 3 is a second mortgagee of respondent No. 1's interest in one of the mortgaged properties. His mortgage will clearly have to be postponed to the mortgage of the appellant. Respondent No. 4 is the mortgagee of L. Subbiah's interest in this property, and I have already held that that interest is not subject to the appellant's mortgage. Consequently, this appeal fails as against respondents Nos. 2 and 4 and is dismissed with costs as against them. As against respondents Nos. 1 and 3, the appeal must be allowed with costs in both Courts. The judgment and decree of the Assistant District Court dismissing the suit are set aside, and instead thereof there will be a preliminary mortgage decree in the usual form for the amount claimed against respondents Nos. 1 and 3 and against respondent No. 1's interest only in the two mortgaged properties. The decree will declare that the mortgage of the appellant has priority over the mortgage created in favour of respondent No. 3 by the mortgage deed of August 1, 1932, in favour of M. V. R. Ohetteyar Firm, and subsequently assigned by that firm to respondent No. 3 on May 9, 1934.

Criminal Revision Case No. 418 and

Petition No. 388 of 1939

BURN AND STODART, JJ.

In re PALUVADI VENKATARAMAYYA

—PETITIONER

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 415, 439—“Any two or more of the punishments”, meaning of — Revision — Interference with conviction on facts.

Section 415, Criminal P. C., refers to two or more punishments of different kinds. It has no application in a case in which two non-appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate amount of fine does not exceed Rs. 50.

An accused who was convicted of rioting only and was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 filed an appeal under s. 415-A. He alleged that as two other accused who were convicted at the same trial and sentenced to pay two fines Rs. 20 for rioting and Rs. 25 for an offence under s. 355, I. P. C., had a right of appeal under s. 415-A he had also the right of appeal :

Held, that none of the accused had any right of appeal as there was no combination of punishments in one sentence within the meaning of s. 415. Public Prosecutor, Madras v. Kollur Dasa Pai (1), dissented from, 182 Ind. Cas. 258 (2), followed, 136 Ind. Cas. 248 (3), 171 Ind. Cas. 337 (4) and 134 Ind. Cas. 1196 (5), not followed, 138 Ind. Cas. 720 (6) and 96 Ind. Cas. 270 (7), relied on.

Obiter.—Where the grounds taken for saying that the Magistrate was wrong in convicting accused are all grounds of fact and not connected with any question of law, high Court cannot interfere in revision with conviction.

Or. R. Case and P. to revise the judgment of the Sessions Court, Kurnool Division, in Criminal Appeal No. 7 of 1939.

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Venkataraghavachari, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Burn, J.—This is an application for revision of the order of the learned Sessions Judge, Kurnool, in O. A. No. 7 of 1939. That appeal was presented to the learned Sessions Judge from the decision of the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate, Markapur, in O. C. No. 48 of 1938. In that case the First Class Magistrate was dealing with 24 persons who had been tried by the Stationary Second Class Magistrate of Giddalore in O. C. No. 593 of 1937. The learned Sub-Magistrate found all the 24 accused persons guilty of rioting (s. 147, I. P. C.) wrongful confinement (s. 341, I. P. C.) assault with intent to dishonour (s. 355, I. P. C.) and simple hurt (s. 323, I. P. C.) read with s. 149, I. P. C. He convicted them under those sections but considering that they were persons who might properly be dealt with under s. 582, Criminal P. C., he submitted the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under the provisions of s. 562 (1) proviso. The learned First Class Magistrate dealing with the case under the provisions of s. 380, Criminal P. C., convicted all the 24 accused of rioting (s. 147, I. P. C.) and sentenced them for that offence to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each and accused Nos. 6 and 24 be convicted also under s. 355, I. P. C., and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 25 each for that offence. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not say, what he proposed to do with regard to the other convictions which had already been recorded by the Sub-Magistrate. But that is a matter which is not before us now and we do not propose to interfere with it.

The appeal presented to the learned

Sessions Judge was on behalf of accused No. 23 only. He had been convicted only of rioting (s. 147, I. P. C.) and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20. Under s. 413, Criminal P. C., accused No. 23 would ordinarily have no right of appeal but the appeal was filed on his behalf under the provisions of s. 415-A. It was alleged that accused Nos. 6 and 24 having been sentenced to pay two fines of Rs. 20 and Rs. 25 had a right of appeal under s. 415-A and therefore accused No. 23 having been convicted at the same trial had also a right of appeal. The learned Sessions Judge has held that none of the 24 accused had any right of appeal in this case. He therefore rejected the appeal referring accused No. 23 to an application for revision to this Court if so advised. Accused No. 23 has applied for revision of the order of the learned Sessions Judge. The only authority of this Court quoted by learned Counsel for the petitioner is the decision of King, J. in Public Prosecutor, Madras v. Kollur Dasa Pai (1). That was a case in which on a summary trial a First Class Bench of Magistrates had sentenced one of several persons convicted under the Gaming Act to pay a fine of Rs. 25 for an offence under s. 9 and a fine of Rs. 50 for an offence under s. 8. The persons convicted appealed to the Sessions Judge, and he held that an appeal lay. The learned Public Prosecutor filed a revision petition against that decision and King, J. held that the learned Sessions Judge's decision was correct. With respect we think that the decision of King, J. in that case was wrong. The matter depends upon the interpretation of s. 415, Criminal P. C. which says:

"An appeal may be brought against any sentence referred to in s. 413 or s. 414 by which any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned are combined, but no sentence which would not otherwise be liable to appeal shall be applicable merely on the ground that the person convicted is ordered to find security to keep the peace."

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate when he imposed upon accused Nos. 6 and 24 two fines of Rs. 20 and Rs. 52 respectively was passing a sentence combining two of the punishments referred to in s. 413. Now s. 413 is as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, there shall be no appeal by a convicted person in cases in which a Court of Session passes a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the First Class passes a sentence of fine not exceeding Rs. 50 only"

(1) (1936) M W N 213.

There are two punishments here mentioned (1) imprisonment and (2) fine. But it is pointed out that in s. 415 there is a reference to "any two or more" of the punishments mentioned in s. 413 or s. 414 and since in s. 413 there are only two kinds of punishments mentioned and in s. 414 there is one kind of punishment mentioned, namely the punishment of fine, it is argued that if there are two or more sentences of fine this must be regarded as a sentence combining two of the punishments mentioned in s. 413 or s. 414. We are unable to accept this argument. We are of opinion that s. 415 when it refers to two or more punishments is referring to two or more punishments of different kinds. The history of the Code is we think important in this connection and makes the matter clear. When s. 415 was just enacted there were three kinds of punishments provided in both ss. 413 and 414, namely in s. 413 a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or fine not exceeding Rs. 50 only or whipping only and in s. 414 a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding three months only, fine not exceeding two hundred rupees only or whipping only. In those circumstances although it might possibly be argued that s. 415 was to some extent superfluous, it could not be argued that it had no meaning. It was clear that it meant to refer to sentences in which two or more different kinds of punishments referred to in s. 413 and s. 414 were combined. After the modifications in s. 413 and s. 414 introduced in 1923 it is impossible to attribute any real meaning to the phrase "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned" in s. 415 so far as it relates at any rate to s. 414. It is clear, we think, as Edgley, J. stated in Kali Charan v. Adhar Mandal (2), that s. 415 has no application in a case in which two non-appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate amount of fine does not exceed Rs. 50. Learned Counsel for the petitioner has relied upon two decisions of the Oudh Chief Court reported in Kandhar v. Emperor (3) and Markand Singh v. Ganga (4), and also upon the decision of Cuming, J. in the case reported in Akbar Ali v Emperor (5). With respect we are not able to agree with those decisions. We prefer the opinion of Mitter, J., in the case reported in Nawab Ali Haji v Joinab Bibi (6), and the view of the learned Chief Justice of Bombay and Crump, J. in the case reported in Shidlingappa v. Emperor (7). Our decision can be rested upon the words of s. 415 itself. It is not possible in this case to say that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has passed any sentence by which any two or more of the punishments mentioned in s. 413 are combined. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not combine any of the punishments in either of the sentences that he imposed. He imposed two separate sentences of fine. There is no combination of punishments in one sentence within the meaning of s. 415, Criminal P. C. We think therefore that the learned Sessions Judge was correct and that this application for revision must be dismissed.

Learned Counsel for the petitioner has attempted to persuade us to interfere in revision finally against the order of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate. That is not the prayer in the petition which is for revision of the order passed by the learned Sessions Judge. But in so far as this is concerned we observe that the ground taken for saying that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wrong in convicting accused No. 23 (present petitioner) are all grounds of fact and not connected with any question of law. Learned Counsel points out that the Sub-Magistrate who tried the case recommended that all the accused should be dealt with under s. 562, Criminal P. C. But the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate has given reasons for not dealing with them under that section and we do not think that there are sufficient grounds for interfering with the exercise of his discretion. We cannot interfere with the conviction on the facts. Accused No. 23 was convicted of rioting and let off with a fine of Rs. 20 which cannot be said to be excessive. This petition is dismissed therefore.

T. V. REDDY—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63-C (1), (Rangoon) s. 46—Execution of decree against garnishee—No order under O. XXI, r. 63-C (1) passed—Legality—Attachment of debt outside jurisdiction of Court, directly—Legality—Executor—Liability of—When personally liable—Attachment—Removal of—Costs—Illegal attachment—Proceedings to set aside—Decree satisfied in meantime—Objector, if entitled to costs.

The proper remedy for a decree-holder on failure of the garnishee to comply with the notice under O. XXI, r. 63-C, is to act under r. 63-C (1), and get from the Court an order to the garnishee to comply with the terms of the notice. Until there has been a definite order against the garnishee to pay under r. 63-C (1), there is nothing executable directly against the garnishee as a decree. Hence no execution proceedings can be continued directly against the garnishee personally or as executor, and the attachment of his banking account is bad.

A Court cannot take out execution against a debt unless the debt is within its ordinary civil jurisdiction. Hence an attachment of a debt outside jurisdiction of a Court made directly and not by precept, is illegal. Ghanshamlal v. Bhansali (1), Richardson v. Richardson (2) and 11 Ind. Cas. 417 (3), relied on.

Where a person is only a debtor in his capacity as an executor, and not personally liable, there is no warrant whatsoever for attaching his personal banking accounts. If the executors have no banking accounts that could be attached, the only remedy is to attach property of the estate of the deceased, unless it is shown that the executor has been mixing up estate money with his personal property.

Where a decree-holder has attached banking account of a garnishee illegally and during proceedings to set aside the attachment, the decree is satisfied and the proceedings are closed, the garnishee is entitled to his costs.

C. R. App. from the order of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, in C. R. No. 597 of 1937.

Mr. Kya Gaing, for the Applicant.

Mr. Dadachanji, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This is an application to revise an order passed by the Chief Judge of the Rangoon Small Cause Court. The respondent obtained from the Court a garnishee order against G. H. Sheerazee's banking accounts in Mandalay. The latter applied for removal of attachment, and before the case came up for hearing, the decree-holder filed an application saying that the decree had been satisfied in full, so the learned Judge passed the following order:

"The applications for removal of attachment are therefore closed. Mr. Kya Gaing asks for costs, and I am not inclined to grant costs, having regard to the circumstances of the case".

The learned Judge gives no special reason for refusing costs, which, in the ordinary way, would have been given to G. H. Sheerazee, but simply refers to the circumstances of the case, and I presume that he was of the opinion that the decree-holder had been in the right or else that G. H. Sheerazee had been in the wrong, throughout and was only saved from having the money taken out of his banking account by some fortuitous circumstance happening which resulted in the decree being paid off. It is therefore necessary to look into the circumstances of the case in full. A perusal of the case is not without interest.

The proceedings began by T. V. Reddy suing M. C. Sheerazee, said to be somewhere in Iran. The suit was on a promissory note, and was filed on January 19, 1937. On the same date an application was filed for attachment before judgment; and the particular property sought to be attached was the share of the defendant due from his father's estate which was in the hands of the executors of his father's will. Prohibitory orders were issued to the two executors, M. M. Sheerazee and G. H. Sheerazee, both of whom were resident in Mandalay, outside the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, Rangoon. A decree was passed on June 18, 1937, and on August 18, an application was filed to call upon the garnishee to deposit the attached sum in Court. Notices were issued through the Small Cause Court of Mandalay, and G. H. Sheerazee wrote a letter to the Judge of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, saying that there were no funds available in the estate of the late Khan Bahadur A. A. A. Sheerazee to pay the balance of M. C. Sheerazee's share. He further said that as soon as funds were available, the amount attached would be remitted. These proceedings ended with the diary order: "The prohibitory order will continue."

The next step was an application for a prohibitory order to be served on the Manager of the Imperial Bank of India, Rangoon, to withhold sufficient money to satisfy the Court out of the banking account of G. H. Sheerazee, who was referred to as the judgment-debtor; but that was infructuous, as the Imperial Bank had no account of Sheerazees'. Then on May 25, 1938 a fresh application was filed. The decree-holder's regular legal adviser was not in Rangoon and another member of the Bar signed the application for him. The application was headed "T. Venkata Reddy, decree-holder;"

the petition is said to be made by the petitioner, but it is signed "Nallamilli Narayana Reddy, petitioner," and the relief asked for is the issue of a prohibitory order to the Manager, National Bank of India, Mandalay, to withhold the sum of Rs 1,610-13-0 to the credit of Khan Bahadur G. H. Sheerazee

"in fixed deposit, current, savings bank or other accounts whatsoever, or, in the alternative, the whole sum of Rs. 1,610-13-0 lying in his hands of the estate of the late A. A. Sheerazee in the name of Khan Bahadur G. H. Sheerazee as executor".

Accompanying the formal application is a petition asking that the Court may issue this order under O. XLVI. As O. XLVI, deals with references to the High Court, there is clearly some mistake, and it is unfortunate that, owing to a similarity of numbers, this might be regarded as an application under O. XXI, r. 46, which refers to attachment of debts, or to s. 46, which refers to attachment by issuing a precept. The order endorsed on the petition was:

"Let attachment issue to the Bank at Mandalay attaching to the extent of the decree the money standing to the credit of G. H. Sheerazee personally or to the credit of the estate of the deceased Sheerazee, of which G. H. Sheerazee is executor."

Unfortunately the record has no papers which show what actually went out from the office; there is merely a typed order in the diary: "Issue precept, returnable on June 26, 1938". The signature of the Judge is typewritten, and there is an Indecipherable initial in the corner which might be anybody's. Be that as it may, it is clear that the Bank got some order, because they stopped paying out from G. H. Sheerazee's personal accounts at the Mandalay branch; and G. H. Sheerazee filed an application for removal of the attachment, which does not give any particular reasons as to why it should be removed, save that he has been put to a great deal of inconvenience and hardship, and that he was at the time in a nursing home in Maymyo in a serious state of health. There is an affidavit to support the application, but no reason is given except that his cheques have been dishonoured and that he was ill. However, the attachment was removed because, according to the diary, the decree-holder filed an application saying that the decree had been satisfied; but this application is not on the file, so where the money came from is not known.

On these facts, the question arises as to whether the learned Chief Judge was justified in refusing the present applicant his costs. I can see no reason whatsoever why the ordinary rule should not have been followed. T. V. Reddy seems to have been acting wrongly very nearly throughout. In the first place, he had no decree or order which is executable as a decree against G. H. Sheerazee. This is the first case which I have had before me under our garnishee rules. If we assume that G. H. Sheerazee had a legal order issued to him attaching money in his hands due to M. C. Sheerazee the Court should have proceeded under O. XXI. rr. 63-A, 63-B, etc. G. H. Sheerazee did not take any action when the debt was attached in his hands in the first place. When an order was issued to him calling upon him to pay money into Court—presumably under r. 63-B—he wrote and said that as an executor he had no funds available, but would pay when he had funds; and all that the Court did was to note “let the prohibitory order continue.” What the decree-holder should have then done was to act under r. 63-C (1), and get from the Court an order to the garnishee to comply with the terms of the notice; and r. 63-C (1) goes on to say: “On such order execution may issue against the garnishee as though such order were a decree against him.” This rule makes it quite clear that until there had been a definite order against the garnishee to pay under r. 63, C (1), there is nothing executable directly against the garnishee as a decree. This being the case, no execution proceedings could have been continued directly against the garnishee personally or as executor, and the attachment of his banking account was entirely bad.

This however is not the only mistake. The Bank at Mandalay was not within the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, Rangoon. This seems to have been recognized by the reference in the petition of May 5, to the issue of a precept to the District Court. Section 46, Civil P. C., makes provision for attachments by precept outside the jurisdiction. A Court cannot take out execution against a debt unless the debt is within its ordinary civil jurisdiction. I had this point before me recently in an unreported case, Civ. Rev. No. 292 of 1938. Janki Prasad Rajaram v. The Trustees of the India Staff Provident Fund of the National Bank of India, Ltd. In that case no attachment was possible in any way whatsoever, because the debt was a sterling debt located in London. In the present case the debt is within Burma but is not within the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon. It would be attachable under s. 46 by precept, but there is nothing on the file to show that this has been done. The order written by the learned Chief Judge is simply to the effect that an attachment be issued to the Bank, and in view of the fact that the attachments before judgment were issued direct by the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, and were not made by precept, it may, I think, be assumed that the second attachments were issued in the same way.

In Ghanshamlal v. Bhansali (1), it was held under the old Code that debts could not be attached if the debts were not within the jurisdiction, of any Court in British India. In an English case, Richardson v. Richardson (2), an application was made in London to the High Court to attach a debtor's Bank balances outside its jurisdiction, and it was held that this could not be done. On p. 235* occurs the passage;

“The debt must be properly recoverable within the jurisdiction. In principle, attachment of debts is a form of execution, and the general power of execution extends only to property within the jurisdiction of the Court which orders it. A debt is not property within the jurisdiction if it cannot be recovered here”.

Also in Begg, Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (3), it is laid down that it is not competent to a Court, in execution of a decree for money, to attach, at the instance of the decree-holder, a debt payable to the judgment-debtor outside the jurisdiction, by a person not resident within the jurisdiction of that Court. This, of course does not apply to attachments of salaries, which are governed by a special rule, viz. O. XXI, r. 48. In either event therefore these attachments were illegal. The attachment before judgment was of a debt alleged to be due by somebody in Mandalay to somebody resident in Iran and the second attachments were of debts payable by the Bank in Mandalay to G. H. Sheerazee in Mandalay also. A further point may also be noted. As G. H. Sheerazee is only a debtor in his capacity as an executor, and not personally liable, there was no warrant whatsoever that I can see for attaching his personable banking accounts. If the executors had no banking accounts that could be attached, the only remedy was to attach property of the estate of the deceased A. A. A. Sheerazee unless it were shown that the executor had been mixing up estate money with his personal property. I can therefore see no merit, whatsoever about T. V. Reddy's handling of these execution proceedings, and therefore there is no judicial reason why the present applicant should not have the costs to which he was entitled and for which he asks, viz three gold mohurs. The respondent will also have to pay the costs of this application, including Advocate's fee which I fix at two gold mohurs.

THE OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL

AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Will—Testator bequeathing moiety in favour of son R—Other moiety to be held in trust for R's male issue—In case of R's death without male issues this other moiety to go to R. D. Trust Estate—Gift to Trust Estate, if void—This gift, when takes effect—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 10—Assignee from trustee, without consideration—Defence of limitation, if available.

In truth, inheritance is not donation, and a bequest is not a donation de praesenti between living people. It is to be recognised that the Hindu Law has been greatly influenced by the notion of "relinquishment in favour of a sentient being" as the basis of a gift and of inheritance, but this principle has not, been allowed to arrest the development of the Hindu Law of wills. The doctrine that there must be acceptance at the time of relinquishment has different values according as it is applied to gifts inter vivos or is extended by analogy to bequests or inheritance, though by a theory of some refinement heir and donee were once thought to be equally governed by the same principle. The theory, is sometimes put by saying that the estate cannot remain in abeyance. Thus it appears that property in the heir must arise immediately upon the death of the ancestor in the same manner as the property of the donee arises immediately upon relinquishment by the donor. But it must needs be admitted that the rigour of this theory, even if it be not destructive of all future gifts, is inconsistent with any recognition of contingent or executory bequests. It has effect (save in so far as the Legislature has abrogated it: [Hindu Wills Act, 1870, Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916]), to limit the class of persons who are capable of taking under a will, restricting it to persons who either in fact or in contemplation of law are in existence at the death of the testator. But it does not remain as a further obstruction to the taking by such persons of a beneficial interest known to and permitted by the law. Indeed, if an estate in remainder can be limited to take effect on the natural determination of a life estate and may be so limited upon a condition which may never be fulfilled if a gift over on condition may be good though in defeasance of an absolute estate granted by the will, there is no principle of Hindu Law to be saved by refusing to recognise a limitation to take effect upon condition in the future because it lacks "support" from a particular estate. It cannot be disputed that if a conditional limitation is invalid, the interest, unless otherwise disposed of by the will, must go to the heir. But if limited interests are to be recognised, there is no reason to hold that because a prior interest goes to the heir as such a conditional limitation or any other limitation is bad at Hindu Law. [p. 117, cols. 1 & 2.]

The principle of Hindu Law which prevents an estate being in abeyance is an important doctrine of the law of inheritance and it has important consequences as regards adoption. The rule is that the right of succession vests immediately on the death of the owner. Apart from the case of a child en ventre sa mere or of an adopted child, the estate once vested in an heir will not be divested by the subsequent birth of a person who would have been a preferable heir had he been alive at the time of the death of the last owner. In like manner, though the doctrine is not really the same, delivery in some sense is necessary at Hindu Law to distinguish the completed gift from the mere promise. But neither of these doctrines nor yet the principle that a man cannot devise an interest of a nature and quality unknown to the Hindu Law (e. g., descendible in a manner unknown to that law) conflict with the principle that where there is a will the heir can as such take only that part of the testator's property which is not disposed of by the will. He will take by descent and by his right of inheritance whatever is not validly disposed of by the will and given to some other person. Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore (1) and Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Dinobundoo Mullick (4), and other case-law discussed. [p. 117, col. 2; p. 118, col. 1.]

A testator bequeathed a moiety of his estate to his only son R and as regards the other moiety it was provided that it was to be held by R and certain other persons in trust for R's male issue. It was further provided that in case of R's death without male issue this other moiety was to go to a certain trust known as R. D. Trust Estate:

Held, that merely because of the failure of the testator's disposition of the interest in favour of the R. D. Trust Estate during the life-time of R, the bequest in favour of the R. D. Trust was not invalid. This gift to R. D. Trust took effect on the death of R without leaving male issue, who as heir of the testator would take the prior interest for his own life in this moiety such interest not having been disposed of by the will. The contention that the testator's directions to regulate the devolution of his property though within limits laid down by law would fail if the heir took any interest immediately upon the death of the testator, was fallacious, for it assumed that the complete interest in the property had devolved on the heir, which was the very point in dispute.

[Case-law discussed.]

Where the assignee of a trustee does not give valuable consideration, in a suit to recover trust property from the assignee by the Official Trustee, defence of limitation is not available to him but is excluded by the terms of s. 10, Lim. Act. [p. 110, col. 1.]

Messrs. L. P. E. Pugh, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants.

Sir Thomas Strangman, K. C. and Mr. W. W. K. Page, for Respondent No. 1.

Sir George Rankin.—One Shib Chandra Mullick, a Hindu governed by the Dayabhaga, was possessed of considerable property movable and immovable, comprising a number of house properties in Calcutta and its suburbs, as well as zamindari property in the Sundarbans. He died on August 4, 1866, leaving him surviving a widow and an only son, Rishikesh Mullick. By his will, dated August 3, 1866, he appointed one Dwarkanath Bhanjoo, his son Rishikesh and the Administrator-General of Bengal for the time being (who never acted) to be "executors and trustees of this my will". After providing for his widow's maintenance and residence and giving pecuniary legacies to her and to certain other persons, he disposed of the residue of his property as follows:—

"I give devise and bequeath all the rest, residue and remainder of my property movable and immovable unto my Executors hereinafter named in trust as to one moiety thereof for my only son Rishikesh upon his attaining the age of twenty-one years and as to the other moiety thereof, In trust for the male issue of my said son Rishikesh (Rishikesh) share and share alike if more than one and if only one to that only one but in case my said son should die without male issue or leaving male issue such male issue should die under the age of sixteen years without leaving male issue him or them surviving them as to that moiety. In trust to be paid over to the Trustees and added to the Trust Fund known as Roopchand Dhur Trust Estate and subject to the trusts thereof and in case my said son Rishikesh should die before attaining the age of twenty-one years and without leaving male issue him surviving or to be born after his death in due course of time then as to the moiety of the movable and immovable estate bequeathed and devised to him. In trust to be paid over to the Trustees and added to the Trust Fund known as Roopchand Dhur Trust Estate and subject to the Trusts thereof."

No question now arises as to the moiety which was given to Rishikesh ("the first moiety"), but as to the other moiety ("the second moiety") the present appeal raises questions as to the validity and effectiveness of the gift to the Roopchand Dhur Trust Estate. It is to be observed that the will came into effect before the Hindu Wills Act of 1870 and that the validity of its provisions must be judged according to the Hindu Law in force in Bengal in 1866.

On August 14, 1866, probate of the will was granted to Rishikesh and Dwarkanath Bhanjoo, who took possession of the testator's estate. On January 9, 1873, Rishikesh, having attained the age of 21 years died intestate, never having had a son, but leaving him surviving a widow, Purasundari, and a daughter. The appellants' averments as to what happened after the death of Rishikesh may for the purposes of this appeal be accepted and are stated in their "Case" as follows:—

"It appears from mutation papers and cess returns exhibited in the case that after the death of Rishikesh Dwarkanath Bhanjoo continued to act as sole surviving executor till the year 1880, when he applied for mutation of names in favour of Purasundari, and in 1881 or 1882 made over the whole estate to her. The widow as heiress of Rishikesh remained in possession of the whole of the testator's residuary estate until her death, which occurred on September 11, 1932. During this long period of 50 years neither the plaintiff nor anyone else interested in the Roopchand Dhur Trust claimed under the will or questioned the right of the lady until the present suit of 1934."

On April 27, 1934, the Official Trustee of Bengal (respondent No. 1) filed a suit in the High Court at Calcutta claiming as trustee of the Roopchand Dhur Trust to be entitled under the terms of the testator's will to the whole of his residuary estate: alternatively, to one-half thereof. He impleaded the present appellants, who are the reversioners of Rishikesh, as persons wrongfully claiming the estate and wrongfully in possession thereof. The claim to the first moiety (which by the terms of the will was given to Rishikesh on his attaining the age of 21 years) was abandoned at an early stage of the suit. But as to the second moiety the suit succeeded before the trial Judge (Ameer Ali, J.) and also on appeal to a Division Bench (Costello and Panckridge, JJ.). A preliminary decree for partition was made (June 28, 1937) and affirmed on (appeal April 6, 1938).

The first question is whether the suit is barred by limitation and this defence must prevail unless s. 10 of the Lim. Act, 1908, applies to the case.

"Section 10. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose, or against his legal representatives or assigns (not being assigns for valuable consideration), for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

The appellants contend that this section does not deprive them of the protection prima facie afforded to them against stale claims by the appropriate articles in the schedules. They point to the fact that under the will no right arose to the Roopchand Dhur Trust in respect of the moiety now in question until after the death of Rishikesh. Hence they deny that Rishikesh in his lifetime was ever a trustee. They maintain that, even if he was a trustee, his widow took from his surviving co-trustee Dwarkanath Bhanjoo; hence that neither she nor the appellants are to be regarded for the purposes of s. 10 as the legal representatives of a trustee. To this a further argument is added that the widow received the estate from the surviving executor at a time when any claim to a legacy or a distributive share by the plaintiff had become barred by limitation.

This defence, in their Lordships' opinion fails. That the interest of the Roopchand Dhur Trust did not arise until the death of Rishikesh is clear enough, in the sense that before that date it was a contingent interest; but Rishikesh as one of the executors and trustees of his father's will had a duty in his lifetime to preserve the property of which the residuary estate consisted. There was an express trust for a specific purpose and he was under a duty to fulfil that part of it which required fulfilment in his lifetime. But when he died he ceased to be a trustee and Dwarkanath Bhanjoo became sole trustee. On the appellants' own showing Purasundari took from him and is the assign of a trustee. As it is not pretended that she gave valuable consideration, the defence of limitation is not available to her but is excluded by the terms of s. 10. Had the plaintiff in 1881 or 1882 sued Dwarkanath to recover the share of residue given to the Roopchand Dhur Trust, s. 10 would have had the same effect to exclude any plea of limitation raised by the trustee.

The validity of the bequest of the second moiety to the Roopchand Dhur Trust Estate must therefore be examined. The first limitation of the beneficial interest in this moiety is to the male issue of Rishikesh. This failed as he had no male issue at the death of the testator (or at any other time). There is no other disposition of the beneficial interest which could take effect in the lifetime of Rishikesh. But there is a limitation to the Roopchand Dhur Trust Estate which is to take effect in either of two events (a) in case Rishikesh should die without male issue) which probably means without leaving male issue), (b) in case Rishikesh should die leaving male issue but such male issue should die under the age of 16 years without leaving male issue him or them surviving. The former is the event which happened: the state of affairs described in (b) on any view of that provision did not happen. Clearly the two contingencies are independent and indeed mutually exclusive. Hence though the gift to the Roopchand Dhur Trust might be invalid had it been claimable solely on the ground of fulfilment of condition (b), this consideration would not in any way invalidate the gift if, in the events which happened, it was claimable under (a). Panckridge, J. put the matter simply and correctly:

"If the testator has separated the gift so as to take effect upon the happening of any of several events, and the event which happens is not too remote, the gift over is good."

The bequest to the Roopchand Dhur Trust which has here to be considered is therefore a bequest to take effect on the death of Rishikesh without male issue, the disposition intended to have effect during the life of Rishikesh having failed. It is not disputed that had the will given an estate for life to Rishikesh and then directed that upon his death without leaving male issue it should go to the Roopchand Trust Estate, this conditional limitation would have been good. The question for decision is as to the effect at Hindu Law of the failure of the testator's disposition of the interest in this moiety during the life of Rishikesh. The view taken by the learned Judges in the High Court is that the gift to the Roopchand Dhur Trust Estate is good and took effect on the death of Rishikesh, who as heir of the testator took the prior interest for his own life in this moiety, such interest not having been disposed of by the will. The view contended for with much learning and ability by Mr. Pugh and Mr. Parikh on behalf of the appellants is, that the gift to the Trust Estate is void at Hindu Law, no interest being taken under the will by any ascertained person at the time of the testator's death. There is, therefore, it is said, no possibility of relinquishment by the testator and acceptance by or on behalf of the legatee being supposed to have taken place at the time of the testator's death as required by Hindu Law. The same result is contended for on a broader, if not necessarily a separate ground—that, there being no gift taking effect at the time of the testator's death, there was therefore an intestacy, and Rishikesh took this moiety as heir; with the result that it could not thereafter be divested. From the principle that on the death of a Hindu, the right of succession to his property cannot remain in abeyance, it is said to follow that where there is a will, property, unless vested by the will in a devisee or legatee immediately on the death of the testator, must go to the heir and all the provisions of the will as to the property must fail.

These arguments require that their Lordships should consider the Hindu Law upon the subject of conditional limitations in order to ascertain the principles which determine the validity of a bequest which by its terms is to take effect at the close of a life in being but only upon the happening of an uncertain event. Is it necessary that a prior interest taking effect immediately on the death of the testator should have been bequeathed by the will? The history of the recognition by British Indian Courts of the testamentary power at Hindu Law has been traced by Mr. Mayne in Chap. XI of his well known work and it is sufficiently plain that the Hindu will in its present form is a development since the middle of the eighteenth century. It is not, therefore, necessary at this stage to discuss whether the notion of a will is an original part of the Hindu Law [cf. the judgment of Norman, J. in the Tagore case (Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendr Mohan Tagore) (1)]. Nor can the course of the decisions be now diverted by any conclusion that could be reached as to the true intention of the first chapter of the Dayabhaga—that is, whether it teaches, contrary to the Mitakshara, that the donee's right arises by the donor's act of relinquishment alone and does not require acceptance by the donee [cf. Sarkar's Hindu Law, 7th ed., p. 991. Dayabhaga I 22].

The right of a Hindu in Bengal to make a will was recognised by this Board in 1855 as well-established, it being stated that "the strictness of the ancient law has long since been relaxed". [Nagalutchmee Ummal v. Gopoo Nadaraja Chetty (2)]. But in a later case it was said on behalf of the Board by Lord Justice Turner that "with reference to the testamentary power of disposition by Hindus the extent of this power must be regulated by the Hindu Law" [Sonatun Bysak v. Smt. Juggutsoondree Dossee (3)].

In 1862 the question whether a person in existence at the date of the testator's death might become entitled upon a future contingency to receive an additional benefit was directly dealt with by a judgment delivered by Lord Justice Knight Bruce on behalf of a Board which had the aid as assessors of Sir Lawrence Peel and Sir James Colville [Sn. Soorieemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (4)]. There a Hindu in Bengal had by his will given the whole of his estate to his five sons in equal shares, but had provided that if any son should die [not leaving any son or son's son] that share should not go to the widow or daughter of the testator's son so dying or to any daughter's son, but should go to "such of my sons and my son's sons as shall then be alive." One of the testator's sons having died without male issue his widow claimed his fifth share as his heir. It was held by the Supreme Court (per Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J.) that "the limitation over was valid as an executory bequest." This Board, pressed with the observation previously made by Lord Justice Turner, considered whether the Hindu Law prohibits such a provision. Lord Justice Knight Bruce said:

"Whatever may have formerly been considered the state of that law as to the testamentary power of Hindus over their property, that power has now long been recognized, and must be considered as completely established. This being so, we are to say, whether there is anything against public convenience, anything generally mischievous or anything against the general principles of Hindu Law in allowing a testator to give property, whether by way of remainder, or by way of executory bequest (to borrow terms from the Law of England), (upon an event which is to happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being. Their Lordships think that there is not; that there would be great general inconvenience and public mischief in denying such a power, and that it is their duty to advise Her Majesty that such a power does exist. Such powers have been long recognised in practice. The Law of India, at least the law of Bengal, has long been administered upon that basis, and the very mode in which this suit has been framed, and the manner in which it was conducted in India, are evidence, if evidence were wanting, that such is the general opinion, entertained in Bengal. Their Lordships, therefore, being of opinion, as has already been stated, that according to the true meaning of this will the property was given over upon an event which was to take place, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being at the time when the will was made, and seeing that that event has happened, considered that the testator, in making this provision, did not infringe or exceed the powers given him by the Hindu Law, and that the clause effectually gives the corpus of the property to the surviving sons immediately on the death of that son who died without leaving male issue."

No question arose or appears to have been raised as to the necessity for every

donee to have been in existence at the testator's death. As was later noticed [in the Tagore case (1)], it was sufficient to reject the claim of the widow without considering whether sons of any other deceased son of the testator could have claimed to participate in her deceased husband's share. But the words "remainder" and "executory bequest" which the Lord Justice "borrowed" to express his meaning were somewhat unreasonably taken as introducing the technicalities of English Law into the Hindu Law. The words, however, were used together for the very purpose of excluding such technicalities—the differences between contingent remainders and executory devises not being in point in connection with a Hindu will. What were those differences? They turned upon whether there was or was not a particular prior estate, whether it was an estate of freehold, whether it was conferred by the same will, whether the subsequent interest was to take effect at the natural determination of the prior estate, or before or after that event. The language of the Lord Justice disregards all such matters and contains nothing to intimate that there is any need for a conditional limitation to be "supported" by any prior estate conferred by the same will, though it is expressly restricted to dispositions which must take effect immediately at the close of a life in being. This stipulation has nothing whatever to do with any doctrine of the Hindu Law and the use of the technical phrase "executory devise" is enough in itself to show that the Lord Justice is not intending to confine his remarks to estates dependent for their validity upon their relation to a prior (particular) estate. Sir Barnes Peacock, in the Tagore case (1), appreciated that the words "remainder" and "executory bequest" were used to mean "conditional limitations"; and in an unanswerable passage emphasised the absurdity of applying the English Law of contingent remainders and executory devises, of springing and shifting uses, to cases governed by Hindu Law which knows nothing of freehold estates. The language of Lord Kingsdown in Bhoobum Moyee Debia v. Ram Kishore Acharj Choudhuri (5), was that, though the testamentary power of disposition among Hindus had been established in Bengal, "it would be to apply a very false and mischievous principle if it were held that the nature and extent of such power can be governed by any analogy to the Law of England." This observation was not required to correct anything said in Soorjeemoney's case (4), but was evoked by the fact that a Judge of the Sudder Court had, in the case then before the Board applied to a Bengalee deed the rules which he discovered in "Ferne on Contingent Remainders." Still, it might not be candid to deny that Soorjeemoney's case (4), had dealt abruptly rather than meticulously with Hindu Law and was in some respects lacking in precision; hence subsequent decisions must be scrutinised to see if they restrict the freedom of bequest which it allowed.

In a case which raised a question as to the property over which the testator had power of disposition, Sir James Colville in 1867 [Baboo Beer Pertab Sahee v. Maharajah Rajinder Pertab Sahee (6)] said:—

"Decided cases too numerous to be now questioned, have determined that the testamentary power exists, and may be exercised at least within the limits which the law prescribes to alienation by gift inter vivos."

But little can be gained by an attempt to construe narrowly this cautious observation.

In the Tagore case (1), Jatindra Mohan Tagore v. Ganendra Mohan Tagore (7). Phear, J., as trial Judge treated Soorjeemoney's case (4), as authority for holding that a gift could be made by will to a person not in existence at the testator's death and for the general application of English principles of law to the limitations in a Hindu will. On appeal Peacock, C. J., and Norman, J., overruled those opinions. They went elaborately into the essentials of a gift at Hindu Law with special reference to the question whether a person could take if not in existence at the date of the relinquishment by the donor. The learned Chief Justice held that on general principles of Hindu Law the donee under a gift inter vivos must be in existence at the date of the gift and the donee under a will must be in existence at the date of the death of the giver.

He does not seem to have felt any difficulty in the case of what in English Law would be called vested remainders. But he considered that on the principles of the Hindu Law a gift whether inter vivos, or by will "cannot be made in such a manner as that the donee cannot be ascertained at the time at which the property by virtue of the gift or devise ceases to be that of the donor or testator." Citing the first chapter of the Dayabhaga he observed that "there is nothing to show that after property has ceased by virtue of a gift to be that of the donor there can be any contingency or uncertainty as to the person in whom it is to vest or that the property can be so given by will as to remain in abeyance or in nubibus until the donee comes into existence". He doubted whether it was consistent with Hindu Law that executory bequests should be sanctioned. On the other hand, he recognised that, in Soorjeemoney's case (4), by his own decision and the decision of the Judicial Committee, the conditional limitation which, by borrowing terms from English Law, was called an "executory bequest" had been held valid according to Hindu Law. He also recognised that upon the Hindu texts a gift may be made upon condition and that "even a gift in remainder upon condition is good." Like Norman, J., he noticed verses 4 and 5 in the first chapter of the Dayabhaga where it is said that daya (heritage) signifies what is given [pp. 180, 218]. From this he drew the conclusion that both in the case of a gift and in the case of inheritance property must arise immediately in the heir or donee upon death or relinquishment by the owner.

In agreement with the Appellate Bench of the High Court it was held by the Judicial Committee (a) that the gift of a life estate was valid even though made to a son; (b) that a testator cannot create an estate which is unknown to the Hindu Law e. g., an estate in tail male and (c) that a gift cannot be made by will to a person not in existence at the time of the testator's death. The general principle governing wills was stated in the judgment delivered by Willes, J., on behalf of the Board as follows: "The analogous law in this case is to be found in that applicable to gifts, and even if wills were not universally to be regarded in all respects as gifts to take effect upon death, they are generally so to be regarded as to the property which they can transfer and the persons to whom it can be transferred."

It is important that the close connection between the several branches of this decision should not be overlooked. If Hindu Law, whatever may have been its earliest form, is to have regard not only to absolute or complete ownership in property but to limited interests therein—life estates followed by other life estates or by remainders—some modification may be necessary in the abstract theory of gift as applied to wills. Again, so long as it was in doubt whether an unborn person could take under a will it was difficult to recognise contingent or executory bequests in view of the absence from Hindu Law of any rule against perpetuity. But those matters being settled, a provision that the taker must be in existence at the date of the testator's death would seem to preserve the essential principle of the Hindu Law in a form not inconsistent with effective testamentary power. The facts of the Tagore case (1), itself did not call for any more detailed treatment of executory bequests. A large number of contingent remainders had been given by the will but all of these failed and certain contingent life interests likewise failed. The original life estate given to Juttendro was held to be valid, and it does not appear to have been doubted that a Hindu could validly create contingent intestates. The effect of this case upon Soorjeemoney's case (4), in their Lordships' opinion was to show how the principles of the Hindu Law of gift were to be applied to wills. It established, though not as a definition in all respects precise, that the scope of such principles was to determine the property which could be transferred and the persons to whom it could be transferred. The donee under a will must be such a person as was capable of taking according to Hindu Law. There is nothing in the judgment of Willes, J., to suggest that a person capable of taking because in existence at the death of the testator will have further difficulties to surmount by showing that he accepted at the time of the death the interest which the testator intended him to have—a condition which Peacock, O. J., and others had held, with complete logic, to exclude the possibility of executory bequests. On the other hand the judgment did contain a warning that the Hindu Law of gift was not of universal applicability to Hindu wills. It need not, however, be taken as a final decision upon matters not fairly raised by the facts of that case or Soorjeemoney's case (4).

In later cases before the Board the question of the absence or failure of a disposition of the prior interest did not arise, but the references to Soorjeemoney's case (4) disclose no suggestion that the gift of a prior interest is necessary. In Bhoobun Mohini Debya v. Hurriah Chunder Chowdhry (8), the sanad was held upon its true construction to give to the grantor's sister an absolute interest in certain villages defeasible in the event of a failure of her issue at the time of her death, in which event it was to revert to the donor or his heirs. In Ram Lal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State (9), the testator gave his estate in the events which had happened, to his widow for the interest of a Hindu widow, and the "reversion" to his daughter's daughter Hori Dasi. Sir Robert Collier referred to Soorjeemoney's case (4), the Tagore case (1) and the case last cited, saying that since these cases it could not be disputed that "a gift by will upon an event which is to happen, if at all immediately upon the close of a life in being, to a person in existence, and capable of taking under the will at the testator's death, was good and valid under Hindu Law, and consequently that it was competent to the testator, by the use of apt words, to confer an absolute estate on Hori Dasi on the death of his widow (p. 61)."

In Tarakeswar Roy v. Shoshi Shikhareswar (10), the will was held to give a life estate to each of the three nephews of the testator with a gift over, of the share of any nephew dying without leaving male issue, to the other nephews for life. Sir Robert Collier said that "the gift over was to persons alive and capable of taking on the death of the testator, to take effect on the death of a person or persons also then alive, and was competent according to the authority of Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundhoo Mullick (4), as explained in the Tagore case (1)."

In Srimati Kristoromoney Dossee v. Maharajah Norendro Krishna (11) the same principles were re-stated with reference to the defeasance of a prior absolute interest by a subsequent event, though the ultimate result of the will was to give to the testator's half-brothers an estate for life in remainder expectant on the death of the daughter who was given the first life interest.

In 1898 in the case of Amrito Lall Dutt v. Surnomoni Dasi (12), the argument for which the appellants now contend was accepted by Trevelyan, J., though Maclean, C. J. and Macpherson, J. found it unnecessary to express any opinion on the matter. From his judgment it sufficiently appears that Trevelyan, J. considered that the doctrine to which he assented was to be found in the Tagore case (1):

"According to that (Hindu) Law there must, as I understand it, be a present beneficiary in order to make a gift valid. There may be a gift in future but there must also be a gift in present. The law of gifts and of wills is the same, and in order that there may be a valid gift the donor must immediately divest himself of the property in favour of some existing beneficiary, and in the same way with regard to wills there cannot be a gift to a person to come into operation at a future date unless there be a gift to a beneficiary in the interim. This is as I understand it merely what was decided in the Tagore case (1). In the judgment of that case we find the following: "Their Lordships for the reasons stated are of opinion that a person capable of taking under a will must be such a person as could take a gift inter vivos and must either in fact or in contemplation of law be in existence at the death of the testator."

With all respect to this opinion of a distinguished learned Judge, their Lordships think it is open to the objection that the passage quoted is no authority for the doctrine advanced, and their Lordships find no other passage in the judgment of Willes, J. which contains such doctrine.

In Bai Motivahoo v. Bai Mamoo bai (13), the judgment of the Board was delivered by Sir Richard Couch. The testator had by his will devised immovables upon certain trusts during the lifetime of his daughter Mamoo and her children: if there were no children, the property was to go to such persons as she might appoint by will. Farran, J. held that the gift to Mamoo was an absolute gift: a Division Bench (Sargent, C. J. and Bayley, J.) on appeal rejected this view but upheld the power of appointment as valid at Hindu Law provided that it was exercised during the lifetime of the tenant for life and that the appointee should have been alive at the death of the testator.

Soorjeemoney's case (4) and the Tagore case (1), were considered by the Board, and Sir Richard Couch stressed the passage from the judgment of Willes, J. in the latter case where it was said that wills are generally to be regarded as gifts to take effect upon death "as to the property which they can transfer and the persons to whom it can be transferred." Sir Richard Couch's judgment continued:—

"These appear to their Lordships to be the limits of the analogy between wills and gifts inter vivos which have been recognised. They are not aware of any authority in support of Mr. Mayne's contention, as they understood it, that in the present case, there would not be such a transfer of possession to the person who would take by virtue of the power as is necessary to enable it to be validly exercised. It appears to them to follow, from the first taker being allowed to have only a life interest, that his possession is sufficient to complete the executory bequest which follows the gift for life. The result of the decisions is that, according to settled law, if the testator here had himself designated the person who was to take the property in the event of Mamoo dying childless, the bequest would be good. The remaining question is whether his substituting Mamoo and giving her power to designate the person by her will is contrary to any principle of Hindu Law. There is an analogy to it in the law of adoption. A man may by will authorize his widow to adopt a son to him, to do what he had power to do himself, and although there is here a strong religious obligation, their Lordships think that the law as to adoption shows that such a power as that now in question is not contrary to any principle of Hindu Law. Further, they think that the reasons which have led to a testamentary power becoming part of the Hindu Law are applicable to this power, and that it is their duty to hold it to be valid. But whilst saying this they think they ought also to say that in their opinion the English Law of powers is not to be applied generally to Hindu wills."

It is contended for the appellants that by this decision the Board introduced a requirement extending the analogy of gifts beyond the two matters mentioned by Willes, J., and making the validity of limitations to take effect after the testator's death upon an uncertain event depend upon whether or not by his will he has interposed a life estate so as to have provided a first taker under the will whose possession is "sufficient to complete the executory bequest". The exact effect of the judgment upon this point is not altogether plain. It may be observed that, until this case, it had not at any time been held by the Board or even suggested in any of the cases before the Board that the Hindu Law as to conditional limitations was to be operated by a fiction imputing to the devisee the possession of a previous taker under the will. In a well-known text book—West and Buller; "Hindu Law", 3rd ed. 1884—the learned authors had contended that an executory devise as distinguished from a remainder could not properly be received into the Hindu system (p. 217). As regards remainders they appear to have thought that these could be reconciled with Hindu legal principles if the entry or acceptance of the taker of the immediate particular estate might enure for the benefit of the remainderman. The learned authors were well aware that Soorjeemoney's case (4), had permitted executory bequests and indeed were under no illusions as to the fictitious character of the doctrine which applies to wills the notion of a resignation by the previous holder and a simultaneous release of the physical detention (or delivery) to the donee (p. 218-9). Sargent, C. J. in the High Court rightly interpreted these reflections as showing that both remainders and executory devises are "opposed to the strict notions of a gift", and had refused to regard that consideration as conclusive.

Whatever might be said of the Tagore case (1), if taken by itself, the Board in Sir Richard Couch's judgment is noting that the analogy between gifts and wills at Hindu Law is one as to which certain limits have been recognised. This would seem to mean that save as regards the property which may be disposed of and the person who is capable of taking, the analogy according to the authorities was inapplicable or at least was so far unauthorised. Their Lordships do not gather from the judgment that Sir Richard Couch intended to remove or extend the limits to which he refers or to lay down principles to govern cases of a character not then before the Board. On the contrary, he would appear by his observation about the possession of the first taker to be answering on its own premises an argument about transfer of possession and saying that the authorities do not bear it out; with the result that it becomes unnecessary to interfere with or to go beyond the limits to which he has referred.

Mr. Mayne's argument as to the impossibility of "transfer of possession" does not clearly appear from the reports, but it had reference doubtless to the fact that the appointee might be anyone alive at the testator's death whether known to the testator or not. It may well have been thought sufficient answer to point out that this uncertainty as to the beneficiary raised no greater difficulty than was present in the case of any gift in remainder upon a condition. In any case the observation made is that "it appears to them to follow from the first taker being allowed to have only a life interest" that his possession was sufficient to complete the executory bequest; but the Board had repeatedly upheld such bequests where they took effect to divest an absolute estate. The principle upon which the Board in the end proceeded was the same as in Soorjeemoney's case (4)—not that the strict original theory of the Hindu Law of gift required no extension if it were to cover the case—but that "the reasons which have led to a testamentary power becoming part of the Hindu Law are applicable to this power" and that "the power was not contrary to any principle of Hindu Law." Their Lordships are not of opinion that Soorjeemoney's case (4), has been narrowed by this later decision so as to exclude a well-known class of conditional limitations by introducing a doctrine as to the need for a particular estate to support a limitation made to commence in futuro.

In Bhupendra Krishna Ghose v. Amarendra Nath Dey (14), Bhupendra Krishna Ghose v. Amarendra Nath Dey (15), the High Court at Calcutta again dealt with the question now at issue. A Hindu of Bengal had died sonless in 1907 leaving a will whereby he appointed his wife sole executrix and authorized her to adopt five sons in succession:—

"If my said wife dies without adopting a son or if such adopted son predeceases her without leaving any male issue in such case my estate after the death of my said wife should pass to the sons of my sister Sm. Benodini Dasee who may be living at the time of my death."

The widow in 1909 adopted a son who on March 11, 1910, died unmarried; the widow died a few days afterwards not having adopted any other son. The arguments addressed to the High Court and to this Board were exactly those urged for the appellants in the present case and turned on the fact that there was in the will no express gift of any life interest to the widow but a provision for maintenance (Rs. 300 per month) and residence in the family house. Fletcher, J. (pp. 646-7*) as trial Judge referred to Soorjeemoney's case (4), saying:—

"It is quite true that in that case the Privy Council were considering the case of an executory devise or a gift over where a previous gift had been made by the will, but there is nothing to my mind from which I can hold that their Lordships considered or meant to infer that if the testator had left a particular interest in property undisposed of, that an executory estate created by his will was ipso facto void."

[and again]

"I have heard nothing in the argument to convince me that the supposed rule of Hindu Law that after the succession has opened out the testator is not able to regulate the course of successions in fact exists."

Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. with whom Woodroffe, J. agreed took the same view:—

"The appellant based his contention on two grounds. First, he argued, that if property vests in a full owner under the ordinary Hindu Law of inheritance, then the future devolution of the property from him cannot be disturbed except by a restriction imposed from the beginning. Next, he maintained that if effect were given to the bequest in favour of the sons, there would be such an uncertainty as to who would take, that the property would be in abeyance, and this would contravene a fundamental rule of Hindu Law. I am not much impressed by either of these contentions. The first is founded on a fallacy, for it assumes that the complete interest in the property has devolved on the full owner. But that is the very point in dispute, for if the bequest is operative, there would be merely a partial intestacy, and only a qualified interest would vest in the widow or adopted son as the case might be. The conditional bequest would not be an attempt to give an unauthorised direction to property vested in a full owner, but simply the curtailment of the interest in that property. Nor do I think the second line of argument possesses any greater merit, for I see no ground for saying that the property would be in abeyance, or that there was any more uncertainty as to the destination of the property than in (sic) the necessary consequence of every contingent bequest....

It has been argued that the interest preceding this bequest to the defendants arose by implication under the will: but, whether this be the true view or not, I think the bequest is good. It does not infringe any rule against remoteness, nor are the legatees incapable of taking. It is true that the bequest is contingent, but that does not avoid it (s. 107 and Part XV of the Succession Act). Nor was it fatal to the bequest that it was to take effect, not necessarily at the testator's death, but possibly at a future date. This view is sanctioned by the illustrations to s. 107. It has never been suggested, that an annuity cannot be created by a Hindu will and yet according to Lord Cottenham an annuity of £100 is the gift of 'as many sums of £100 as the donee shall live years': Belwitt v. Roberts (16).

And so a bequest of a legacy, or of an estate on a future contingent event, would be good within the meaning of s. 107 of the Succession Act; see the illustrations to that section and Soorjeemoney Dossee v. Denobundoo Mullick (4).

But if the future contingent bequest of a sum of money, or an estate, or a farm or a fund all of which are mentioned in the illustrations to s. 107, be sanctioned, why is the bequest in this will bad? It was conceded by Counsel for the petitioner that if the bequest had been of a sum of money it would have been good, unless it was a sum of money that exhausted the whole estate: this it was argued, would have been a fraud on the law. In other words according to the petitioner the validity of the legacy is dependent upon its relative amount. I am unable to perceive any sound principle in this."

Delivering the judgment of the Board, Mr. Ameer Ali said:—

"It is to be observed that the will in this case does not infringe the rules which lay down the limitations on the testamentary powers of a Hindu. The bequest is to persons who were in existence at the time of the testator's death and he does not create any estate unknown to the Hindu Law."

The judgment proceeded to hold that the estate was in the widow for her life, that it could only pass to an adopted son who should survive her or to his male issue if he predeceased her leaving such issue, and that the gift over was good. On this view there was a gift by the will of a prior interest during the widow's life so that the difficulty vanished.

v. Srimati Purña Sashi Debi (17)] the facts, in the view ultimately taken by the Board, raised the present question, but their Lordships have accepted the suggestion of the appellants' Counsel that as it was not fully argued they should not regard that case as precluding the appellants' contention upon this appeal.

Reviewing the authorities and considering them on principle their Lordships are of opinion that the rule which the Board in Soorjeemoney's case (4) thought necessary to the existence of effective testamentary power and which was explained in the Tagore case (1) with reference to the Hindu Law of gift is not restricted by further conditions intended to meet or to placate a theory which regards immediacy of effect as a necessary feature of every disposition of property. In truth, inheritance is not donation, and a bequest is not a donation de praesenti between living people. It is to be recognised that the Hindu Law has been greatly influenced by the notion of "relinquishment in favour of a sentient being" as the basis of a gift and of inheritance, but this principle has not, as their Lordships read the previous decisions, been allowed to arrest the development of the Hindu Law of wills. The doctrine that there must be acceptance at the time of relinquishment has different values according as it is applied to gifts inter vivos or is extended by analogy to bequests or inheritance, though by a theory of some refinement heir and donee were once thought to be equally governed by the same principle. The theory, as has been shown from the judgment of Peacock, C. J. in the Tagore case (1) is sometimes put by saying that the estate cannot remain in abeyance.

"Thus it appears that property in the heir must arise immediately upon the death of the ancestor in the same manner as the property of the donee arises immediately upon relinquishment by the donor."

[Ganendra Mohan Tagore v. Upendra Mohan Tagore (1)]. And Mr. Mayne says of the author of the Mitakshara :

"Apparently, in the view of Vijnanesvara, acceptance was necessary to complete a gift because, according to a Hindu lawyer, property can never be in abeyance. It cannot pass out of one until it is received by another."

[Hindu Law and Usage, 6th ed., 1900, para. 376, p. 484]. But it must needs be admitted that the rigour of this theory, even if it be not destructive of all future gifts is inconsistent with any recognition of contingent or executory bequests. It has effect (save in so far as the Legislature has abrogated it: Hindu Wills Act, 1870, Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916), to limit the class of persons who are capable of taking under a will, restricting it to persons who either in fact or in contemplation of law are in existence at the death of the testator. But in their Lordships' judgment it does not remain as a further obstruction to the taking by such persons of a beneficial interest known to and permitted by the law. Indeed, if an estate in remainder can be limited to take effect on the natural determination of a life estate and may be so limited upon a condition which may never be fulfilled; if a gift over on condition may be good though in defeasance of an absolute estate granted by the will, there is no principle of Hindu Law to be saved by refusing to recognise a limitation to take effect upon condition in the future because it lacks "support" from a particular estate.

It cannot be disputed that if a conditional limitation is invalid, the interest, unless otherwise disposed of by the will, must go to the heir. But if limited interests are to be recognised, their Lordships see no reason to hold that because a prior interest goes to the heir as such a conditional limitation or any other limitation is bad at Hindu Law.

The principle of Hindu Law which prevents an estate being in abeyance is an important doctrine of the law of inheritance and it has important consequences as regards adoption. The rule is that the right of succession vests immediately on the death of the owner. Apart from the case of a child en ventre sa mere or of an adopted child, the estate once vested in an heir will not be divested by the subsequent birth of a person who would have been a preferable heir had he been alive at the time of the death of the last owner [Kalidas Das v. Krishna Chandra Das (18), Kally Prosonno Ghose v. Gocool Chunder Mitter (19), Nilcomul Lahiri v. Jotendro Mohan Lahiri (20)].

In like manner, though the doctrine is not really the same, delivery in some sense is necessary at Hindu Law to distinguish the completed gift from the mere promise.

(19) 2 C 295.

(20) 7 O 178; 8 O L R 401.

But neither of these doctrines nor yet the principle that a man cannot devise an interest of a nature and quality unknown to the Hindu Law (e. g. descendible in a manner unknown to that law) conflict with the principle that where there is a will the heir can as such take only that part of the testator's property which is not disposed of by the will. "He will take by descent and by his right of inheritance whatever is not validly disposed of by the will and given to some other person" [Sir Barnes Peacock in the Tagore case (1). Their Lordships are in full agreement with Fletcher, J. and Jenkins, O. J. [Bhupendra Krishna Ghose v. Amarendra Nath Dey (14) supra], in rejecting the contention that a testator's directions to regulate the devolution of his property though within the limits laid down by the law will fail if the heir takes any interest immediately upon the death of the testator. This contention is not warranted by anything in the Board's judgment in the Tagore case (1), and, as Jenkins, O. J. noticed, is founded on a fallacy; for it assumes that the complete interest in the property has devolved on the heir, which is the very point in dispute. Full weight must also be given on this part of the argument to the consideration that not only are testators allowed to dispose of limited interests—as Sir Robert Collier said "limited interest are common enough" [Srimati Kristoromoney Dossee v. Maharajah Norendro Krishna Bahadoor (11) at 31*])—but that there is no distinction in Hindu Law for the present purpose between movable and immovable property. On this point also the reasoning of Jenkins, O. J. appears to their Lordships to have much force. Its cogency is independent of any inference which might be drawn from assumptions made by the Indian Legislature in the Hindu Wills Act, 1870—an enactment passed after the Tagore case (1), had been decided in the High Court but before it had been dealt with by the Judicial Committee.

The careful arguments of learned Counsel on both sides in the present case have made clear different implications of the principle, so often appealed to, that an estate cannot remain in abeyance.

The result, however, is that the objections taken on behalf of the appellants to the bequest to the Roopchand Dhur Trust fail and their Lordships must humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants will pay the costs of respondent No. 1.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 122, 132—Complaint by Railway authorities, if necessary, for conviction under s. 122.

An accused who is found guilty of an offence under s. 122, Railways Act cannot be acquitted on the ground that the prosecution was not on the complaint of the Railway authorities as required under s. 132 of the Act. 96 Ind. Cas. 983 (1), relied on.

Gr A. against the acquittal of aforesaid respondent by Stationary Sub-Magistrate Gudivada, in C. C. Nos. 184 and 185 of 1937.

Facts.—The accused were charged by the Railway Police for crossing the Railway line in Gudivada Railway Station while proceeding from the first platform to the second platform in spite of warning from the Railway Police Constable—an offence under s. 122, Railways Act. The accused while admitting having crossed the line under certain circumstances objected to the jurisdiction of the Police to file a chargesheet without a written complaint from the station authorities as required by s. 132, Railways Act (offences cognizable by the Railway Police are enumerated in s. 131, Railways Act and s. 122 is not one among them). The Sub-Magistrate while finding the accused guilty of the offence under s. 122, Railways Act, acquitted the accused on the ground that the prosecution was not on the complaint of the Railway authorities as required under s. 132 of the said Act. Against this order of acquittal the Public Prosecutor has appealed.

Public Prosecutor in person.

Mr. A. Lakshmayya, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The view of the Stationary Magistrate that there was no proper complaint in this case is opposed to the decision in Public Prosecutor v. Ratnavelu Chetty (1) and on the evidence the respondent would unquestionably be guilty under s. 122, cl. (1), Railways Act. The order of acquittal is therefore set aside and the respondent is convicted under s. 122, cl. (1), Railways Act. The offence is technical and the respondent is sentenced to pay a fine of one rupee with simple imprisonment for one day in default.

JAIRAM—RESPONDENT

Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925), ss. 388 (1) (2), Proviso, 384 (1)—Inferior Court invested with powers under sub-s. (1), if becomes District Court—Court of Subordinate Judge at Bilaspur invested with powers under s. 388 (1), also Additional District Court attached to District Court at Raipur—Succession certificate granted by him—Appeal held lay to the District Court and not to High Court.

The inferior Court invested with the powers under s. 388 (1), Succession Act does not become a District Court but merely exercises certain functions of the District Judge under Part X of the Succession Act. The Court remains the Court as it formerly was. 171 Ind. Cas. 371 (1), distinguished.

A Judge who granted a succession certificate was an Additional District Judge sitting at Bilaspur attached to the District Court at Raipur, as well as a Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur. He signed as Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur. The Court of the Subordinate Judge First Class at Bilaspur was invested with the powers referred to in s. 388 (1) of the Succession Act by the Local Govt. by a Notification and thus the jurisdiction of the Raipur District Court in the Bilaspur area had been taken away by the Notification and conferred upon the Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur.

Held, that the Judge could only have exercised the powers under Succession Act, in his capacity as Subordinate Judge First Class and not as an Additional District Judge. The appeal therefore lay to the District Court and not to the High Court.

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class Bilaspur, dated January 23, 1937.

Rai Bahadur D. N. Chaudhury, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Respondent.

Order.—A preliminary objection is raised to the effect that the appeal in this case does not lie to the High Court.

The proceedings out of which the appeal arises are under the Indian Succession Act and are for the grant of a succession certificate. The petition was allowed and the non-applicant has appealed here.

The difficulty arises because the learned Judge who granted the petition, Mr. C. S. Dube, is an Additional District Judge sitting at Bilaspur attached to the District Court at Raipur, as well as a Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur. The question is whether he granted the certificate in these proceedings in his capacity as Additional Judge to the District Court at Raipur or as a Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur. He has signed as Subordinate Judge of the First Class. But I agree that that is not conclusive though of course it is an element to be taken into consideration.

Under s. 384 (1) of the Indian Succession Act appeals from an order of a District Judge granting a certificate under Part X of the Act lie to the High Court, but under s. 388 (1) the Local Govt. is given power to invest, by notification, any Court inferior in grade to a District Judge, with power to exercise the functions of a District Judge under Part X. Sub-s. (2) of s. 388 then states:

"any inferior Court so invested shall, within the local limits of its jurisdiction have concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge in the exercise of all the powers conferred by this Part upon the District Judge and the provisions of this Part relating to the District Judge shall apply to such an inferior Court as if it were a District Judge."

Then follows this important proviso which governs the matter now before me

"provided that an appeal from any such order of an inferior Court as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) of s. 384 shall lie to the District Judge, and not to the High Court."

The Court of the Subordinate Judge First Class at Bilaspur has been invested with the powers referred to in s. 388 (1) of the Indian Succession Act by the Local Govt. by a Notification No. 1287-1130-V, published in the Central Provinces Gazette of June 18, 1932. It is clear then that the jurisdiction of the Raipur District Court in the Bilaspur area has been taken away by the Notification and conferred upon the Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur.

In these circumstances no Judge of the Raipur District Court would have jurisdiction to entertain an application under the Indian Succession Act for the grant of a succession certificate in the Bilaspur area.

That jurisdiction is conferred, as I have shown, within the Bilaspur area upon the Subordinate Judge of the First Class at Bilaspur. Therefore when Mr. Dube, exercised powers under the Indian Succession Act relating to the grant of a succession certificate, it is clear he could only have done so in his capacity as Subordinate Judge, First Class and not as an Additional District Judge. As I have said he signed in his capacity as a Subordinate Judge First Class and therefore it is clear that he purported to exercise his functions in that capacity. Therefore the appeal lies to the District Court and not here.

It is argued on behalf of the appellant that s. 388 (2) speaks of an inferior Court, and it is urged that once a Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class is invested with the powers of a District Judge it ceases to be an inferior Court. Apart from the fact that this would render the proviso to s. 388 (2) meaningless it is clear from sub-s. (1) that the inferior Court so invested with the powers does not become a District Court but merely exercises certain functions of the District Judge under Part X of the Indian Succession Act. The Court remains the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class. This distinguishes the present case from my decision in Zumbarlal Chhotelal v. Sitaram (1) upon which the learned Counsel for the appellant relies. There was no question of an inferior Court to the District Court being invested with powers to exercise certain functions which would otherwise have been exercised by the District Court but the case of an appointment of an Additional Judge to the District Court.

I quite agree that if the Notification referred to above had not been issued by the Local Govt. then of course Mr. Dube could only have acted in his capacity as an Additional Judge to the District Court at Raipur and then my ruling would have applied. But as I have shown the Local Govt. is invested with authority to take away the functions which would otherwise be exercised by the District Judge at Raipur under s. 388 (1) of the Indian Succession Act and it having done so, Mr. Dube had no other capacity in which to act in matters relating to the grant of succession certificates except that of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class.

The appeal is therefore returned to the appellant for presentation to the proper Court. I am asked to make it clear that the appeal was being prosecuted here in good faith and that therefore the provisions of s. 14 of the Lim. Act should be applied. That, however, is a matter which is beyond my province at the moment. It is true the dual capacity in which Mr. Dube acts is confusing and may in certain circumstances mislead litigants and even their legal advisers. But that is a matter which must be considered by the Court to which the appeal will now be presented. I have no jurisdiction to deal with it at this stage.

As regards costs I think it fair that each party should bear its own costs so far as this Court is concerned. As I have said, the position is confusing and litigants and even members of the Bar might quite easily be misled. It is not a matter which often arises and therefore not one which would normally be within the knowledge and cognisance of the general public and the Bar.

Order accordingly.

Cas. 670 (3), relied on.

The question that the sale must be held liable to be set aside for want of notice under O. XXI, r. 72, Civil P. C., does not arise when application is under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act.

C. R. Case issued from an order of the Sub-Judge, Pabna, dated March 25, 1938.

Mr. Gunendra Krishna Ghose, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Bhut Nath Chatterjee and Obaidul Haque, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—The present petitioners are decree-holders-auction-purchasers in execution of a rent decree. The sale was originally fixed on June 16, 1930, on which date the judgment-debtors-opposite parties applied for an adjournment waiving service of fresh sale proclamation, and the adjournment was granted. Thereafter several more adjournments were granted on similar conditions. The sale took place on September 17, 1930 and was confirmed on March 23, 1931. On February 1, 1937 the judgment-debtors opposite-parties made an application under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act, for setting aside the sale. The Munsif dismissed the application finding that there was no fraud or material irregularity, and that the application was barred by limitation. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge came to a similar finding but nevertheless he set aside the sale on a single ground, namely, that it was void for want of notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C. Against that order the present rule has been obtained.

It is pointed out on behalf of the petitioners that want of service of notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C., cannot be pleaded in view of the fact that the judgment-debtors put in their appearance and repeatedly asked for adjournment of the sale and obviously with the knowledge of the sale. This contention is supported by the decision in Chandra Nath Bagchi v. Nabadwip Chandra Dutt (1). A similar view has been taken by other High Courts, Bimalanandhan Prasad v. United Refineries (Burma) Ltd., 143 Ind. Cas. 299 (2), which is a decision of the Rangoon High Court. For the opposite parties it is pointed out that one of the judgment-debtors, Sabet Ali, died at the time of the execution of the decree, and one of his sons, Javed Ali, was substituted for him in the application for execution, but another son Ahammed Ali who is opposite party No. 1 in the present rule, was left out. It is contended that the sale must be held to be void for want of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 Civil P. C. in so far as the share of Ahammed Ali opposite party No. 1 is concerned: Manindra Chandra v. Rahattannessa, (3). This view must be accepted. It is further contended for the opposite parties in this Court, that the entire sale must be held liable to be set aside for want of notice under O. XXI, r. 72, Civil P. C. But the application was under s. 174, Ben. Ten. Act, and so this contention does not arise for decision. In the result I maintain the order of the lower Appellate Court declaring the sale to be a nullity in so far as the share of Ahammed Ali, opposite party No. 1, is concerned. As regards the other shares, I set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct that the application for having the sale set aside be dismissed in so far as those shares are concerned. The Rule is made absolute to this extent. No order as to costs.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 206—Accused judgment-debtor immediately after giving undertaking to Court not to transfer certain property, transferring it—Case falls under s. 206.

The word "fraudulently" in the I. P. O., ordinarily connotes firstly, an element of deceit or secrecy and secondly, an intention to cause injury. Where the accused judgment-debtor immediately after giving an undertaking to the Court not to transfer certain property, transfers the same in favour of his son by a sale deed with the knowledge that his son would be in a position to claim the property as his own, the intention to cause injury clearly exists in such a case and the case falls under s. 206, I. P. O., it does not matter whether or not the creditor might by taking troublesome proceedings in the Civil Court to circumvent the transfer.

Or. A. against the acquittal of the aforesaid respondent by Third Presidency Magistrate, Egmore, Madras, in C. O. No. 168 of 1938.

Mr. K. V. Ramaseshan, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Sanjiva Kamath, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an acquittal on a charge under s. 206, I. P. O. The accused was defendant No. 1 in a small cause suit, his son being defendant No. 2. A decree was passed for Rs. 231 in favour of the plaintiff—P. W. No. 4 here—against the accused the suit being dismissed as against the son. In execution of the decree a cow belonging to the accused was attached. A claim petition was filed by the wife of the accused. The claim was allowed on May 14, 1936, on the undertaking given by the accused that he would not for three months thereafter alienate a piece of land owned by him. On May 25, 1936, the accused executed a registered sale-deed in respect of the property covered by this undertaking in favour of his son the exonerated defendant. After various proceedings this Court filed a complaint under s. 476 (1), Criminal P. O., charging the accused with an offence under s. 206, I. P. O. The defence to the criminal complaint was, firstly, a denial of the undertaking, secondly, a plea that the motive was to satisfy the pressure of his son for the discharge of debts, and thirdly, various legal contentions with which I shall deal separately.

There can be no doubt as to the fact of the undertaking which is embodied in Court records exhibited. It seems to me most unlikely that the motive of the accused was to satisfy the pressure of his son based on alleged old debts which according to the recitals in the sale-deed are made up of a series of small hand loans mostly made months prior to the date of the sale. The undertaking having been given only a few days before the sale it is incredible that the fact of the undertaking would not have been present prominently in the mind of the accused when he carried out the sale. The son denies that he knew about this undertaking. At any rate he was a party to the litigation and as such he must have known about the decree. On these facts, I find it impossible to agree with the conclusion of the Magistrate that the transfer was not fraudulent. The Magistrate supports his conclusion not by any clear finding of fact that the transfer has not been proved to be fraudulent but by certain legal contentions.

It is no doubt correct that the word "fraudulently" in the I. P. O. ordinarily connotes firstly, an element of deceit or secrecy and secondly, an intention to cause injury. In my opinion there can be no doubt about the latter element in this case. The accused having so recently given this undertaking must have known that the transfer in breach of the undertaking would have the effect of impeding the execution of the decree and he must have intended that it would have that effect. It is to my mind quite immaterial whether it would be possible for the decree-holder by taking other proceedings to defeat that attempt. If there was an intention to prevent this property being taken in execution of the decree and if that intention had as its motive the object of injuring the creditor, it does not matter whether the object was likely to be achieved or not. There remains the question whether there was the ingredient of deceit or secrecy in the act of the accused. It is argued that there could have been no secrecy because there was prompt registration. I do not agree with this contention as a statement of law. Although registration in theory implies publicity, in fact, it can be and frequently is carried out in such a way that the person adversely affected knows nothing about it. The proper way to regard this case is to look at the fact of the transfer along with the immediately preceding fact of the undertaking given to the Court and taking these two facts together with the other known circumstances to deduce therefrom the intention of the transferor. He knew that his creditor had been lulled into a sense of security by the undertaking given in Court. With this knowledge he almost immediately carried out the transfer in favour of his own son, one who was not likely to publish the fact of the transfer in such a way that it would go to the ears of the creditor. To my mind it is patent that the object of the transferor must have been to deceive his creditor and to injure him by preventing the attachment of this property in execution. His object was to deceive because firstly, he promised the creditor in open Court that he would not alienate and then almost immediately afterwards, he transferred to a member of his own family. His object was to injure and to prevent execution against this property because he knew that his son, having been exonerated in the suit, would be in a position to claim the property as his own. To my mind it does not matter whether or not the creditor might by taking troublesome proceedings in the Civil Court circumvent this plot.

I am therefore of opinion that the case falls clearly under s. 206, I.P.C., and that the acquittal of the accused is wrong. I convict him of the offence with which he is charged and sentence him to a fine of Rs. 25 or in default to two weeks' rigorous imprisonment.

GANESH DASS—COMPLAINANT

—RESPONDENT

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 415 — Cheating — Deception — When amounts to cheating — Giving post-dated cheque by person having no funds in Bank — Dispute held of civil nature.

Deception is only one element of the offence of cheating and not the only element. There can be no cheating unless by reason of the deception the person deceived is induced to part with any property or to do or omit to do anything that he would not do or omit to do but for the deception.

Hence giving a post-dated cheque by a person who has no funds to his credit in the Bank does not amount to an offence of cheating when there is no evidence to show that the person to whom the cheque was given parted with any property or that he did or omitted to do anything which he would not have done or omitted to do if he had known that the cheque would be dishonoured. The dispute in such a case is of a civil nature. 173 Ind. Cas. 14 (1), relied on.

Cr. R. reported by the Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated June 5, 1939.

Facts.—The complainant Ganesh Dass bought a motor lorry from the accused, Mr. R. S. Ratra which was admittedly returned. It appears that the complainant had paid some money in advance to the accused and disputes arose as to the complainant's right to take back the amount so paid in advance after the lorry had been returned. According to the complainant he had paid Rs. 560 on different dates and the accused promised to return this whole amount in instalments and issued a cheque for Rs. 100 on the Punjab National Bank in payment of the first instalment. As the cheque was dishonoured by the Bank the complainant lodged a complaint of cheating against the accused, who brought a cross-complaint of theft against the complainant for removing certain parts of the lorry in question. Both the complaints were lodged on the same day and the Magistrate has framed a charge of cheating under s. 420, I. P. C., against Mr. Ratra and has charged Ganesh Dass with committing criminal breach of trust under s. 406, I. P. C. The position thus is that on the complaint of a person, who is himself charged with committing criminal breach of trust for removal of lorry parts on the complaint of the accused, a charge of cheating has been framed against the latter for issuing a false cheque in payment of money already received by him. In the present petition we are concerned with the complaint of cheating only, and for the sake of argument I will assume that all the allegations made by Ganesh Dass are correct, although Mr. Ratra by no means admits them to be so.

The complaint is divided into five paragraphs. Paragraph 1 states that a sum of Rs. 560 was due from the accused to the complainant on account of money paid in advance for purchase of the motor lorry. Paragraph 2 recites that out of Rs. 560 the accused gave a cheque to the complainant for Rs. 100 on November 10, 1938, on the Punjab National Bank. In para. 3 it is stated that the cheque was dishonoured by the Bank as the complainant had no funds to his credit. Paragraph 4 states that the accused cheated the complainant by knowingly issuing a false cheque in payment of his debt. Paragraph 5 refers to a notice dated November 9, 1938 received by the complainant from the accused in which the accused is alleged to have falsely stated that the cheque was post-dated. While giving evidence in Court, the complainant gave details of the different amounts which he paid to the accused, and he referred to certain receipts which had been given to him by the accused. It would appear from the complainant's evidence that he entered into two separate transactions regarding two different lorries. The first transaction took place on June 25, 1938, but it fell through and was replaced by the second transaction which is dated August 26, 1938 and relates to a different lorry. According to the terms of the agreement of sale, the seller was to remain owner of the lorry so long as the price was not paid in full. There is a difference between the parties as to whether the complainant himself returned the lorry or the accused seized the lorry and brought it back by force.

Report.—The accused's case seems to be that he gave the cheque for Rs. 100 to the accused on the distinct promise that he would replace the missing parts of the lorry and that as he failed to do this he stopped payment of the cheque. The full nature of the dispute between the parties and the question whether the accused removed any parts of the lorry or not, are the subject-matter of the accused's complaint, and it is unnecessary for the purpose of this petition to go into that dispute. The accused's grievance is that on the allegations contained in the complaint and in the evidence of the complainant no case of cheating is disclosed against him and the Magistrate was not justified in framing a charge against him. He therefore applies that I should move the High Court to quash the charge in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction and to discharge him.

The question is whether the facts alleged by the complainant disclose a prima facie case of cheating or not. In considering this question I feel that I should refrain from saying anything regarding the merits of the dispute between the parties as this might prejudice either of them in the cross-case or in the present case, if it is allowed to proceed or any civil case that might be brought later. I would therefore confine myself as far as possible to admitted facts. It is common ground that the cheque for Rs. 100 was issued by the accused after the lorry had been returned by the complainant and according to the complainant the payment was made in part refund of the price which he had paid in advance. The cheque is dated November 10, 1938 and it must have been post-dated because reference is made to it in the notice dated November 9, 1938 which the complainant received from the accused. The accused's statement is that he wrote the cheque on November 2; and the notice mentions that as the removed parts had not been replaced as promised, the payment of the cheque had been stopped. On the complainant's own showing the cheque was given to him in part payment of money already advanced by him and not in consideration of anything done or which he refrained from doing at the time when the cheque was issued. It was pointed out in Chidambaram Chettiar v. Shanmugham Pillai (1), that:

"In the offence of cheating there are two elements—deception and dishonest inducement to do or omit to do something. Mere dishonesty is not a criminal offence. To establish an offence of cheating, the complainant would have to show not only that he was induced to do or omit to do a certain act but that this induced commission or omission on his part caused or was likely to cause him some harm or damage in body, mind, reputation or property, which are presumed to be the four cardinal assets of humanity. It was held therefore that a post-dated cheque in payment of goods already received is a mere promise to pay on a future date and a broken promise is not a criminal offence, though it may amount in certain business relations to discreditable behaviour".

In framing the charge against the accused, the Magistrate seems to have assumed that the giving of a cheque in lieu of money due with the knowledge that the drawer had no funds in Bank amounts to an offence of cheating. But this is not a correct view of the law. The essence of the offence consists in fraudulently or dishonestly inducing the person so deceived to deliver any property to any person, or to consent that any person shall retain any property, or intentionally inducing the person so deceived to do or omit to do anything that he would not do or omit if he were not so deceived. I would assume for the sake of argument that as the accused admits that he had no funds to his credit in the Bank he intended to deceive the complainant by falsely inducing in him the belief that the cheque would be honoured but deception is only one element of the offence of cheating and not the only element. There can be no cheating unless by reason of the deception the person deceived is induced to part with any property or to do or omit to do anything that he would not do or omit to do but for the deception. In the present case there is not a word in the written complaint or in his evidence in Court to show that the complainant parted with any property or that he did or omitted to do anything which he would not have done or omitted to do if he had known that the cheque would be dishonoured.

The Magistrate does not seem to have applied his mind at all to the legal aspect of the case. He probably thought it advisable to decide the two cases together and it seems to me that he framed a charge against the accused for no other reason than this that he had framed a charge against the complainant in the cross-case. In my opinion, on the facts disclosed by the complainant the wrong done to him is a purely civil wrong and no case of cheating is made out. The Public Prosecutor agrees in this view and he does not support the charge. I therefore submit the record to the High Court with the recommendation that the charge against the accused be quashed and that he should be discharged. The record of the cross-case is also forwarded as a connected file.

Mr. Qabul Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mohammad Monir, Assistant Advocate-General, for the Respondent.

Order.—On the facts as narrated in the order of reference made by the learned Sessions Judge, Amritsar, it appears to me that the dispute is more or less of a civil nature and therefore can best be decided by a Civil Court. I accordingly accept the recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge and direct that the petitioner be discharged. The learned Assistant to the Advocate-General does not object to the above order.

BANDE ALI SHEIKH AND OTHERS—ACCUSED
Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 379—Land attached under s. 88, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Person removing crop from it is guilty under s. 379.

Where land is attached under s. 88, Criminal P. C., and actual possession is taken by posting a constable on the spot, a person removing standing crop from such land is guilty under s. 379, I. P. C. Queen-Empress v. Abayya (1), distinguished.

Messrs. Santosh, K. Basu and Jyotish Ch. Pal, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury, for the Crown.

Order.—Eleven persons were convicted under ss. 379 and 188, I. P. C., and each of them sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 40, in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for seven weeks. These persons then petitioned to the Sessions Judge against conviction. The learned Judge rejected the petition except with regard to four of the petitioners, namely Bande Ali Sheikh, Derajtulla Sheikh, Asimuddin Sheikh and Ajer Sheikh. As regards them the learned Judge has made a reference recommending that they should be acquitted of the charges in respect of which they have been convicted on the ground that they were not parties to the proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. C., out of which the prosecutions arose. For the reasons stated by the learned Judge I accept the reference and direct that these persons be acquitted of the charges under ss. 379 and 188, I. P. C. The fines, if paid, should be refunded.

As regards the remaining seven petitioners the question is whether the convictions and sentences passed thereunder should be maintained. It appears that on account of a dispute regarding paddy growing on a plot of land the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kustia instituted proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. C., and attached the land in dispute describing it by its touzi number and mentioning "2 annas 6 pies portion." This however causes no difficulty because it is admitted that this is a separate portion and there is no dispute as to the identity of the land attached. Subsequently, it is said, the accused party entered upon the land and reaped and took away the standing crops therefrom and thereby disobeyed the order of attachment. In these circumstances they have been convicted as mentioned above. It is contended first that the proceedings under s. 145, Criminal P. C., were not validly instituted because the land is in the joint possession of the parties. As a matter of fact it was not found that the land was in the joint possession of the parties but the question is immaterial, having regard to the stage at which the order of attachment was issued. There was a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning the land and therefore the first condition of instituting a proceeding as under sub-s. (1) of s. 145, Criminal P. C., was fulfilled. Thereafter under sub-s. (4) the Magistrate was to enquire as to possession and it is under the second proviso to that sub-section—the Magistrate having considered that it was a case of emergency—that he was empowered to attach the subject-matter of dispute pending his decision under that section. This is what was done in this case and therefore the objection that is now raised is of no avail.

The next contention is that the petitioners could not properly be convicted under s. 379, I. P. C., though they might be convicted under s. 424, I. P. C. This is on the authority of the case reported in Queen-Empress v. Abbaya (1). That however, was a case of attachment by the Civil Court and it was pointed out that the possession remained with the owner, only he was forbidden to alienate or charge the crops. It was also pointed out that where that was not the case theft could be committed by the owner of crops under attachment removing them. In the present case as pointed out by the learned Judge the attachment was under s. 88, Criminal P. C., and actual possession was taken which was evidenced by the fact that there was a constable posted at the spot and while he was there the crops were taken away. The argument that standing crops were not attached but only the land was attached is of no avail as the dispute was about the standing crops and land must be taken here to include the crops. It seems to me therefore that the conviction of the seven petitioners is correct. The Rule is therefore discharged.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 405—Conviction of partner for breach of trust.

Section 405, I. P. C., applies to partners and a partner can be convicted of criminal breach of trust. 136 Ind. Cas. 493 (2), relied on, 145 Ind. Cas. 416 (1), not followed.

Facts.—The petitioner and respondent were partners and the petitioner was the capitalist partner and the accused was the managing partner who managed the business, kept the cash book, maintained accounts and was in charge of the cash. Suspicions having arisen of the respondent having misappropriated partnership funds the accounts were examined and the complaint was filed in respect of several items. The trial Court framed a charge against the respondent in respect of three items. The defence of the respondent was that ss. 403 to 409, I. P. C. are not intended to apply to partners and the decision in Bhupendra Nath v. Girdhari Lal (1), was cited in support of it. As against it, the decision in Jagannath v. Emperor (2), was cited. The trial Court relied on Bhupendra Nath v. Girdhari Lal (1) and acquitted the accused under s. 258 (1), Criminal P. C.

Mr. V. Subramaniam, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Respondent.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Order.—The view of the Joint Magistrate that a partner cannot be convicted of criminal breach of trust under any circumstances is erroneous and the order of acquittal cannot be sustained. It is, therefore, set aside and there will be a re-trial in accordance with law by such other Magistrate as the District Magistrate may direct.

If it is proved, that individual notice was given under s. 81, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act the presumption as to official or legal acts under s. 114, Evi. Cr. R. App. to revise the judgment of the Resident Magistrate, Larkana, dated June 5, 1939

Mr. Kishinchand J. Bijlani, for the Applicant.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, J. C.—This an application in revision against the order of the Resident Magistrate, Larkana, in which he fined the applicant Rs. 40 for an offence under s. 186, I. P. C., in that he obstructed a public servant, that is to say a servant of the Larkana Municipality, in the discharge of his public functions as such, that is, in the collection of drainage tax. This revision application has been argued before us on two points; firstly, it was said that it was not proved that the tax was lawfully imposed by the Municipality, in other words that in this particular case there was no public notice of the assessment list within the meaning of s. 80, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act of 1925, but as the learned Magistrate clearly points out, even actual individual notices to the applicant were issued under s. 81 of the Act, which are Exs. G and H on the record and it appears to us that if as it is clearly proved, individual notice was given under s. 81 the presumption as to official or legal acts which may be raised under s. 114, Evi. Act, should be here raised and particularly as there was oral evidence on behalf of the Municipality to the effect that the public notice of the assessment list under s. 80 had been given. Reference may be made to the case in Municipality of Sholapur v. Sholapur Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd. (1), which applied the presumption under s. 114, Evi. Act to the proceedings of the Municipality. It is true that that judgment relates to a civil case, but it is news to us, as the learned Advocate says, that s. 114, Evi. Act, applies only to civil and not to criminal cases. In fact the first illustration to s. 114, Evi. Act, applies to a criminal case. We think therefore that the first objection has failed and it must be held proved that public notice was properly given of the assessment list, and that all formalities required for the proper assessment of the tax were followed by the Municipality.

The second objection taken was that the Municipal servant who collected the tax and who was obstructed in the discharge of his public functions was not an officer of the Municipality within the meaning of s. 105 (2), Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act; but this is an objection taken for the first time in revision, although, of course, the prosecution have to prove their case when they ask that a person should be convicted for the obstruction of a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. They must show that a public servant was discharging public duties imposed upon him by law. This is the view taken by this Court in Emperor v. Bhopo (2), which followed the Allahabad case in Queen-Empress v. Dalip (3). But there is nothing whatever upon the record to show that this complainant who was a servant of the Larkana Municipality entrusted with the duty of collecting this drainage tax was not an officer of the Municipality within the meaning of s. 105 (2). It was not suggested to him in his cross-examination that he was not, and the case proceeded finally to judgment upon the assumption that he was. Again, we think, there is every justification in this case for the application of s. 114, Evi. Act, and for presuming, in this case, that the official act was regularly performed and Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 211—Petition to Assistant Superintendent of Police charging certain persons with commission of cognizable offence—Inquiry by Sub-Inspector in charge of thana—Case found maliciously false—Offence under s. 211, if committed—Magistrate taking cognizance of offence under s. 211—Subsequent protest petition by accused rejected—Procedure, if proper.

Where upon a petition by the accused to the Assistant Superintendent of Police charging certain persons of commission of a cognizable offence, he directs an enquiry and having received a report from the Sub-Inspector in charge of the thana that the case was maliciously false makes a complaint against the accused for prosecuting him under s. 211, I. P. C., the complaint is proper and an offence is committed even though the offence complained of was enquired into by the Sub-Inspector. A cognizable offence can be enquired into either by the Police Officer in charge of the Police Station or by any officer to whom he was subordinate and within whose jurisdiction the offence was said to have been committed. The Assistant Superintendent of Police having taken action on the petition and directed an enquiry, was in a position to get the offender punished.

Where after the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence upon such complaint the accused files a protest petition stating that he is ready to prove the case set up by him with a prayer that the matter may be enquired into by any Magistrate before any order is passed on the Police report and the petition is rejected by the Magistrate on the ground that as he had already taken cognizance of the offence it was too late to modify that order, the procedure followed by the Magistrate is proper one. 152 Ind. Cas. 847 (2) (1), relied on.

Or. R. App. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Patna, dated November 6, 1939.

Syed Ali Khan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Mehdi Imam for the Assistant Government-Advocate and Mr. K. K. Banarji, for the Opposite Party.

Fazl Ali, J.—This is an application under ss. 435 and 439 of the Criminal P. C. by one Saguni Missir, who has been convicted under ss. 211 of the I. P. C. and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

It appears that for some time past a dispute has been going between the petitioner and one Jamuna Jha with regard to a temple situated in Patna City in front of the petitioner's house. On May 17, 1939, one Mathura, who is said to be a friend of Jamuna Jha, brought a case under s. 324 against Chuni Kahar and other persons who, according to the prosecution, belonged to the party of the petitioner. Chuni Kahar and others were at first released on bail, but subsequently their bail bonds were cancelled on June 27, 1939. On that very day the petitioner lodged a saneha before the Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police at Khajekalan Police Station in which it is recorded that four persons, namely, Jagmohan, Mathura, Parmeshwar and Khapta Kahar, had abused him in front of his house. On June 28, the petitioner went with his mukhtear and filed a petition before the Assistant Superintendent of Police to the effect that eight persons including the four who had been mentioned in the saneha had come on the evening of June 27, to the temple which was the subject of dispute between him and Jamuna and others, had the lock of its entrance door broken and removed one mukat (crown) from the idol installed in the temple and some other articles of worship, and also threatened to break his limbs if he intervened. The prayer which was made in the petition was that the Assistant Superintendent of Police "may be pleased to depute some unconcerned responsible officer to institute a case and make an enquiry at the spot, as the petitioner is ready to prove his case."

The Assistant Superintendent of Police thereupon directed an enquiry and ultimately the Sub-Inspector in charge of the thana reported that the case was maliciously false. Upon this the Assistant Superintendent of Police made a complaint to the Sub-Divisional Officer for prosecuting the petitioner under s. 211 of the I. P. C. on June 12. On that very day the Sub-Divisional Officer recorded the following order:

"A complaint under s. 211 of the I. P. C. received. Cognizance taken. Issue warrant of arrest bailable for Rs. 500 against the accused for 27th."

It appears that on the same day the petitioner filed a protest petition before the Sub-Divisional Officer in which, after briefly narrating the incidents regarding which he had filed a petition before the Assistant Superintendent of Police and stating that he was ready to prove the case, he prayed that

"the report of the Police be put up and the matter may be enquired into by any Magistrate before any order is passed on the report".

The Magistrate directed this complaint to be put up with connected papers, on the next day, and on that day he rejected the petition stating that he had already passed final orders upon the complainant of the Assistant Superintendent of Police before the petition was filed, and it was too late now to modify that order. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer further remarked that the petitioner would have a chance of proving his case in the proceeding already instituted. After that the Sub-Divisional Officer proceeded to try the petitioner and convicted him under s. 211 of the I. P. O. The petitioner appealed to the Sessions Judge, but his appeal was dismissed.

Both the Courts below have concurrently found that the allegations made by the petitioner in his petition to the Assistant Superintendent of Police were maliciously false and they have given good reasons in support of their finding. The only question which therefore arises upon this application is whether the conviction of the petitioner is vitiated by any error of law.

The first point of law raised by the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioner is that as the Assistant Superintendent of Police himself neither could nor did enquire into the case, no offence under s. 211 of the I. P. O. was committed merely by reason of the fact that the petition, dated June 28, was filed before him. It is not suggested that the petition made on that day did not disclose a cognizable offence, but it is contended that only the Sub-Inspector in charge of the Police Station could enquire into that offence and therefore though an offence under s. 211 might have been committed if an information had been lodged before the Sub-Inspector, no such offence has been committed, because the petitioner approached the Assistant Superintendent of Police. In my opinion the contention is not sound. The offence being a cognizable one, it could be enquired into either by the Police Officer in charge of the Police Station or by any officer to whom he was subordinate and within whose jurisdiction the offence was said to have been committed. The Assistant Superintendent of Police did take action on this petition and directed an enquiry, and it cannot be said that he was not in a position to get the offender punished. It also appears on the evidence in the case that a regular Police case was instituted upon the petitioner's application to the Assistant Superintendent of Police and the persons named as accused in that petition were arrested and subsequently released on bail. Thus, the first contention raised on behalf of the petitioner must fail.

The second contention is that the petitioner having filed a protest petition, which amounted to be complaint before the Magistrate, the latter had no jurisdiction to order his prosecution without disposing of his complaint. Both the Courts below have, however, pointed out that the protest petition was filed after the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the case under s. 211 of the I. P. O. and therefore the procedure of the Magistrate was not open to any objection. This view is fully supported by the decision of this Court in Daroga Mahto v. The King-Emperor (1). In my opinion there is no ground for interfering with the conviction of the petitioner, and in view of the fact that the petitioner has in this false case implicated not only Jamuna with whom he had a dispute but also most of the persons who had figured as prosecution witnesses in the criminal case brought by Mathura against Chuni Kahar and others, I consider that the sentence which has been passed on him is by no means severe.

I would, therefore, dismiss this application.

Meredith, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Statements by witnesses to investigating officer at time of identification of accused—Admissibility—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 118—Infant witness—His competency, if must be tested before his examination.

The statements made by prosecution witnesses, to the investigating officer at the time when they picked out the accused as the person who had committed the offence are hit by the prohibition contained in s. 162, Criminal P. O., and are inadmissible. 158 Ind. Cas. 843 (1), 84 Ind. Cas. 451 (2) and 92 Ind. Cas. 439 (3), relied on.

Section 118, Evi. Act, vests in the Court the discretion to decide whether an infant is or is not disqualified to be a witness by reason of understanding or lack of understanding. This discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner. The proposition that the competency of the witness should be tested before his examination is commenced is not quite justified by the provisions of s. 118, Evi. Act. 20 Ind. Cas. 741 (b), relied on. Sheikh Fakir v. Emperor (4), not followed.

Mr. Anil Chandra Roy Chaudhury, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Lalit Mohan Sanyal, for the Crown.

Khundkar, J.—This is a rule calling upon the District Magistrate of the 24-Parganas to show cause why the conviction of and sentence passed upon the petitioner should not be set aside. The petitioner was convicted under s. 379, I. P. O., for having stolen a necklace from a small girl, who is prosecution witness No. 1. An appeal by the petitioner against his conviction was dismissed by a First Class Magistrate. The rule is confined to three grounds which are as follows: (1) that the trial has been vitiated by the admission of inadmissible evidence, namely, the identification, before the investigating officer which forms the main basis of the judgments of both the Courts; (2) for that the trial is vitiated by the admission of testimony on oath or otherwise of little children who themselves admitted that they did not know the difference between truth and falsehood; (3) for that in view of the age and antecedents of the petitioner the sentence is much too severe. The case for the prosecution may be briefly stated:

On November 10, 1938, at about 3 p. m., two children, P. W. No. 1, Amina Dassi, a girl of 5, and her cousin Amia, a boy of 7, were returning home after having purchased some sweets at a shop in the village. As they were passing along the side of a tank, the accused suddenly appeared and snatched away a gold necklace from the neck of P. W. No. 1. The prosecution alleged that both the children recognized the accused at this time and also when he was running away. The theft was witnessed also by P. W. No. 4, who chased the accused but failed to catch him. It is further alleged that another witness, P. W. No. 7, saw P. W. No. 4 in the act of chasing the accused. Shortly after the occurrence P. W. No. 4 and P. W. No. 3 who is the father of P. W. No. 2 and the uncle of P. W. No. 1, came across the petitioner near the Police Station to which they were proceeding for the purpose of lodging an information. They took him to the Police Station and charged him with the offence. His person was searched but the necklace was not found. During the course of the investigation the investigating officer held a test identification parade at which the two children, P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2, picked out the petitioner from a number of other persons. The argument advanced before us in support of this rule is thus presented: the case for the prosecution rests on the evidence of the two children, P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2, and of P. W. No. 4. In accepting the evidence of the children the Courts below have relied strongly upon the result of the test identification parade just referred to. It is contended that the evidence of this test identification is inadmissible, and further that the evidence of the children should have been expunged, because they were not competent to testify as witnesses within the meaning of s. 118, Evi. Act. Mr. Roy Chaudhury, on behalf of the petitioner, has argued that if the evidence of the test identification and the testimony which the children bore, are excluded, the evidence which remains is totally insufficient to support the conviction. It is pointed out that the only remaining evidence consists of the testimony of P. W. No. 4 which, according to the prosecution, was corroborated by the testimony of P. W. No. 7.

Now in regard to the test identification parade held by the investigating officer, it is not disputed that it was conducted during the investigation of the case under Chap. XIV, Criminal P. O. It is contended that the statements made by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 to the investigating officer at the time when they picked out the accused as the person who had stolen the necklace are hit by the prohibition contained in s. 162 of the Code. Reference has been made in this connection to a number of cases. In Krishna Chandra v. Emperor (1) it has been very clearly laid down that the evidence of a test identification held by the Police in course of investigation, that is to say, a statement expressed or implied, made to the Police by way of identifying the accused is inadmissible in law in view of the provisions of s. 162, Criminal P. C. In Harendra Nath v. Emperor (2) it was held that a number of statements made to the investigating officer by witnesses at a time when they were purporting to identify an accused person by pointing him out were wrongly admitted in evidence. In Keramat Mandal v. Emperor (3) it would appear that during the investigation one of the witnesses accompanied the investigating officer to certain places which she pointed out to him. At p. 526* of the report there occurs this observation:

"The statements that were made by the witness to the Police Officer and the fact of pointing out the places to him ought to have been kept back from the jury, as such facts were not brought out in evidence on behalf of the defence as provided by s. 162 of the Code."

Apart from other objections of a general nature to the practice of permitting test identifications to be conducted by Police Officers, we have no doubt that in the facts of the present case the identification of the petitioner by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 before the investigating officer amounted to statements which are rendered inadmissible by the provisions of s. 162 of the Code. The second branch of the contention advanced on behalf of the petitioner relates to the competency of the two children as witnesses. Section 118, Evi. Act is in these terms:

"All persons shall be competent to testify unless the Court considers that they are prevented from understanding the questions put to them or from giving rational answers to those questions by tender years, extreme old age, disease, whether of body or mind, or any other cause of the same kind."

This section relates to capacity to give legal testimony, and vests a discretion in the Court to decide whether a person of tender years possesses or lacks such capacity by reason of that person's power of understanding and of giving rational answers to the questions put. Strangely enough in the present case the record of the deposition of prosecution witness No. 1 is followed by a note made by the learned Magistrate which is in these terms:

"The witness is a minor, her answer was a running 'yes' to every question put to her—even to contradictory questions."

If this observation means anything, it certainly indicates that the witness was unable to discriminate between the meanings of many of the questions which she was called upon to answer. We have just referred to the fact that the section vests in the Court the discretion to decide whether an infant is or is not disqualified to be a witness by reason of understanding or lack of understanding. It cannot be disputed that this discretion must be exercised in a judicial manner. In Sheikh Fakir v. Emperor (4) the broad proposition was laid down that before a child of tender years is asked any questions bearing on the res gestae, the Court should test his capacity to understand and give rational answers, and his capacity to understand the difference between truth and falsehood, and the Judge should form his opinion as to the competency of the witness before his actual examination commenced. The proposition that the competency of the witness should be tested before his examination is commenced is not quite justified by the provisions of s. 118, Evi. Act. In our judgment, the true rule has been stated in Nafar Sheikh v. Emperor (5). At p. 151* of the report there is a quotation from the judgment in Wheeler v. United States (6) which is in these terms:

"The decision of this question (whether the child witness has sufficient intelligence) primarily rests with the trial Judge, who sees the proposed witness, notices his manner, his apparent possession or lack of intelligence, and may resort to any examination which will tend to disclose his capacity and intelligence as well as his understanding of the obligations of an oath. As many of these matters cannot be photographed into the record, the decision of the trial Judge will not be disturbed in review, unless, from that which is preserved, it is clear that it was erroneous."

Immediately after the quotation just repeated there appears in the judgment in Nafar Sheikh v. Emperor (5) the following sentence:

"The mere circumstances that the Sessions Judge did not interrogate the witnesses before their examination began, with a view to test their capacity does not, in the view I take of the true effect of s. 118, Evi. Act, invalidate the trial."

But the judgment goes on to hold that the circumstances of the case made it plainly desirable that such a course should have been pursued. It is clear that the learned trial Magistrate's own impression of the witnesses, intelligence was such as to make it incumbent upon him to question her himself for the purpose of ascertaining her power of understanding and of giving rational answers. He has not done so, and from the note which he has recorded we are left in hesitation and doubt as to whether this child witness had the capacity to depose. In the circumstances stated we are not prepared to say that the evidence of P. W. No. 1 should be admitted and accepted.

There is no observation by the learned Magistrate of a similar nature with regard to the evidence of the other child witness, that is, P. W. No. 2. We have been through the evidence of this witness with great care, and we find that his story virtually is that he recognized the accused from behind when the latter was running away with his back towards the child. It is true that this witness says immediately afterwards that he also recognized the accused when he was snatching away the necklace. We are not prepared to attach much credence to the latter statement because it has the appearance of an afterthought. It should be noted that this witness stated that when the accused was in the act of committing the theft, Hare Krishta, that is, P. W. No. 4, called out "Krista, don't snatch it; don't snatch it." Now this statement is not borne out by the evidence of P. W. No. 4 himself. His testimony is to the effect that he heard the child crying out that the necklace was being snatched away, that he then saw the accused in the act of running away and of thrusting the necklace into the pocket of his garment, and that upon that the witness gave chase. The evidence of P. W. No. 4 is said to be corroborated by the evidence of P. W. No. 7. According to the prosecution the latter saw P. W. No. 4 running after the accused. Upon examining his evidence, however, we find that what he actually stated was "I saw Hare Kristo chasing Kristo (looking like this accused)." It is very clear that P. W. No. 7 cannot be taken to have said that he recognized the accused as the man who was being chased by P. W. No. 4.

Against the credibility of P. W. No. 4, two circumstances have been pointed out. The first is that there are materials on the record, which have not been displaced, showing that this witness and the accused were on terms of enmity. The second is that P. W. No. 4 admitted in his evidence that at the time when he heard the child calling out that Kristo was taking away the necklace, he was on the road behind a bend. Now another witness who was examined on behalf of the prosecution, that is P. W. No. 5, has stated in his testimony that when he heard the child crying out, he also was around that bend in the road and that the place where the child was crying was not visible from where the witness happened at the time to be.

In view of all these circumstances we are not prepared to say that the evidence of P. W. No. 2 coupled with that of P. W. No. 4 provides that margin of safety which is necessary to a conviction for a criminal offence. The rule is accordingly made absolute. The conviction and sentence passed upon the petitioner are set aside and he will be set at liberty forthwith. If he is on bail, he will be discharged from his bail bond at once.

of 1938

Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938), ss. 11, 8, 7—Duty of Court under s. 11—Parties not appealing with respect to amount decreed by trial Court as principal and interest—Power of Appellate Court to reduce amount—Rule of Damdupat under s. 7, if applies to period subsequent to institution of suit—Discretion under s. 8 not exercised by lower Appellate Court—High Court, if should exercise it.

Section 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act enjoins a duty on the Court, in the class of cases to which it refers to restrict the amount of interest awarded to a sum not in excess of the principal advanced. The only conditions necessary to attract the operation of that section to an Appellate Court are that there shall be a suit by a money-lender, that the suit shall be in respect of a loan and that the appeal shall arise out of such a suit. When these conditions are satisfied the duty of an Appellate Court is plain that it must give effect to the section. Hence in an appeal even if the parties concerned have not raised a point with respect to the amount decreed by the first Court as principal and interest it is open to the Appellate Court to reduce that amount.

The rule of Damdupat introduced by s. 7 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act in respect to a claim for interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit does not apply also to the period subsequent to the institution of the suit.

Where the lower Appellate Court has failed to exercise its statutory discretion under s. 8, in the matter, it is open to the High Court to pass an order in respect to interest subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge at Chapra, dated July 28, 1938.

Messrs. S. K. Husnain and Harnarayan Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Rajeshwari Prasad and G. K. Mukharji, for the Respondents.

Agarwala. J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Chapra modifying a decision of the Munsif. The facts were as follows: Defendants 1st party executed a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs on July 21, 1923, to secure redemption of a loan of Rs. 500. The rate of interest prescribed by the bond was 2 per cent. per mensem with six monthly rest. At the date of the institution of the suit, on January 20, 1936, the amount outstanding for principal and interest was Rs. 8,492-2-6. The plaintiff abandoned his claim as to Rs. 4,992-2-6 and sued for a recovery of the remaining Rs. 3,500. Defendants Nos. 4 to 29 were subsequent transferees or mortgagees of the hypothecated property. Defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 15 claimed priority over the plaintiff's mortgage. In 1917, there had been a zarpeshgi bond to defendants Nos. 8 and 9 for Rs. 175 and in 1922 another zarpeshgi in favour of the same defendants for Rs. 200. On April 7, 1924, defendants Nos. 8 and 9 advanced Rs. 768 to redeem a previous mortgage in favour of one Rambharosa and Ramkalar, the brothers of the present plaintiff. On May 27, 1925, there was a mortgage to defendants Nos. 8 and 9 for Rs. 1,200 to pay off all these previous encumbrances. The claim of defendant No. 15 was that on July 4, 1925, he had advanced Rs. 800 on a mortgage to pay off a previous mortgage of April 7, 1923. The first Court disallowed the claim of defendant No. 15 to priority and as to the claim of defendants Nos. 8 and 9 allowed it only to the extent of Rs. 375, that is to say, in respect of the previous zarpeshgis of 1917 and 1922. Against the decision of the first Court an appeal was preferred by defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 15, defendants Nos. 8 and 9 challenging the decision of the trial Court with respect to the sum of Rs. 768 and defendant No. 15 with respect to Rs. 800. The appeal was dismissed so far as the claims of defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 15 to priority were concerned, but the Appellate Court gave effect to s. 11 of the Money-lenders Act, 1938, which prohibits a Court, in a suit brought by a money-lender, in respect of a loan, to pass a decree for the amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit which, together with any amount already realised as interest through the Court or otherwise, is greater than the amount of the loan advanced, that is to say, the plaintiff's claim was reduced to Rs. 500 principal and Rs. 500 interest. The Appellate Court in its judgment made no provision for interest after the date of the institution of the suit up to the date of grace nor for interest subsequent to the date of grace although the trial Court had awarded interest at the bond rate up to the date of grace and interest at 6 per cent. per annum for the later period. The order of the Appellate Court with regard to cost was that the judgment and decree of the lower Court were modified and the "plaintiff's suit decreed modifiedly with costs corresponding to success". The decree that has been drawn up in pursuance of the Appellate Court's judgment has awarded to defendants Nos. 8, 9 and 15 the costs of the appeal based on the amount of reduction in the decretal amount.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellant that as there had been no appeal by any of the parties concerned with respect to the amount decreed by the first Court as principal and interest it was not open to the Appellate Court to reduce that amount. Even if the matter were to be decided solely with reference to the provisions of O. XLI, r. 33, of the Civil P. C., I should not be prepared to hold that the power of the Appellate Court to modify the decree with regard to the amount decreed by the trial Court was barred. But in the present case the matter is put beyond controversy by the provisions of s. 11 of the Money-lenders Act. That section enjoins a duty on the Court, in the class of cases to which it refers to restrict the amount of interest awarded to a sum not in excess of the principal advanced. The only conditions necessary to attract the operation of that section to an Appellate Court are that there shall be a suit by a money-lender, that the suit shall be in respect of a loan and that the appeal shall arise out of such a suit. When these conditions are satisfied the duty of an Appellate Court is plain that it must give effect to the section: which is the opening phrase of the section.

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law or in any agreement,"

I would, therefore, overrule the first objection of the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs-appellant.

With regard to interest from the date of the institution of the suit to the date of grace, the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs-appellant contends that he should be awarded interest at the bond rate as decreed by the trial Court. Section 8 of the Money-lenders Act empowers either the original Court or the Court of Appeal or revision to re-open a transaction between a money-lender and his debtor, to take an account between the parties and to relieve the debtor of all liability in respect of any interest in excess of nine per centum simple per annum in the case of a secured loan and twelve per centum simple per annum in the case of an unsecured loan. The learned Advocate for the respondents contends that this Court should not interfere with the decision of the Court below with regard to the interest subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit inasmuch as that would be interfering with the discretion conferred on the Court by s. 8. There is no indication in the judgment of the Court below, however, that it has exercised any discretion with regard to interest subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit. What does appear from the judgment of the Appellate Court is that it proceeded on the assumption that the rule of Damdupat introduced by s. 7 of the Act in respect to a claim for interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit applies also to the period subsequent to the institution of the suit. The language of s. 7 itself, however, is clearly against this view. The language of s. 7 of the Money-lenders Act differs completely from that of s. 6 of the Sonthal Parganas Regulation III of 1872, which prohibits a Court in the Sonthal Parganas from decreeing interest on any loan or debt in excess of the one-fourth of the principal sum if the period be not more than one year, or in excess of the principal of the original debt or loan in other cases. In the Regulation there are no words of limitation as there are in s. 7 of the Money-lenders Act restricting the rule to the period preceding the institution of the suit. The Court of Appeal below having failed to exercise its statutory discretion in the matter, it is open to us to pass an order in respect to interest subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit.

It was suggested by the learned Advocate for the respondent that this was not a case in which we should exercise this discretion in view of the absence of circumstances justifying re-opening of the transaction between the mortgagee and the mortgagor. The terms of the bond, however, themselves invite such interference. It is a secured loan and it may be assumed that the mortgagee was satisfied that the security which he accepted was sufficient to ensure repayment of the debt. In spite of this security the interest which he demanded was 2 per centum per mensem with six monthly rest, which is considerably in excess of the commercial rate even for unsecured loans. In these circumstances, in my opinion, we are justified in exercising the discretion conferred upon the Court by s. 8 and I would, therefore, direct that in the decree that is to be prepared the rate of interest for the period from the date of the institution of the suit till the expiry of the period of grace shall be 12 per centum simple per annum and after the date of grace at 6 per centum per annum simple, on the amount due at the date of grace.

The last point raised by the plaintiffs-appellants is with regard to the decree for costs. With regard to this the order will be that the plaintiffs will have their costs throughout on the amount decreed and the defendants will bear their own costs. The decree of the Appellate Court is set aside and a decree will now be prepared in accordance with rr. 2 and 4 of O. XXXIV, with interest at the rate stated above. Period of grace three months from to-day.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—
DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIII, rr. 6, 7—Petition for leave to sue in forma pauperis—Collector performing functions of Government Pleader under s. 6 forwarding report of Tahsildar that petitioner was pauper—Whether itself evidence in case—Government Pleader opposing application—Jurisdiction of Court to decide matter on evidence.

A report of the Tahsildar that the petitioner who applied for leave to sue in forma pauperis was unable to pay the court-fees, forwarded to the Court by the Collector who has been appointed to perform the functions of the Govt. Pleader under r. 6, O. XXXIII, Civil P. C., in not in itself evidence in the case. It is for the Govt. Pleader who appears for the Secretary of State in the case to decide whether to accept the report of the Tahsildar which, was merely forwarded by the Collector, or to oppose the application made by the petitioner. Where he chooses the latter course and the Court after discussing evidence comes to the conclusion that the petitioner is not pauper it has not acted with any material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction.

C. R. P. of the order of the Subordinate Judge, First, Class, Lahore, dated May 21, 1936.

Mr. Mahbub Ilahi, for the Petitioner.

Dewan Ram Lal, The Govt. Advocate, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a petition for revision of the order of Lala Ganga Bishen, Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, dismissing an application for permission to sue in forma pauperis.

The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence of the petitioner and come to the conclusion that he had failed to establish that he was unable to pay the necessary court-fee on the plaint. So far as the finding of fact is concerned there is no ground for interference in revision; but it is alleged on behalf of the petitioner that the Collector had reported that the petitioner was unable to pay the court-fee and, in the circumstances, the Court had no jurisdiction to enter upon any further enquiry in the matter as the defendant in this case was the Secretary of State for India in Council. This objection was not taken in the Court below. But apart from this it does not appear to me to have force. It is true that under O. XXXIII, r. 6, Civil P. C. notice has to be sent to the Govt. Pleader and in the present instance the Collector of the district who has been appointed to perform the functions of the 'Govt. Pleader' under that rule forwarded a report of the Tahsildar to the effect that the petitioner Hassan Din was not in a position to pay court-fee. But this position was apparently not accepted by the Govt. Pleader who appeared on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council. The report of the Tahsildar is not in itself evidence in the case as pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge. It was for the Govt. Pleader who appeared in the case to decide whether to accept the report of the Tahsildar which was merely forwarded by the Collector, or to oppose the application made by the petitioner. He apparently chose the latter course.

In my opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be said to have acted with any material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. I, therefore, dismiss this petition with costs.

Petition dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Reference No. 48 of 1939

January 31, 1940

MBREDDITH, J.

In the matter of MADAN KISHORE AND ANOTHER

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 188—Accused having knowledge of order under s. 144, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), disobeying it—Irregularity in promulgation of order—Effect—Knowledge of accused of order which he is charged with disobeying must be proved—Essentials for conviction under s. 188—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 144 (3)—Scope—Order to general public prohibiting them from doing certain acts "within limits of Nawadah Union Committee," held sufficiently described particular place, within meaning of s. 144 (3).

Even if there has been irregularity in the method of promulgation of the order under s. 144, Criminal P. C., that in itself would not make it ultra vires, so as to prevent the conviction of any person who, being proved to have had knowledge of the order, nevertheless disobeyed it. It is not enough in such cases to prove that the order has been duly promulgated. There must also be positive evidence that the accused had knowledge of the order which he is charged with disobeying. 63 Ind. Cas. 865 (1), 99 Ind. Cas. 36 (2) and 100 Ind. Cas. 830 (3), relied on. [p. 136, col. 2.]

For a conviction under s. 188, I. P. C., there must clearly be something more than mere disobedience of the order. It must also be shown that obstruction, annoyance or injury, danger to human life etc., have been caused or might have been caused. Where there is a finding that the disobedience of the order was risky to the public peace the conviction of the accused under s. 188 is justified. [p. 137, col. 1.]

Sub-s. (3) of s. 144, Criminal P. C., has nothing to do with the nature of the order, but is merely one of the four sub-sections which refer to the manner of promulgation and to the duration of an order under sub-s. (1). [p. 138, col. 1.]

Where an order is passed under s. 144 to the public generally, prohibiting them from doing certain acts "within the limits of Nawadah Union Committee," the order sufficiently describes a particular place within the meaning of s. 144 (3) when the limits of the Union Committee are clearly and specifically defined. 134 Ind. Cas. 1237 (4) and 134 Ind. Cas. 344 (5), not followed, 154 Ind. Cas. 637 (6), referred to, 167 Ind. Cas. 234 (7), followed.

Ref. made by the Additional Sessions Judge at Gaya.

Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, In support of the Reference.

The Assistant Government Advocate, Against the Reference.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 438 of the Criminal P. C. by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Gaya, recommending that the conviction and sentence passed against two persons, under s. 188 of the I. P. C. should be set aside. These two persons, Madan Kishore and Badri Lal, were convicted under s. 188, I. P. C. and sentenced to pay fines of Rs. 25 each, or, in default, to undergo simple imprisonment for one month each in the following circumstances :—

On July 10, 1939, there was a stabbing case in the town of Nawadah as a result of which there was considerable tension between the Hindus and the Mubammadans of the town. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Nawadah thereupon promulgated an order under s. 144, Criminal P. C. forbidding the assembly of five or more persons in any public place, street, or thoroughfare within the limits of the Nawadah Union Committee, and forbidding the carrying by any person within those limits of any lathi or weapon of offence. This order was promulgated the same day at about 7.45 p. m. by beat of drum and was to remain in force for one week.

On the following morning, July 11, the dead body of the person, who had been stabbed, was carried in procession under police protection for the purpose of cremation. Some distance behind this procession these two persons, Madan Kishore and Badri Lal, were seen going with three other persons, all five being armed with lathis. The police challenged them and attempted to arrest them. The other three slipped away, and the two persons, already mentioned, were arrested. They were subsequently charged under s. 188, tried and convicted as already described, upon a complaint in writing made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. At the trial the accused pleaded, first, that they were not aware of the order because they had been away at Rajgir when it was promulgated; secondly, they denied that they had carried lathis and thirdly, they challenged the validity of the order.

Four points have been mentioned in the letter of reference, in regard to which the learned Judge considers that the Magistrate was wrong; and these four points have been taken by Mr. Sarjoo Prasad who appears in support of the reference. The first is, that the order under s. 144 was not properly published having regard to the provisions of s. 134, sub-s. (2) of the Criminal P. C. which as appears from the second paragraph of s. 144, applies to orders under that section as well as to orders under s. 133. Section 134 (2) provides that :

"If such order cannot be so served (the reference is to personal service), it shall be notified by proclamation published in such manner as the Local Govt. may by rule direct and a copy thereof shall be stuck-up at such place or places as may be fittest for conveying the information to such person".

In the present case it does not appear that a copy or copies of the order were affixed in public places for the information of the public. It is argued for the Crown that the reference to such sticking up of copies in s. 134 (2) is meant to apply only to cases where the order is directed against individuals and not against the public generally. This argument is based on the fact that the last words of the clause are "to such person", which it is argued, can relate only to cases where the information is to be conveyed to a particular person as opposed to the public frequenting a particular place. There may be some doubt upon this point, and I do not consider it is necessary to decide the question because Mr. Sarjoo Prasad concedes that even if there has been this irregularity in the method of promulgation of the order, that in itself would not make it ultra vires, so as to prevent the conviction of any person who, being proved to have had knowledge of the order, nevertheless disobeyed it. Mr. Sarjoo Prasad has taken this point, he says, chiefly as bearing upon his second point—the question of knowledge; and indeed it is clear that whether necessary or not, affixing copies in conspicuous places would be a desirable means of conveying an order of this nature to the notice of the public who may not all be present in the place when the order is promulgated by beat of drum.

The second point then is, that it is not proved that these two persons actually had any knowledge of the promulgation of the order. Several rulings have been cited in which it has been laid down that it is not enough in such cases to prove that the order has been duly promulgated. There must also be positive evidence that the accused had knowledge of the order which he is charged with disobeying. These cases are Emperor v. Abdullah 63

Ind. Cas. 865 (1); Ramdas v. Emperor (2) and Sheikh Abdul v. King-Emperor (3). There can be no doubt about the correctness of this proposition and it is not challenged. But it is urged that in the present case there is a finding of knowledge and it is based on definite materials. The accused persons led some evidence to show that they were in Rajgir, but the Magistrate did not accept it and has criticised both the witnesses examined on the point. It is clear that he intended to find, even if he did not express himself very clearly, that at the time of promulgation the accused must have been in the town, and he comments on the evidence of the Sub-Inspector, Nawadah, as to how he promulgated the order. This witness stated that he himself promulgated it by beat of drum in all the streets and lanes of the town. The Magistrate remarks that the police in promulgating the notice had moved about the streets of the town in a car which had to move slowly and to halt at places. It is pointed out that evidence of knowledge can rarely be direct evidence, in most cases knowledge can only be proved by circumstantial evidence. The question of knowledge must generally be a matter of inference. As I have said, the Magistrate has not expressed himself very clearly; but I think there can be no doubt that he did mean to make this inference of knowledge from the circumstances, and the circumstances were such that he was entitled to make the inference. The second point, like the first, therefore, fails.

The third point is based on the wording of s. 188, I. P. C. which lays down that :

"Whoever, knowing that, by an order promulgated by a public servant lawfully empowered to promulgate such order, he is directed to abstain from a certain act, or to take certain order, with certain property in his possession or under his management disobeys such direction shall, if such disobedience causes or tends to cause obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any person lawfully employed, be punished with simple imprisonment etc. etc. and if such disobedience causes or tends to cause danger to human life, health or safety, or causes or tends to cause a riot or affray, shall be punished with imprisonment etc. etc."

As the section is worded, it is pointed out there must clearly be something more than mere disobedience of the order. It must also be shown that obstruction, annoyance or injury, danger to human life etc., etc. have been caused or might have been caused, and, it is said, that there is no such finding in the present case. Here again, however, there is a finding, though it might have been more precise. The Magistrate observed that the disobedience on the part of the accused was certainly risky. By this, in my view, he clearly meant risky not to the accused themselves but to the public peace, and the circumstances were such as to justify this finding. There was a clear state of communal tension. One man had been stabbed to death, a curfew order had been considered necessary, and it had been found necessary to forbid the carrying of lathis. Many instances come to mind where communal riots have arisen from very small initial causes. In circumstances like these it can hardly be argued that when five persons appear behind a procession of the kind described, armed with lathis, each one of them was not besides disobeying the order also a potential menace to peace and a danger to the public. In these circumstances the third point, in my view also fails.

The last contention is based on the wording of s. 144, cl. (3), Criminal P. C. which runs as follows :

"An order under this section may be directed to a particular individual, or to the public generally when frequenting or visiting a particular place."

Here we are dealing with an order to the public generally; and it is argued that "within the limits of the Nawadah Union Committee" does not sufficiently describe a particular place within the meaning of s. 144 (3). In support of this proposition two Bombay rulings have been cited: Motilal Gangadhar Kabre v. Emperor (4), where it was laid down that an order prohibiting the public generally and certain persons named therein from taking part in a procession within the whole of certain municipal limits and all public places within such limits, does not conform to the requirements of s. 144 (3) and is beyond the powers of a Magistrate; and secondly, D. V. Belvi v. Emperor (5), where a similar view was taken. To adopt this view, would, I consider, unduly narrow and restrict the operation of s. 144 in a way not contemplated by the Legislature when framing the section. I see no reason why the limits of the Union Committee, if clearly and specifically defined, should not be considered as describing a particular place. The view adopted in those two Bombay rulings was not followed in a later Bombay case Sorab Shavaksha Batlivala v. Emperor (6), where it was held that an order directed to the public when frequenting public or private streets in a particular city is sufficiently definite as to place to comply with the requirements of s 144. A Lahore case Abdul Karim v. The Crown (7), goes very much further. There it was held that the whole district of Lahore might be considered "a particular place" within the meaning of s. 144 (3), Criminal P. C. Their Lordships further observed that the argument advanced was, in their opinion, based on a mistaken interpretation of sub-s. (3) of s. 144. This subsection, they considered, has nothing to do with the nature of the order, but is merely one of the four sub-sections which refer to the manner of promulgation and to the duration of an order under sub-s. 1. My own views coincide with those of their Lordships of the Lahore High Court, as expressed in that case.

In my opinion there is nothing in any of the four points made in the letter of reference and argued before me, which would justify interference with this conviction. The reference is, therefore, discharged and the convictions will stand.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 163—Applicability to criminal trials—Signed statements of witnesses to Police made use of by Counsel for accused to contradict witnesses in cross-examination—Entire statements excluding irrelevant portions should go in as evidence.

Section 163, Evi. Act, is applicable to criminal trials as well as to civil actions. Where therefore the Counsel for the accused make use of the signed statements of the witnesses in the Police diary at the cross-examination in order to contradict their evidence at the trial, the entire signed statement of the witness to the Police excluding only such portions as are not relevant to the case should go in as evidence. This would bring on the record those parts of the signed statement which were corroborative of the witness's evidence at the trial. 127 Ind. Cas. 657 (1), followed. 74 Ind. Cas. 261 (2), explained.

In this case however, it was held that in the particular circumstances, the accused could not be compelled to give as evidence the signed statement in question as there was no formal notice or requisition from the accused calling for the document and while producing the Police diary the Govt. Counsel said that he would not rely on the strict technicality meaning thereby that he would not require the Counsel for the accused to put the document in evidence.

Mr. A. K. Basu, (Govt. Counsel) and Mr. Shekar Kumar Basu, for the Crown.

Messrs. M. N. Banerjee and Dhiren De, for the Accused (Makhan Lal Dutt).

Messrs. A. C. Mukherjee, M. Banerjee and Santosh Kumar Basu, for other Accused.

Judgment.—In the course of the examination of the prosecution witness Rati-pati Banerjee, P. W. No. 2 in this Court, a question has been raised whether the signed statement made by him to the Investigating Police Officer on January 17, 1939, comes within the scope of s. 163, Evi. Act, and whether the accused can be required to give it as evidence in the circumstances mentioned in that section. It may be explained at the outset that s. 162, Criminal P. O., has no application to the case because the Code does not apply to the Police in the town of Calcutta unless expressly made applicable to them, and there has been no notification making the section so applicable (see s. 1, sub-s. 2 of the Code).

The circumstances in which the question has arisen are briefly these: After the witness had been examined-in-chief and while he was under cross-examination by Mr. Banerjee representing accused Nos. 6 and 7, learned Counsel asked him whether he had made certain statements to the Police, evidently intending to use the witness's statements during the investigation for the purpose of contradicting his evidence at the trial. One of the statements said to have been made by him during the investigation was specifically put to him, namely that he heard on April 12, 1937 that Haripado had already died. This was put to him after Counsel had inspected the Police diary produced by the learned Govt. Counsel. Later, Mr. S. K. Basu, in cross-examination on behalf of accused Nos. 2, 4 and 5, put to the witness another statement said to have been made by him before the Police, the statement, namely that on April 10, 1937 the witness had a call through Dhananjoy

Naskar of Sahebpur to examine Haripado Sardar. This also was done after learned Counsel had inspected the Police diary. The two isolated statements put to the witness on behalf of accused Nos. 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 happen to be part of the witness's signed statement to the Police, but the signed statement contains other statements not yet admitted in evidence. It is contended by the learned Govt. Counsel that by virtue of s. 163, Evi. Act, he is now entitled to require Counsel on behalf of these accused persons to give the whole of the signed statement as evidence, omitting only those portions which are not relevant. Section 163 provides:

"When a party calls for a document which he has given the other party notice to produce, and such document is produced and inspected by the party calling for its production, he is bound to give it as evidence if the party producing it requires him to do so".

So far as the legal point is concerned, I think I am bound by the decision in Government of Bengal v. Santiram Mandal (1), in which it was held that s. 163, Evi. Act, is applicable to criminal trials as well as to civil actions. I see no conflict between the decision in that case and the decision in the earlier case in Suresh Chandra Ghose v. Emperor, 24 Cr L J 757 (2), in which it was held that an accused person has the right to see the statements recorded by the Investigating Police under s. 47-A, Calcutta Suburban Police Act, and use them for purposes of contradiction in accordance with s. 145, Evi. Act. Ordinarily therefore I would have ruled in the present case that the entire signed statement of the witness to the Police excluding only such portions as are not relevant to the case should go in as evidence. This would have brought on the record those parts of the signed statement which were corroborative of the witness's evidence at the trial, in addition to those brought on the record by Counsel for the accused as being contradictory of that evidence, but no others. For example, the signed statement contains an expression of the witness's opinion as to the age of the deceased Haripado Sardar. The witness not having been asked to express any opinion on this point at the trial his previous expression of opinion to the Police would not be admissible under any section of the Evi Act. It is not corroborative, because there is nothing to corroborate.

In other words it should be treated as irrelevant. It is not contended by the learned Govt. Counsel that s. 163, Evi. Act, attracts even those parts of the document which are not relevant to the case.

I have said that ordinarily I should have taken the course indicated above, but in this particular instance there has been some confusion. In the first place there was no formal notice or requisition from the accused calling for the document. Even if this defect be ignored on the ground that there was what was understood to be a notice or requisition, a further fact has to be considered. The typed transcript of the Court's proceedings of June 14 shows (vide portion below Ques. 135) that when the learned Govt. Counsel produced the Police diary, he indicated that although Counsel for the accused were not entitled to look at the diary, nevertheless, where, as on this particular occasion, a direct contradiction was sought to be made out he would not "rely on the strict technicality." This may have given the impression, although the impression was perhaps unintended, that he would not require Counsel for the accused to put in the document as evidence. In view of these special circumstances I rule that the accused cannot in this particular instance be compelled to give as evidence the signed statement in question, but this is, of course, without prejudice to the Gov. Counsel's right to re-examine the witness in accordance with law.

Order accordingly.

BHUNESHWAR PRASAD AND OTHERS—

ROMMOY ROY—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 144, 145—No real dispute as to possession—Imminent danger of breach of peace—Order under s. 144 is proper—Order under s. 145, when becomes necessary.

It is only where there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or boundaries thereof and the dispute requires to be decided on evidence that resort to s. 145, Criminal P. C., becomes necessary; and for this purpose the dispute has to be a real dispute and not a mere pretence on behalf of one of the contesting parties. Where there is no such real dispute, orders under s. 144 are not improper. There may even be occasions where an order is first appropriately passed under s. 144 and the proceeding is afterwards converted into one under s. 145 in order to pass an even more appropriate and permanent order.

Where A is in possession of the land and continuing it and B is trying to take the possession of the same land and the Police report that there is imminent danger of a breach of the peace an order under s. 144 is proper one as there is no real dispute about possession at all. 68 Ind. Cas. 149 (1) and 115 Ind. Cas. 683 (2), distinguished.

Cr. R. from an order of the Deputy Commissioner, Hazaribagh, dated October 30, 1939.

Sir Sultan Ahmad and Mr. Brahmadeva Narain, for the Petitioners.

Sir M. N. Mukherji and Mr. S. C. Mazumdar, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision against an order passed in proceedings under s. 144 of the Criminal P. C. The original order which was passed ex parte against the petitioners is dated August 24, 1939. The petitioners thereupon appeared before the Magistrate and asked him to rescind the order. This application was refused by the Magistrate on October 10, 1939, though the opportunity was seized to make some small amendments in the order. Against this order of October 10, the Deputy Commissioner was moved in revision, and on the 30th of that month he rejected that petition. The petitioners applied to this Court on December 18 in revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate which the Deputy Commissioner had declined to interfere with.

It appears that lot Itkhori was a khorphosh jagir under the Ramgarh Raj; and it is stated on behalf of the petitioners, representing some servants and some tenants of the Ramgarh Raj, that such grants are resumable on failure of the male line of the grantee. The last holder of the Itkhori lot khorphosh was Degnarain Sahi, and it is common ground that he died on July 18, last. In 1934-36 the opposite party before me, representing one Buto Kristo Roy, purchased six villages of the lot from Degnarain Sahi, and it is common ground that the purchaser came into actual possession. The case of the opposite party is that Degnarain has left a son. The case of the petitioners, on the other hand, is that Degnarain left no issue and that consequently on his death the Ramgarh Raj became entitled to resume possession of the jagir, and that it succeeded in doing so peacefully by publishing notices under s. 51 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act. The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate as finally settled by him concerns, I understand, these six villages out of the jagir. About a month after the death of Dagnarain, Buto Kristo Roy began to move the authorities against the interference of the Ramgarh Raj with his possession. Police Officers were deputed to Itkhori to see that the peace was preserved. The Magistrate himself appears to have been at Itkhori on August 24, when he directed the Senior Police Officer deputed there to report clearly "in respect of which properties the Ramgarh Raj people wanted to exercise acts of possession and who has been in possession of these properties". The result was a Police report that there was an imminent danger of a breach of the peace as the employees of the Ramgarh Raj would "certainly do some overt acts to take possession over the villages" which had been coming on in the possession of Buto Kristo Roy. In his order of October 10, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate says:

"In fact, at the time of arguments it was clearly stated on behalf of the second party (that is to say, the petitioners before me) that B. K. Roy has been in direct and sole possession of the aforesaid six villages... that the second party had not so far exercised any act of possession except making a proclamation under s. 51 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, that the second party wanted to take possession peacefully by accepting rent from those tenants who offered it voluntarily and that so no action under s. 144, Criminal P. C., was necessary. The learned Magistrate referred to the Police report, which was endorsed by the Inspector of Police, that the second party wanted forcibly to dispossess B. K. Roy, and he found it impossible to think that Buto Kristo Roy who had purchased these villages for a very big sum of money would tamely allow the second party to dispossess him."

He came to the conclusion that all the members of the second party had been acting jointly and severally forcibly to dispossess the first party, and he therefore affirmed his ex parte order under s. 144 (2) with certain modifications which do not require any specific mention.

It has been contended by Sir Sultan Ahmad who appears on behalf of the petitioners that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had completely misunderstood the petitioners, for they could not have pleaded themselves out of Court by conceding that they had not so far exercised any act of possession except making the proclamation under s. 51 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act and by adding that they wanted to take possession peacefully by accepting rent from those tenants who offered it voluntarily.

In support of the contention that the Magistrate must have misunderstood the petitioners, learned Counsel has referred me to para. 10 of the petition in revision made by these petitioners to the Deputy Commissioner. It seems to me, however, that the misunderstanding, if any, is of little consequence in the circumstances of this case. There is no dispute that Buto Kristo Roy was in possession down to the death of Degnarain, and the Deputy Commissioner, no less than the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, has found it impossible to think that Buto Kristo Roy would have allowed himself tamely and quietly to be put out of possession by whatever tactics may have been adopted by the petitioners. Sir Sultan Ahmad points out that the petitioners before me are not all employees of the Ramgarh Raj, but include some tenants as well. The mere fact that the Ramgarh Raj has got a few tenants on its side does not by any means indicate that the Ramgarh Raj is in peaceful possession of these khorphosh villages, or even make out a fair case of a bona fide dispute as regards possession. The Ramgarh Raj may, if Degnarain has died without issue, be entitled to resume possession, but unless the transferee from Degnarain chooses voluntarily to walk out (which one need hardly say is unlikely to a degree), the Raj will have to sue to recover possession from him.

Sir Sultan Ahmad has urged that this was not a case to which s. 144 should have been applied at all. As I have already indicated, there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace which the Police reported as an "imminent danger of a breach of the peace", and though the dispute did refer to the possession of these mauzas, it was not a case where, under the principles laid down in Shebalak Singh v. Kamar-ud-din Mondal (1) and Mahant Lachman Das v. Ramchhabila Missir (2), it was obligatory on the Magistrate to drop the proceeding under s. 144 and proceed to act under s. 145 of the Criminal P. O., for his finding (endorsed by the learned Deputy Commissioner) is perfectly clear that there was not a bona fide dispute about possession at all and that what had happened was that while Buto Kristo Roy was continuing his possession the Ramgarh Raj was trying to take it by means which it called peaceable but which appeared to the Police and the Magistrates to be very likely to lead to breach of the peace. It is only where there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning any land or water or boundaries thereof and the dispute requires to be decided on evidence that resort to s. 145 becomes necessary; and it must be remembered that for this purpose the dispute has to be a real dispute and not a mere pretence on behalf of one of the contesting parties. The judicial pronouncements already referred to are clear that where there is no such real dispute, orders under s. 144 are not improper. There may even be occasions where an order is first appropriately passed under s. 144 and the proceeding is afterwards converted into one under s. 145 in order to pass an even more appropriate and permanent order. But this is not a case of that kind; and though I can quite believe that the petitioners did not intend by their Pleader to say to the Magistrate what the Magistrate took him to mean, his decision really turns not so much on what the Pleader stated as on facts which to use the term adopted in Lachman Das's case (2) can be called transparent.

Sir Sultan Ahmad has also argued that the petitioners have not been given an opportunity of proving that they are in fact in possession; but the answer to this is that the case was not put on that footing either before the Magistrate or before the Deputy Commissioner, for the contention only means that there should have been proceedings under s. 145 rather than a final order under s. 144. The initial contention before me was that there was no dispute such as to warrant an order under s. 144, and this fails in view of the definite Police report received and accepted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

From this point of view it does not seem necessary to deal with the contention of Sir Manmatha Nath Mukherji for the opposite party that the period of two months for which the order of the Magistrate was to remain in force runs from the date of the ex parte order and has expired long ago—indeed this is not disputed by the other side—and that this Court should therefore not entertain the application in revision. As I have already shown, the application fails on the merits.

The application is dismissed.

DULLAN SINGH,—PLAINTIFF AND ANOTHER
—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Mortgage—Sub-mortgage—No notice of sub-mortgage to original mortgagor—Sub-mortgagee bound by state of accounts between mortgagor and mortgagee—Suit by mortgagee on mortgage—Compromise decree—Sub-mortgagee obtaining decree on his mortgage and purchasing mortgaged property—Suit by heirs of original mortgagor for possession—Sub-mortgagee held could claim only amount given by compromise decree.

The sub-mortgagee stands in a no higher position than, the mortgagee. He is bound by the state of account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. He must take the accounts as they in fact stand subsequent to creation of security unless and until he protects himself by giving notice to the mortgagor. De Lisle v. Union Bank of Scotland (6), relied on, 45 Ind. Cas. 769 (2), distinguished.

M mortgaged certain property to J and J mortgaged the same property with some other property to P. M, however, had no notice of this sub-mortgage. J brought a suit on his mortgage and a compromise decree was passed which he did not execute. Subsequently P obtained a decree against J and in execution thereof purchased the property. The heirs of M brought a suit for possession of the mortgaged property to which P pleaded that he was not bound by the decree in J's suit and that the security still subsisted:

Held, that the decree in J's suit fixing the state of account between J and M, though a compromise decree was binding upon P. That though the security subsisted for certain purposes after the passing of a decree, it subsisted only in respect of the decretal amount and hence P was not entitled to claim the total amount due on his sub-mortgage. 65 Ind. Cas. 151 (1), distinguished.

S. A. from the decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Farruknabad, dated June 1, 1935.

Mr. Jagdish Swaroop, for the Appellant,

Mr. Lalita Prasad, for the Respondents.

Thom, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal in a suit for possession of certain zamindari property. The property in suit was mortgaged by one Manohar Singh in the year 1905. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage in favour of Jwala Singh. The plaintiff Dullan Singh claims the property as a reversioner. The contesting defendant Bhagwati Prasad, Vakil, is a sub-mortgagee of Jwala Singh's mortgagee rights. In the year 1921, the mortgagee Jwala Singh instituted a suit for sale against Manohar Singh. During the pendency of the suit Manohar Singh died and his minor son Ajab Singh was brought upon the record. The dispute between the parties was eventually compromised and decree was passed in terms of the compromise. The decree was one under O. XXXIV, r. 5, and the decretal amount was Rs. 450. The defendant Bhagwati Prasad took a mortgage of Jwala Singh's mortgagee rights as already observed and also over other property of Jwala Singh in the year 1913. He brought a suit upon his mortgage against Jwala Singh and Mst. Bhagwani Kunwar, the widow of the said Ajab Singh, in the year 1926. This suit was decreed ex parte. In execution of the decree the property mortgaged by Manohar Singh was auctioned and purchased by Bhagwati Prasad in the year 1929. In this year, the plaintiff Dullan Singh filed a suit against Bhagwani Kunwar and Jwala Singh praying for possession of Manohar Singh's property including the property mortgaged. He averred that after the death of Antu Singh, the grandson of Manohar Singh, he was entitled to possession as reversioner. The suit was contested by Mst. Bhagwani Kunwar alone. The defence however failed and decree for possession was granted to the plaintiff. Dullan Singh thereafter applied for mutation and discovered that the name of the contesting defendant in the present suit, Bhagwati Prasad, had already been recorded in the respect of the property. He has in these circumstances prayed in the present suit for possession. The contesting defendant has pleaded that the plaintiff is not entitled to decree except upon the payment of the total amount due upon the sub-mortgage in his favour. The learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellate Court granted a decree in favour of the plaintiff conditional on payment by the plaintiff of the sum of Rs. 450, the amount of the decree in the suit by Jwala Singh on his mortgage.

In appeal it was contended for the defendant that the decree in Jwala Singh's suit was not binding upon the defendant. Learned Counsel maintained that despite the final decree in Jwala Singh's suit which was passed on October 28, 1922 the security still subsisted and the defendant, i. e., sub-mortgagee, was entitled to the benefit of that security. In support of his contention that the security still subsisted despite the passing of a final decree in a mortgage suit learned Counsel for the appellant referred to the case in Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (1). In that case it was decided by the Privy Council, that "when a prior mortgagee brings the property to sale in execution of a decree on his mortgage without impleading the puisne mortgagee to the suit, the rights of the puisne mortgagee are not affected by the sale. But if the puisne mortgagee brings a suit on his mortgage, the auction-purchaser in execution of the prior mortgage decree, can use the prior mortgage right as a shield, and claim payment of the amount due under the prior mortgage decree, where the puisne mortgagee seeks a decree for sale in his favour."

The dispute in that case did not concern the rights of a sub-mortgagee but those of a purchaser at an auction in execution of a decree on a prior mortgage. In determining the rights of a sub-mortgagee different considerations apply. Furthermore, in our judgment, it does not follow that because the security subsisted despite the passing of a final decree the defendant is entitled to claim the total amount due upon his sub-mortgage. The security no doubt subsists for certain purposes after the passing of a decree but it subsists only in respect of the decretal amount. The finding of the lower Appellate Court in the present case is that the mortgagor had no notice of the sub-mortgage. The suit of 1921 was compromised in ignorance so far as the mortgagor was concerned of the sub-mortgagee's rights. The lower Appellate Court has further found that there was no fraud or collusion on the part of the mortgagor and the mortgagee. In these circumstances in our judgment the plaintiff is entitled to take his stand upon the decree.

The suit which was filed by Jwala Singh was in our judgment incompetent. Jwala Singh was a usufructuary mortgagee. He was not entitled to maintain a suit for sale of the mortgage property. Nevertheless he filed such a suit and in that suit he obtained a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5 for the sum of Rs. 450. This sum was not paid by the mortgagor. Jwala Singh allowed the decree in his favour to become a dead letter and remained in possession of the mortgage property. In these circumstances we are satisfied that in equity the plaintiff who has succeeded to the property is entitled to recover possession of the property on payment of the sum of Rs. 450. If this suit had been directed against Jwala Singh he could have had no answer to the plaintiff's claim. In equity no doubt he could have claimed to retain possession until the sum of Rs. 450 was paid to him despite the fact that he had allowed his decree to become time-barred. The sub mortgagee stands in a no higher position than Jwala Singh, the mortgagee. He is bound by what has been referred to in a number of cases as the "state of account" between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. In this connection we would refer to Gour on the Law of Transfer of Property, Edn. 6, p. 889. In para. 1418 the learned author observes:

"The original mortgagor is entitled to sue the sub-mortgagee for redemption, and conversely the sub-mortgagee may sue the mortgagor for recovery of his money from the mortgaged property. The sub-mortgage is extinguished by the payment of the mortgage debt by the mortgagor, if he has no notice or knowledge of the sub-mortgage, and acts in good faith; similarly payments made under these circumstances towards the mortgage-debt to the mortgagee will reduce the same pro tanto so far as the sub-mortgagee is concerned; but no payment made with notice or knowledge of the sub-mortgagee will discharge wholly or partially the mortgage-debt due to the sub-mortgagee. Following these principles, a sub-mortgagee of property is entitled to retain its possession against the original mortgagor until the amount due on the sub-mortgage is paid off, and he is not bound to seek his remedy against the original mortgagee. The sub-mortgagee cannot get anything more than the amount due to the original mortgagee at the time when the mortgagor learns of the sub-mortgage."

In Papala Chakrapani Chetti v. Lachimi Achi (2) it was held that:

"Where a mortgagor in ignorance of the existence of a sub-mortgagee executes in substitution of the original mortgage, two mortgages covering two distinct portions of the property, whereby the original mortgage is discharged the sub-mortgagee's rights under his sub-mortgage are not affected by the two mortgages executed in substitution of the original mortgage."

Learned Counsel relied upon this decision. We are not called upon in deciding this appeal to consider whether this decision is sound or not, the circumstances of the present case being quite different. It is to be noted however that in the course of their judgment Wallis, C. J. and Napier, J. observed that:

"In Matthews v. Wallwyn (3) it was held that the only rights of a mortgagor without notice of the assignment are that the assignee holds subject to the account between him and the original mortgagee. This latter proposition was re-affirmed in Chambers v. Goldwin (4). This principle applies both to payments made prior to the assignment and to those subsequent to it: vide Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 21, p. 179 and Dixon v. Winch (5) where the limits of the doctrine were considered."

In this connection we would refer further to the case in De Lisle v. Union Bank of Scotland (6). In that case which was decided in the Court of Appeal in England

Phillimor, L. J. in the course of his judgment observes :

"The transferee of a mortgage takes it on the footing that the amount said to have been advanced on the security has been advanced, but with the knowledge that since the creation of the mortgage the debt may have been reduced. He is not bound by the true state of the account between mortgagor and mortgagee at the date of the mortgage, because the statement as to the original loan cannot be falsified; but as to all transactions subsequent to the creation of the security he must take the accounts as they in fact stand unless and until he protects himself by giving notice to the mortgagor."

It is further remarked in the same judgment that the assignee of the mortgagee rights must allow any repayment or any discharge made at any time after the execution of the sub-mortgage until he protects himself by giving notice to the mortgagor. Now, in the present instance, the state of the accounts shows that the sum due by the mortgagor under his mortgage is Rs. 450. Learned Counsel for the appellant conceded that if this sum had in fact been paid by the mortgagor to the mortgagee then his defence must fail. He has maintained however that the learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellate Court having reached the conclusion that no payment was made under Jwala Singh's decree the security subsisted in respect of the full amount due under the sub-mortgage. In our judgment this argument is unsound. The sub-mortgagee is bound by the state of the account. It cannot be disputed that the decree of October 28, 1922 fixed the state of the account between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The decree fixing the state of the account is no doubt a compromise decree but it is nonetheless binding upon the parties. It creates equitable rights both for the mortgagor and the mortgagee and it is not permissible at this stage in the absence of any allegations of fraud or collusion to go behind the decree and to examine the considerations which induced the parties to conclude the compromise. After the passing of the decree in 1922 there can be no doubt that the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover from the mortgagee the mortgage property upon the payment of the decretal amount and in our view the fact that the property is now in the possession of the sub-mortgagee does not alter the legal position. The amount due under the mortgage having been reduced by payment or by decree the sub-mortgage security is pro tanto restricted, the sub-mortgagee having failed to give notice of the mortgage to the mortgagor. The learned Civil Judge has granted a decree of possession of the property in suit conditional upon the payment of Rs. 450 to the appellant. In our judgment this decision is sound.

We would observe in conclusion that in the sub-mortgage of 1913 Jwala Singh not only mortgaged his mortgagee rights under Manohar Singh's mortgage but other property also. This property has been auctioned by the appellant in execution of his decree in the year 1929. We have no information before us as to the amount realized by the sale of this property and accordingly whether more than the sum of Rs. 450 is due under the sub-mortgage. In the result the appeal fails. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

LEACH, O. J. GENTLE AND KRISHNASWAMI

IVENGAR, J. J.

In the matter of SRI K. SRINIVASA RAO
FIRST GRADE PLEADER, COIMBATORE

Legal practitioner—Professional misconduct—Court having reason to believe that practitioner may have been guilty of professional misconduct—If can allow proceedings to be dropped on agreement between complainant and practitioner or on wish of complainant—Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13—Appointment of tribunal to make enquiry—Approval of tribunal, if can be given ex post facto—Tribunal not validly constituted—Acquiescence whether makes it lawful—High Court directing District Judge to enquire into charge of professional misconduct—District Judge, if has power under s. 3-A, Madras Civil Courts Act (III of 1873), to direct Additional District Judge to make enquiry without reference to High Court.

Where the Court has reason to believe that a practitioner may have been guilty of professional misconduct it cannot allow proceedings to be dropped as the result of an agreement between the complainant and the practitioner or even if the complainant without any agreement does not wish to proceed with the matter.

The Legal Practitioners Act in s. 13 contemplates the High Court directing an inquiry before action is taken. The Court has duties to perform under the Act and the first duty is to nominate a person or persons to hold the inquiry into the alleged misconduct. Unless the tribunal is constituted beforehand the inquiry cannot be lawful. The suggestion that approval of a tribunal may be given ex post facto is repugnant to the spirit of the Act and the wording of s. 13.

If the tribunal which conducted the inquiry under s. 13 was not validly constituted acquiescence in the proceedings would not turn it into a lawful tribunal. If illegal in its inception, illegal it would remain.

There is nothing in the Legal Practitioners Act, which directs the District Judge to hold the inquiry. The act leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the High Court. The High Court and not the Act nominates the tribunal. Therefore, when the High Court directs a District Judge to hold an inquiry into a charge of professional misconduct the District Judge does not hold the inquiry under the Act but under the order of the High Court. Before the District Judge can be allowed to pass on his duty to some one else there must be very clear authority for his action. The Madras Civil Courts Act, s. 3-A does not provide it. Where, therefore, the High Court directs the District Judge to hold an inquiry into a charge of professional misconduct, he has no power of delegation and cannot direct the Additional District Judge to hold an enquiry without making a reference to the High Court.

Notice under s. 13 (b) of the Legal Practitioners' Act issued to Sri K. Srinivasa Rao, 1st Grade Pleader, Coimbatore calling upon the said Mr. K. Srinivasa Rao to show cause why he should not be dealt with under disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court for grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty in that he acting as Pleader for one G. Thimmappa in I.P. No. 32 of 1926 on the file of the District Court, Coimbatore (Insolvency of one Balakrishna Mudaliar) received from the Official Receiver of Coimbatore two sums of money namely Rs. 2,223-7-2 and Rs. 2,038-2-7 as dividends on April 10, 1930 and August 11, 1931 respectively and kept the said Thimmappa in ignorance without intimating to him of the fact of the receipt of the above sums; that he misappropriated the said sums for his own use and thereby rendered himself liable for professional misconduct under the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act.

The Advocate-General, in support of the notice.

Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri for Mr. M. Krishna Bharati, for the Pleader.

Leach, C. J.—The respondent is a Pleader practising in the Coimbatore District. In February 1937 one G. Thimmappa a merchant residing and carrying on business in Bellary presented a petition to this Court in which he charged the respondent with professional misconduct. The Court considered that the charges made called for inquiry and passed an order directing the District Judge of Coimbatore to hold the inquiry, the case falling within s. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act. When the matter came before the District Judge the petitioner filed a statement in which he said that he was satisfied that the respondent, who had been his Pleader for a considerable time, had not acted mala fide; and that his claim had been settled by the respondent and he wished to withdraw the petition. In the circumstances the District Judge thought it unnecessary to proceed with the enquiry and submitted the record to this Court with his remarks. This Court considered that the District Judge should have proceeded with the enquiry, notwithstanding that the petitioner had expressed a desire to withdraw the petition. Where the Court has reason to believe that a practitioner may have been guilty of professional misconduct it cannot allow proceedings to be dropped as the result of an agreement between the complainant and the practitioner or even if the complainant without any agreement does not wish to proceed with the matter.

By an order dated March 7, 1939 the Court remanded the case to the District Judge with direction to proceed. Without reference to this Court the District Judge directed the Additional District Judge to hold the inquiry, which he did, and his report is now before us. Mr. Venkatarama Sastri on behalf of the respondent has raised a preliminary objection. He says that inasmuch as the inquiry has been conducted not by the District Judge, who was directed to hold the inquiry, but by the Additional District Judge, it is unlawful and the Court cannot take action on it. In other words, he says that the District Judge, having been ordered to hold the inquiry, could not delegate his power to the Additional District Judge and that this Court is precluded from giving approval ex post facto to the inquiry conducted by the Additional District Judge. The learned Advocate-General has contended that if the Court is satisfied with the report it can take action on it. He has also contended that the District Judge had full power by reason of s. 3-A of the Madras Civil Courts Act, 1873 to transfer the matter to the Additional District Judge. Further he has said that inasmuch as the respondent did not take objection to the Additional District Judge holding the inquiry when the matter was in the District Court but appeared and took part in the proceedings throughout he cannot now be allowed to raise objection.

I will deal first with the argument advanced by the learned Advocate-General that the finding of a tribunal of inquiry can be accepted notwithstanding with the tribunal was not appointed by the Court for the purpose. The opening clause of s. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act is in these words:

"The High Court may also, after such inquiry as it thinks fit, suspend or dismiss any Pleader or Mukhtar holding a certificate as aforesaid."

It is said that the words "after such inquiry as it thinks fit" leave it open to the Court to give approval ex post facto. I am unable to accept this argument. The Act contemplates the High Court directing an inquiry before action is taken. The Court has duties to perform under the Act and the first duty is to nominate a person or persons to hold the inquiry into the alleged misconduct. Unless the tribunal is constituted before hand the inquiry, in my opinion, cannot be lawful. I regard the suggestion that approval of a tribunal may be given ex post facto as being repugnant to the spirit of the act and the wording of s. 13.

The argument that because no objection was raised in the District Court to the Additional District Judge conducting the inquiry he cannot be allowed to raise the objection now is also one which I cannot accept. If the tribunal which conducted the inquiry was not validly constituted acquiescence in the proceedings would not turn it into a lawful tribunal. If illegal in its inception, illegal it would remain.

The only argument which goes for serious consideration is the argument that s. 3-A of the Madras Civil Courts Act give the District Judge power to direct the Additional District Judge to conduct the inquiry. That section reads as follows:—

"When in the opinion of the High Court, the state of business pending before the Judge of any District Court (hereinafter called the District Judge) so requires, the Local Govt. may appoint one or more Additional District Judges to that Court for such period as they may deem necessary.

The Additional District Judges so appointed shall discharge all or any of the functions of the District Judge, under this act or any other law for the time being in force which the District Judge may assign to them, and, in the discharge of those functions, they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge."

Therefore the Additional District Judge may lawfully deal with matters which come within the Province of the District Judge under the Act or any other law for the time being in force. The Civil Courts Act only refers to Civil Suits and appeals from Judges subordinate to the District Judge. The matter now before us is neither a suit nor an appeal. The learned Advocate-General has, however, said that the present case falls within the words "or any other law for the time being in force." I consider that the Legislature had here in mind acts such as the Indian Companies Act, the Indian Divorce Act and the Succession Act, which confer upon the District Judge jurisdiction in specified matters. If there were a clause in the Legal Practitioners Act which directed the District Judge to hold the inquiry in a case like the present one he certainly would have power under s. 3-A of the Madras Civil Courts Act to assign the inquiry to the Additional District Judge, but there is nothing in the Legal Practitioners Act which directs the District Judge to hold the inquiry. The act leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the High Court. The High Court and not the Act nominates the tribunal. Therefore when the High Court directs a District Judge to hold an inquiry into a charge of professional misconduct the District Judge does not hold the inquiry under the Act but under the order of the High Court. Before the District Judge can be allowed to pass on his duty to some one else there must be very clear authority for his action. Certainly the Madras Civil Courts Act does not provide it. In my opinion, the District Judge having been directed by this Court to hold the inquiry he had no power of delegation. No doubt he thought that he had authority under s. 3-A of the Madras Civil Courts Act to transfer the duty to the Additional District Judge, but I consider that in so doing he erred. It would have been a different matter if he had received the sanction of this Court before hand but he directed the Additional District Judge to hold the inquiry without making any reference to this Court.

It follows from what I have said that I am not prepared to read s. 3-A of the Madras Civil Courts Act in the way suggested by the learned Advocate-General and I feel bound to uphold the preliminary objection raised on behalf of the respondent. The findings of the Additional District Judge will be set aside and the District Judge directed to hold a fresh inquiry into the allegations made against the respondent and present his own report to this Court in due course. In order to prevent any misunderstanding I would add that this Court has not considered the findings of the Additional District Judge and will deal with the charges against the respondent merely on the report of the District Judge when it is submitted.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), s. 4, cls. (1) and (7)—Resumed muafi-holder, whether a co-sharer—His status.

The resumed muafi-holder of specific plots of land with specific Govt. revenue in a village, without the right of having any interest in the joint lands of the mahal or the administration of its affairs is not on the same footing as a co-sharer and his status is in no case better than that of a petty proprietor without the right of having any interest in the joint lands of the mahal or in the administration of its affairs. 122 Ind. Cas. 178 (1) and 170 Ind. Cas. 769 (2), distinguished.

F. A. from the decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Agra, dated October 9, 1934.

Messrs. G. S. Pathak, Kanta Prasad and Shiv Charan Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Respondents.

Bajpai, J.—This is an appeal by Chaubey Mangan Lal whose claim for pre-emption has been dismissed by the learned Additional Civil Judge of Agra. Defendant No. 2, Chaubey Gulzari Lal, sold certain zamindari property specified at the foot of the plaint to Chaubey Brahm Dutt, defendant No. 1, and the plaintiff Chaubey Mangan Lal alleged that he was a co-sharer in Mauza Ohandarpur where the property sold was situate and that his name was recorded in the khewat. Defendant No. 1 was said to be a stranger. It is not necessary for the purposes of the present appeal to go into the other allegations of the plaintiff or to discuss the various pleas taken in the written statement excepting one, namely, that the plaintiff was not a co-sharer in Mauza Ohandarpur as required by the Agra Pre-emption Act and that at the most he could be called a petty proprietor of only particular plots. For that reason the defendant vendee alleged that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain the suit. The Court below has upheld this contention of the defendant and has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. In appeal before us, it is contended that the view taken by the Court below is incorrect. Two documents are relevant for the decision of this issue. The first document is the wajib-ul-arz of the village prepared in 1285 Fasli and printed at p. 17 of our record, and the second one is the khewat for the same year which has not been printed but a typed copy of which has been supplied to us.

Before we discuss the evidentiary value of these two documents, it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Agra Pre-emption Act. There is no doubt that on the sale of a share of zamindari if any wajib-ul-arz prepared prior to the commencement of the Act records a custom; contract or declaration recognizing or declaring a right of pre-emption, then a right of pre-emption shall be deemed to exist and under s. 12 of the Act co-sharers in the mahal in which the property is situate and co-sharers in the village will have the right to pre-empt. Under s. 4, cl. (1) "co-sharer" means

"any person, other than a petty proprietor, entitled as proprietor to any share or part in a mahal or village whether his name is or is not recorded in the register of proprietors," and under s. 4, cl. (7) "petty proprietor" means

"the proprietor of a specific plot of land in a mahal, who as such is not entitled to any interest in the joint lands of the mahal, or to take part in the administration of its affairs."

It is thus clear that every person who is entitled as proprietor to a share or part in a mahal or village will have the right to pre-empt unless he is only a petty proprietor and as such petty proprietor is not entitled to any interest in the joint lands of the mahal or to take part in the administration of its affairs, his proprietary right extending only over specific plots of land in the mahal. The question that we have got to decide is whether the plaintiff is a mere petty proprietor as held by the Court below within the meaning of cl. (7) of s. 4 or whether he is a co-sharer within the meaning of cl. (1) of s. 4. Now we come to a discussion of the two documents mentioned in an earlier portion of our judgment. The wajib-ul-arz which is printed at p. 17 of our record consists of four chapters. Chapter I relates to the nature of the mahal and property and customs. Chapter II, deals with the rights of share-holders inter se on the basis of custom and agreement. Chapter III relates to the rights of under-proprietors and the fourth deals with the rights of tenants in general. It is clear that the under-proprietors are relegated to Chap. III and their rights are mentioned in a chapter of its own. At this stage we might mention that it is common ground that the plaintiff is the son of Genda Lal and is entered in the khewat against Serial No. 3 under the heading of resumed muafi-holders. His proprietary interest extends over 14 bighas 8 biswas of land with a Govt. revenue of Rs. 15-13-3.

From the wajib-ul-arz it appears that there is no joint land in which the plaintiff might be considered to have any interest. The khevat does not speak of any shamilat land. Our attention was not drawn by learned Counsel for the appellant to any piece of evidence from which we could infer that the plaintiff was entitled to any interest in the joint lands of the mahal. All that was argued was that he was entitled to take part in the administration of its affairs. A reference to the wajib-ul-arz shows that in the case of the appointment of a patwari which occurs under Chap. I a patwari is appointed with the consent of co-sharers (hissedar). When we come to the custom as regards the distribution of profits we see that a provision is made that the lambardar shall distribute the profits after payment of Govt. revenue and village expenses to the hissedar in accordance with the share entered in the khevat. When we come to the custom regarding the appointment of the lambardar, we find that when the lambardar dies the new lambardar is to be appointed with the consent of the hissedar. The translation of the wajib-ul-arz on our record is not very accurate. At several places where the original wajib-ul-arz speaks only of hissedar in the singular the translation is co-sharers in the plural. Under Chap. II, para. 4 we have the usages relating to the management of culturable fallow lands and of rights appertaining thereto and the provision is that the "management in respect of culturable fallow land is made through lambardar in consultation with the co-sharer" and the same is to be found when we deal with the responsibilities of co-sharers regarding village expenses. Here too, it is provided that the village expenses are incurred in the following way through the lambardar that credit is allowed by the hissedar in proportion to his share entered in the khevat. It is not necessary to pursue this point any further. The matter is made clear beyond any doubt when we come to para. 13 of Chap. II where a reference is made to the custom regarding the right of pre-emption. The provision there is that "if any co-sharer wants to dispose of his property, he should transfer it first to the next co-sharer (hissedar sani)."
The accurate translation would probably be the second co-sharer.

We have dealt at some length with the wajib-ul-arz because the proprietors were really two in 1285 Fasli, namely, Ram Das, son of Nand Kishore, and Mst. Kokla, wife of Mul Chand, a predeceased son of Nand Kishore. The entire wajib-ul-arz is so worded that there is a mention of lambardar and co-sharer. This shows that there were only two co-sharers in the villages and the rights of only these two co-sharers were being discussed in the wajib-ul-arz and the appointment of the patwari and the lambardar also rested on that basis. It is thus evident that the above two proprietors alone had a right in the administration of village affairs. The plaintiff's predecessor is a resumed muafi-holder and when we come to Chap. III which deals with the rights of under-proprietors—the expression in the vernacular is kabizari mathat—it is said that there is no muafi land but there are two resumed muafi holdings one of them being that of the predecessor of the present plaintiff, and there is one provision here which runs counter to the provision in the case of proprietors. As we mentioned before a right of pre-emption is given to the hissedar sani if one co-sharer wants to dispose of his property, but in the case of resumed muafi the proprietors have got all sorts of powers of transfer. They seem to be on a different level from a "co-sharer."

We have made it clear from what we have said above that the plaintiff or his predecessor had no interest in the joint lands of the mahal and we have been endeavouring to show that the plaintiff or his predecessor were not entitled to take part in the administration of its affairs. The plaintiff could not have any hand in the appointment of the patwari or the appointment of the lambardar, nor could he have been asked to pay the village expenses. It is however argued strenuously that the liability to pay Govt. revenue was joint and that fact, according to the appellant, is enough to take the plaintiff out of the category of such petty proprietors who are not entitled to pre-empt. It is said that that in itself is taking part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal. Our attention in this connection is drawn to the khevat of 1285 Fasli where the Govt. revenue of the resumed muafi land and of the ordinary zamindari is lumped up at the bottom and the contention is that that is an important circumstance in order to decide the crucial point whether the plaintiff has a right to take part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal.

Our attention has been drawn to Sheo Balak Ram v. Mathura Prasad (1) and Prahlad Prasad v. Chameli Kuar (2). In these two cases the plaintiff was held entitled to pre-empt, but a reference to the facts of the two cases will show that the liability to pay Govt. revenue jointly was not the deciding factor and the history of the title of the plaintiffs was traced and it became abundantly clear that the predecessors of the plaintiffs in the two cases were co-sharers in the strict sense of the term. It is no doubt true that in certain places the learned Chief Justice Sir Shah Muhammad Sulaiman said that it might be necessary to find out whether a person takes part in the administration of the affairs of the mahal if the liability to pay Govt. revenue is joint. On behalf of the respondents, our attention was drawn to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramjimal v. Riazud Din (3) and to a decision of a Bench of this Court in Munna Lal v. Bahadur Lal (4). There is nothing of importance in the Privy Council case which might have a bearing so far as the point under discussion is concerned, but the dictum of two learned Judges of this Court in Munna Lal v. Bahadur Lal (4) is undoubtedly to the effect that the joint responsibility of revenue is not at all a relevant factor in deciding the status of a co-sharer. It is not necessary for us to commit ourselves to this latter view because we have shown above that the entire scheme of the wajib-ul-arz points unhesitatingly to the conclusion that the resumed muafi-holder was not to be on the same footing as a co-sharer and that his status was in no case better than that of a petty proprietor without the right of having any interest in the joint lands of the mahal or in the administration of its affairs. The khewat also shows that the 20 biswas were all entered against Ram Das and Mst. Kokla and they alone had management of the unculturable land. The two khewats of resumed muafi-holders related only to specific plots of land with specific Govt. revenue entered against them. We have given the case our anxious consideration and we have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the Court below is correct. We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 774-A of 1939

October 25, 1939

MOSELY, J.

THE KING—PROSECUTOR

versus

MAUNG KYI NYO—RESPONDENT

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 106—Expression "offences involving breach of peace," meaning—Conviction of accused under s. 294, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Order under s. 106, when can be made.

The expression "offences involving a breach of the peace" in s. 106, Criminal P. O., means offences in which the commission of a breach of the peace is a necessary ingredient, or offence the commission of which has actually led to a breach of the peace (irrespective of the party by which that breach is committed). It is impossible to construe the word 'involve' as equivalent to the words 'likely to lead to.' The mere use of abusive language in a public place is not of itself a breach of the peace, though of course it is likely to lead to one. It is not one of the offences affecting the public tranquillity mentioned in s. 103. The words "breach of the public peace" have not only in popular usage but in law, the significance of a disturbance of the peace by something more than mere abusive or obscene words, that is to say, by resort, if not to actual violence, to threats of it. In other words, the word 'peace' is used as a synonym for security rather than for tranquillity. Where therefore an accused person is convicted of an offence under s. 294, I. P. C., an order under s. 106 cannot be made unless there is a finding that active criminal intimidation or assault, etc., have actually occurred in consequence of the obscene abuse.

[Case-law discussed.]

Mr. E. W. Lambert, Government-Advocate, for the King.

Order.—The respondent was convicted of the offence of using obscene words to the annoyance of others in a public road, an offence under s. 294, I. P. C., and was sentenced to a sentence of fine, it was also ordered that he entered into a bond under s. 106, Criminal P. O., to keep the peace for six months. The case has been taken up on revision of this Court's own motion in order to consider the legality of the order to enter into a bond. Section 106, Criminal P. O., is as follows:

"Whenever any person accused of any offence punishable under Chap. VIII, I. P. C., (other than an offence punishable under s. 143, s. 149, s. 153-A or s. 154 thereof) or of assault or other offence involving a breach of the peace, or of abetting the same, or any person accused of committing criminal intimidation, is convicted of such offence . . . and such Court is of opinion that in is necessary to require such person to execute a bond for keeping the peace, such Court may . . . order him to execute a bond. . . ."

Section 106 of the Code of 1882 enabled bonds to be taken

"whenever any person accused of rioting, assault or other breach of the peace, or abetting the same or assembling armed men, or taking other unlawful measures with the evident intention of committing the same, or any person accused of criminal intimidation by threatening injury to person or property is convicted of such offence."

Section 106 of the Code of 1898 is similar to s. 106 of the Code of 1882 except that for the words "other breach of the peace" the words "involving a breach of the peace" are substituted. The words "involving a breach of the peace" and the expression "breach of the peace" itself have been the subject of numerous and conflicting decisions. The words themselves are vague and susceptible of more than one interpretation. The matter has been dealt with in four old rulings of the Chief Court of Lower Burma and of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Upper Burma, all under the Code of 1898. In Crown v. Wet Taung (1) the question was considered whether a person convicted of an offence under s. 504, I. P. O., could be ordered to keep the peace under s. 106, Criminal P. O. Section 504, I. P. O., says that

"whoever intentionally insults, and thereby gives provocation to, any person intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause him to break the public peace, or to commit any other offence, shall be punished. . . ."

It was said in Crown v. Wet Taung (1) that such an offence may, but does not necessarily, involve a breach of the peace and that even if a breach of the peace occurs, it is not the person accused under s. 504, I. P. O. who is guilty of it. I do not think that the question by which party the breach of the peace is caused is material in considering whether a person convicted under s. 504, I. P. O. can be ordered to give a bond under s. 106, Criminal P. O. In fact I am of the opinion that the word "involve" was expressly used with that consideration in view. I note that in In re Kuppa Reddiar (2) the same view as in Crown v. Wet Taung (1) was taken, and it was said that it is of the essence of the offences specified in s. 106 that in committing the offence of which the offender is found guilty he necessarily has also broken the peace. Crown v. Wet Taung (1) was briefly followed in King-Empero v. Ma Hla Bon (3) a case where a bond has been ordered on a conviction under s. 294 I. P. O. It was said there that obscene abuse does not necessarily involve a breach of the peace. In King-Emperor v. Ni Kur Ya (4) Irwin, J. who had been a member of the Bench which decided Crown v. Wet Taung (1) discriminated an offence under s. 294 from one under s. 504 and said that uttering obscene abuse in a public place to the annoyance of others could amount to a breach of the peace if there was a finding to that effect. He was of the opinion that the public peace could be broken by angry words as well as by blows or deeds. An older ruling Queen-Empress v. Nga So Pe (5) to the opposite effect was not referred to.

Chapter VIII, I. P. O. alluded to in s. 106, deals with certain offences against the public tranquillity, namely, unlawful assembly and rioting and offences connected therewith, and also affray. Section 294 occurs in Chap. XIV. The expression "offences involving a breach of the peace" in my opinion, means offences in which the commission of a breach of the peace is a necessary ingredient, or offence the commission of which has actually led to a breach of the peace (irrespective of the party by which that breach is committed). This I note, is the view taken in Jib Lal Gir v. Jog Mohan Gir (6). This has been followed by the Calcutta High Court in a series of cases, the last of which is Abdul Gafur v. Mohamed Mirza (7). Jib Lal Gir v. Jog Mohan Gir (6) was under the Code of 1898, and it was therefore also held there that a breach of the peace would be involved if unlawful acts were done with the evident intention of committing an offence involving a breach of the peace. The change in the Code has, I think, been overlooked in some of the subsequent cases, and it was held in Abdul Gafur v. Mohamed Mirza (7), for example; that "offences involving a breach of the peace" include not only offences in which a breach of the peace is an essential element and in which a breach of the peace has actually occurred, but include also cases of offences in which an evident intention to commit a breach of the peace is expressly found. I do not think that such a construction is possible under the present reading of s. 106.

In Emperor v. Manik Rai (8) Sir George Knox, J., held that the words "involving a breach of the peace" mean not only offences which necessarily involve a breach of the peace, or in which a breach of the peace forms an ingredient, but include such an offence as in common knowledge is ordinarily or probably the occasion of a breach of the peace. It was said that the word "involve" connotes the inclusion, not only of a necessary, but also of a probable feature, circumstance, antecedent condition or consequence. To my mind it is impossible to construe the word "involve" as equivalent to the words "likely to lead to."

It was also said that the object of s. 106 was to prevent breaches of the peace taking place, and not merely to follow up breaches of the peace which had already taken place. But that will not justify a more extended construction of the meaning of the expression than the words themselves allow. In Emperor v. Yacoub Sayed Lallamian (9) Heaton, J., said that the expression "offences involving a breach of the peace" covered two classes of cases. The first class, he said, is where a breach of the peace in fact has occurred. The other class is where the definition of the offence involves a breach of the peace, as it does in one of the two classes of cases which occur under s. 104, that is the class of case where the insult is perpetrated with the intention or knowledge that it is likely to give provocation which will cause another person to break the public peace. In other words, it was said that an offence involving a breach of the peace was identical with an offence "intended or known to be likely to give provocation which would cause another person to break the peace." If so, there would seem to be no reason for the differentiation in the language of s. 504, I. P. O., and s. 106, Criminal P. O. Heaton, J., also remarked that it was a possible view that a breach of the peace could be constituted by words without being necessary to come to the infliction of blows, or that the mere use of language, if it is violent enough, is a breach of the peace. This view was tentatively approved in an Allahabad case, Raja Ram v. Emperor, 37 Cr. L. J. 385 (10), where it was said that using abusive language and being generally disorderly at a Railway Station might amount to a breach of the peace.

I think that the correct view was taken in Sadho Ram v. Emperor (11), where it was said that an offence under s. 504 involves only an intention to provoke a breach of the public peace, or knowledge that the provocation given is likely to cause such a breach, and that such an offence is not one involving a breach of the peace; and in Abdulla v. Emperor (12), where it was held that an offence under s. 297 (trespassing on burial places) was not an offence involving a breach of the peace, as such breach was not an ingredient in the offence, nor had any breach of the peace actually taken place. I would hold then that the words "involving a breach of the peace" denote offences where either a breach of the peace was a necessary ingredient in the offence committed, or where a breach of the peace has actually been committed during the course of the commission of the offence by one party or the other. I do not think that the mere use of abusive language in a public place is of itself a breach of the peace, though of course it is likely to lead to one. It is not one of the offences affecting the public tranquillity mentioned in s. 105. The section itself provides for cases where threatening words amount to criminal intimidation, or where threatening gestures amount to an assault. In my opinion the words "breach of the public peace" have not only in popular usage but in law, the significance of a disturbance of the peace by something more than mere abusive or obscene words, that is to say, by resort, if not to actual violence, to threats of it. In other words, the word 'peace' I consider is used as a synonym for security rather than for tranquillity. I would hold that where an accused person is convicted of an offence under s. 294, an order under s. 106 cannot be made unless there is a finding that active criminal intimidation or assault, etc., have actually occurred in consequence of the obscene abuse.

In the present case it would appear that the respondent might have been convicted of criminal intimidation as well as of the use of obscene language, though he was not charged with it. For this reason, as this revision was initiated by this Court on its

BENNET AND VARMA, JJ.

DALJIT SINGH—APPELLANT

versus

HARKISHAN LAL SAH AND BROS.—

PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS

Principal and surety—Limitation—Time against surety, when runs—Surety guaranteeing payment of money due on mortgage if same is not realized from mortgaged property—Limitation against surety, when runs—Deed—Construction—Surety bond—Surety guaranteeing payment due on mortgage—Interest on that amount also held included—Hindu Law—Debt—Father—Surety debt—Liability of son—Pious obligation.

The question as to when time began to run, so far as the surety is concerned, has to be decided on the terms of the contract of guarantee in each case.

Where the undertaking given by the surety to the mortgagee is that if the latter's money is not realized from the property mortgaged by the mortgagors, then the mortgagee would be entitled to realize the money, from the surety. The clear intention of the parties is that the mortgagee is first to proceed against the mortgaged property and is to take every step that could be taken against it to realize his money, and that it is only when he fails to realize the whole amount due to him from the mortgaged property that he is to proceed against the surety.

Where the contract of guarantee for payment of amount advanced on mortgage runs: "if your money is not realized from the said mortgaged property..... then you shall be entitled to realize your money, from my person and property," the phrase 'your money' means, 'whatever is due to you' which includes interest on the principal amount of the mortgage.

Under the Mitakshara the son is liable to pay the debt incurred by the father, as the result of being a surety for payment of money lent and for delivery of goods. This liability of the son, however, is not higher than the pious obligation that rests on him for the payment of his father's personal debts, and is limited to his interest in the joint family property.

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Kumaun, dated October 27, 1936.

Mr. B. L. Dave, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Respondents.

Varma, J.—The appellant Daljit Singh was defendant No. 4 in the suit which was for the enforcement of a simple mortgage dated October 27, 1922 executed by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in lieu of an advance of Rs. 922-8-0 in favour of the plaintiff firm. The mortgagors, defendants Nos. 1 to 3, did not contest the suit. The appellant contested it on various grounds. The Courts below have decreed it and have provided in the decree that it shall be executed against the mortgagors and the mortgaged property in the first instance and that if the whole of the amount due to the plaintiff firm is not realized by sale of the mortgaged property.

"whatever amount remains due after the sale of the mortgaged property shall be recovered from the property of Daljit Singh, defendant, to the extent of Rs. 922-8-0."

As stated above, the mortgage deed in suit was executed on October 27, 1922. On the same day Tilok Singh, father of the appellant, executed a deed in favour of the mortgagee in these terms:

"I Tilok Singh execute this surety deed in favour of you, Lala Harkishan Lal Sah and brothers.....to the effect that since Har Singh had mortgaged with you together with house and all his rights and interest if your money is not realized from the said mortgaged property then you shall be entitled to realize your money, Rs. 922-8-0, from my person and property and I shall have no objection to it. I have therefore executed this deed of surety in order that it may serve as evidence."

No specific property belonging to Tilok Singh was anywhere mentioned in this deed and there is nothing to show that any charge was created on any property. This deed was registered. Tilok Singh is dead and his son, the appellant, has been impleaded by the plaintiff as a defendant on the allegation that he is liable to fulfil the obligation incurred by his father. The mortgage deed fixed a term of one year for payment. The suit was instituted on October 30, 1935. The Courts were closed from October 27 to 29, 1935 on account of Diwali, and so the suit was within 12 years from October 27, 1923 when the period of one year fixed in the mortgage deed for payment expired.

The first point raised on behalf of the appellant is that the suit against him was barred by time. It is argued that no charge having been created by Tilok Singh on any specific property, it was only a personal liability that was incurred by him. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court has accepted this contention of the appellant, and in our opinion his decision on this point is correct. But from that it does not follow that the contention of the appellant that time began to run so far as he was concerned from October 27, 1923 and that the suit should have been brought within six years from that date, is correct. The question as to when time began to run, so far as the surety was concerned, has to be decided on the terms of the contract of guarantee in each case. The undertaking given by Tilok Singh to the mortgagee was that if the latter's money was not realized from the property mortgaged by the mortgagors, then the mortgagee would be entitled to realize his money Rs. 922-8-0 from the surety. It seems to us that the clear intention of the parties was that the mortgagee was first to proceed against the mortgaged property and was to take every step that could be taken against it to realize his money, and that it was only when he failed to realize the whole amount due to him from the mortgaged property that he was to proceed against the surety. That being so, the argument that the suit against the surety had to be brought within six years from October 27, 1923 cannot be accepted. We hold therefore that the suit was not barred by time as against the appellant.

Next, it has, somewhat inconsistently with the first argument, been urged that the suit against the appellant is premature. In our opinion, this argument is without force. Section 128, Contract Act provides that the liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor unless it is otherwise provided by the contract. Here there is no contract to the contrary. That being so, the plaintiff firm was justified in impleading the surety also in the suit which it brought against the principal debtors. As mentioned above, the decree passed by the Courts below provides that the property mortgaged by the principal debtors shall be sold first, and that if the whole of the amount due to the decree-holder is not satisfied the decree shall be executed against the property of Daljit Singh to the extent of Rs. 922-8-0. Thus, the appellant's interests have been fully safeguarded.

The next point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant is that under the deed executed by Tilok Singh he had undertaken to pay to the mortgagee the principal money alone and no interest. He urges that the present claim being for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,173-13-9, which includes interest, the Courts below were not right in passing a decree in the terms in which they have done and that it should be made clear that the appellant is not liable to pay any interest whatsoever. The argument is that if the mortgaged property fetches more than Rs. 922-8-0 the appellant should not be called upon to pay anything at all, and that it is only when the property fetches less than Rs. 922-8-0 that he can be called upon to make good the deficiency to make up Rs. 922-8-0. In our opinion, this argument is not well-founded. The words used in the deed executed by Tilok Singh are: 'If your money is not realized.....' The phrase 'your money' means, 'whatever is due to you.' That includes interest. It seems to us that what the deed means is this; that if the mortgagee was not able to realize the whole amount due to him from the mortgaged property, then in that case Tilok Singh would be liable to make good the deficiency to the extent of Rs. 922-8-0. Accordingly, we hold that this argument put forward on behalf of the appellant is also without force.

The last point urged is that the appellant cannot under the law be made liable personally for the liability undertaken by his deceased father and that it should have been made clear in the decree that he was liable only to the extent of the joint family property in his hands. In our opinion, this contention is correct. Under the Mitakshara the son is liable to pay the debt incurred by the father as the result of being a surety for payment of money lent and for delivery of goods. This liability of the son however is not higher than the pious obligation that rests on him for the payment of his father's personal debts, and is limited to his interest in the joint family property. No authority to the contrary has been shown to us by learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondents. In the result we dismiss the appeal with costs, subject to the direction that it shall be made clear in the decree that if it has to be executed only against such joint family property, if any, as he may be found possessed of, and not against his person or personal property.

Decree—Ex parte—Suit for rent against A, B, C and D—Decree ex parte only against D and suit dismissed against rent—On motion by D to which A, B and C were not parties case remanded for re-trial—Decree then passed against all—A, B and C, if bound by it—Bengal Tenancy Act VIII of 1885, s. 148-B—Suit for rent—What plaintiff must establish.

A suit for rent instituted against A, B, C and D was dismissed as against the first three and was decreed ex parte against D on his failure to file a written statement. D filed a motion to which A, B and C were not made parties. The motion was heard and the case was remanded for re-trial. The suit was then decreed against all the four defendants:

Held, that as A, B and C were not parties to the motion they did not consent to the order passed therein and could not appeal against that order. It was open to them to take any objection they chose and to ignore the order passed on the motion. They were in no way bound by that order. Inasmuch as the suit had already been dismissed against A, B and C no decree could be passed against them in the subsequent suit.

It is not sufficient for a plaintiff to establish merely that the defendant is liable to pay a certain amount of rent. He must also establish the identity of the lands of the tenancy. No decree for rent should be passed until the Court is satisfied regarding the identity of the land with respect to which the rent is payable. The Court cannot leave the question of identity open because there can be no tenancy except with reference to a definite piece of land. 114 Ind. Cas. 148 (1) and 1 Ind. Cas. 379 (2), relied on.

A. from the appellate decree of the District Judge, Birbhum, dated March 17, 1937.

Messrs. Hari Prasanna Mukherjee and Bhuthnath Chatterji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Gour Mohan Dutt and Muktipada Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit for rent. The plaintiffs sued four persons, namely, defendants Nos. 1 to 4, for rent. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the Chaudhury and defendant No. 4 is Nagendra Nath Banerjee. The Choudhury filed a written statement but Banerjee did not file any. The defence taken by the Choudhury was inter alia that the plaintiffs did not sufficiently describe the land in the tenancy and therefore it offended against the provisions of s. 148-B, Ben. Ten. Act. On December 3, 1935, the plaintiffs represented to the trial Court that they did not intend to prosecute the suit as against the Choudhury. The suit was accordingly dismissed as against these defendants with costs. As defendant No. 4 had not filed a written statement the suit was decreed as against defendant No. 4 ex parte. From this ex parte decree defendant No. 4 filed a motion in the Court of the District Judge on December 23, 1935. It is now established that the Choudhury defendants, that is to say defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were not parties to this motion. After hearing the motion the learned District Judge passed the following order:

"The only point urged before me is that as the khatian numbers and the plot numbers are not given in the plaint though Record of Rights has been prepared there has been violation of the mandatory provisions of s. 148, Ben. Ten. Act, and hence the decree is bad. With the consent of both parties the decree of the learned Court below is set aside and the case remanded for re-trial according to law. The plaintiffs will be permitted to make suitable amendments in the plaint and all the defendants will be allowed to contest the suit if they so desire. No order is made as to costs."

After the case had been thus remanded summonses were issued not only on defendant No. 4, but also on defendant's Nos. 1 to 3. After the plaint had been amended by inserting therein certain dag numbers as a description of the lands of the tenancy the case was heard. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit against all the defendants. It held that the plaintiffs had failed to connect some of the plots mentioned in the plaint with the alleged tenancy but it decreed the suit inasmuch as the plaintiffs had succeeded in establishing that there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties and that the defendants used to pay rent at the rate claimed by the plaintiffs. The defendants appealed to the District Judge and the learned Judge came to the same findings and dismissed the appeal. Against this decision the present appeal has been filed. The arguments urged on behalf of the appellants may be divided into two parts. On behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 it is contended that the suit having once been dismissed as against them no decree could be passed against them in the present suit. It was pointed out that they were not parties to the motion before the District Judge and that they were not bound by any order passed therein. On this ground they contend that the decree in any event, cannot be binding on defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

The next branch of the argument is that as the land of the tenancy has not been identified no decree for rent should be passed as against any of the defendants. I should consider first the argument regarding the contention that no decree should be passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. In my opinion this contention must prevail. The suit was dismissed as against these defendants. In the motion they were not parties. Both the Courts below seem to have been under an erroneous impression that the order upon the motion was passed with the consent of these defendants. They also expressed the opinion that as these defendants had not appealed from that order they were bound thereby. Both these views are wrong. These defendants did not consent to any order passed in the motion inasmuch as they were not parties therein. These defendants further could not have appealed against that order for the same reason, namely that they were not parties to the motion.

It was open to them to take any objection they chose and to ignore the order passed on the motion. They were in no way bound by that order. The learned Advocates on behalf of the respondents point out that this point was not taken in the Courts below and that it should be held that these defendants waived this objection. A perusal of the judgments of both the Courts and of the written statement of these defendants satisfy me that in substance this objection was taken. It is true that in the written statement the objection was not taken in so many words but there was an objection taken to the effect that the suit having already been dismissed against them no suit lay. From the judgments it appears that these defendants did object to the suit proceeding as against them. As to the precise manner in which this objection was taken it is not possible to come to any definite conclusion because the arguments have not been set down in full in either of the judgments. But this much is clear, that the defendants were objecting that the order passed in the motion did not affect their rights which they had acquired by virtue of the fact that the suit had been dismissed as against them. I hold therefore that inasmuch as the suit had already been dismissed against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 no decree could be passed against them in the present suit.

I now come to the next point, namely whether any decree could be passed as against defendant No. 4. It is admitted that the plaintiffs have not been able to identify at least two of the seven plots mentioned in the plaint as forming land of the tenancy. The learned Judge seems to have attached too much importance to the fact that a tenancy existed at a rental of Rs. 6-10-0. It is not sufficient for a plaintiff to establish merely that the defendant is liable to a certain amount of rent. He must establish also the identity of the lands of the tenancy. This was laid down in Indu Bhusan Basu v. Jatindra Nath Roy (1). I would also refer in this connection to the case in Ram Deo Rai v. Newaj Prosad Singh (2). The learned Judge says that he is not in a position to express a definite opinion in regard to the identity of certain plots of land mentioned in the plaint as appertaining to the tenancy. He adds that he leaves this point open. Now, in my opinion, no decree for rent should be passed until the Court is satisfied regarding the identity of the land with respect to which the rent is payable. The Court cannot leave the question of identity open because there can be no tenancy except with reference to a definite piece of land. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit is liable to be dismissed on the ground that they have not been able to describe the land of the tenancy with sufficient precision. I accordingly set aside the decree passed by the Court below and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs. The appeal is allowed with costs.

Though the entries in the khewat should be presumed to be correct, such entries cannot be conclusive evidence under the provisions of s 44 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. [p. 158, col. 1]

So long as nobody interferes with a man's possession and enjoyment of his share in a property, the fact that his share is inaccurately recorded in the revenue papers does not affect his title to it. Although the settlement entry gives plaintiffs a cause of action the decree for rent gives them a fresh cause of action and a suit brought within six years of the decree is within time. S. C. A. against the decree of the Civil Judge, Gonda, dated October 16, 1935.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. N. Srivastava, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 18.

Judgment.—This is an appeal on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 against the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, (now Civil Judge) of Gonda, dated October 16, 1935, upholding the decree of the learned Munsif of the same place dated July 27, 1935.

The plaintiffs brought the suit for a declaration that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have no share in the under-proprietary khata in suit and that they are not bound by the decree for profits in the 2 annas 8 pies share passed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

In order to appreciate the facts of the case, it is necessary to give the following pedigree, which has not been disputed before us :

Ramniddh who belonged to the line of Nihal and representing the branches of Sewak Ram, Nihal and Bechu, obtained an under-proprietory decree in the first regular settlement of 1874 in respect of an area of 129 bighas 9 biswas in village Birpur Bhoj, (vide Ex. 27). In the year 1875 he applied for a division of the area into thoks, (vide Ex. 5), and five different thoks were formed as representing different branches of the common ancestor. The fard hissa kashi (Ex. 3) shows that the area was divided as follows :

	As.	Pies	krts.
(1) Bhawani Bux and Ram Dhar's line	4	3	4
(2) Ohbutkao and Sampat (of Suchit's line)	2	8
(3) Ramniddh Ganga and Salik	2	8
(4) Ram Dayal	2	8
(5) Mangal and Lachhman of Nihal's line	2	8
(6) Mathura	1	0	16

Total 16 Annas.

The khetauni was prepared on the above basis. It is thus clear that Ramniddh, Ganga and Salik, the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, got a 2 annas 8 pies share, that is one-sixth of 129 bighas 9 biswas. It appears that between the first and second settlement the family somehow lost 27 bighas and 2 biswas leaving an area of 102 bighas and 7 biswas only.

In 1890 the superior proprietor of the village, namely the Ajūdhia estate, brought a suit for ejectment against Ramniddh, Ganga and Salik for arrears of rent in respect of an area of 24 bighas and 17 biswas and obtained a decree, (vide Ex. 7), but it appears that the names of these persons continued to remain in the khewat as holders of 2 annas and 8 pies share. The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed a suit for profits of the above share in the Revenue Court against the plaintiffs, and defendants Nos. 3 to 10. The suit was dismissed, but it was decreed by the Appellate Court, and that decree was upheld by the Chief Court on February 6, 1935.

The plaintiffs, who represent the branches of Sewak and Bechu, brothers of Nihal, who was the father of Gurdin, brought the present suit for a declaration that the defendant Nos. 1 and 2 had no share in the khata in suit and that they were not entitled to claim profits from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' contention was that as the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had been ejected by the superior proprietor from their 2 annas 8 pies share, they lost all the right they had in the under-proprietory khata.

The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 represent the line of Gurdin and his brother Sahai who died issueless. Sahai's name is not given in the pedigree filed with the plaint, but it is to be found in the pedigree filed at the settlement, (vide Ex. 6). They denied the plaintiffs' claim and alleged that the superior proprietor had sued their predecessors Ramniddh and others for ejectment in the representative capacity of all the under-proprietors and thus the area of land in possession of all the co-sharers was reduced, that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and their predecessors had all along been in possession of the 2 annas 8 pies share and that they had been receiving profits from other co-sharers, that the suit for declaration without possession was not maintainable and that the claim was barred by limitation. The remaining defendants supported the plaintiffs' claim.

The learned Munsif framed the following issues :

- "1. Have the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 got no share in the plots in suit, as alleged by the plaintiffs ?
2. Is the present suit for declaration not maintainable ?
3. Is the present suit barred by time as alleged in para. 17 of the written statement ?"

The learned Munsif after discussing the oral and the voluminous documentary evidence came to the finding that the defendants, Nos. 1 and 2 held no share in the khata in suit. He further on Issue No. 2 held that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not in possession of any share and that their names wrongly continued to remain in the khewat, therefore the suit for declaration was maintainable and the plaintiffs were not required to sue for possession.

On Issue No. 3 the learned Munsif held that the suit was within time as the period of limitation started from February 6, 1935, when the suit for profits was finally decided by the Chief Court.

On appeal the learned Civil Judge confirmed the findings of the learned Munsif.

We have said that the total area was 129 bighas 9 biswas. An area of 27 bighas and 2 biswas was somehow lost, thus leaving an area of 102 bighas 7 biswas. Out of this an area of 24 bighas 17 biswas was lost by ejectment in the suit which was brought by the Ajudhia estate. Thus the total area left was 77 bighas 10 biswas.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the entries in the khewat should have been presumed to be correct. We agree with this contention, but such entries cannot be conclusive evidence under the provisions of s. 44 of the Land Revenue Act.

P. W. No. 1, who is one of the plaintiffs, stated on oath that the Ajudhia estate obtained possession of the land which was in possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. This statement has been believed by the lower Courts. It is also corroborated by the entries in khewat kar-i-khas, (Ex. 2), which refers to an order dated May 31, 1892, by which the names of Ramnidh and others were expunged and the rights in the area were noted to have ceased to exist and extinguished in favour of the talukdar. Exs. 8, 9, 10 and 11 are copies of the plaint, written statement, judgment and decree respectively of another ejectment proceeding in which the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Baleshwar had filed the suit to contest the notice of ejectment served on them by the Ajudhia estate as ordinary tenants. The plots from which they were sought to be ejected were the same as those in which they had lost the under-proprietary rights in the year 1890 as will appear on a comparison of Ex. 2 and Ex. 9 with the help of Ex. 19, the copy of the farid mutabiqat. It appears that after the ejectment decree of 1890 the same plots were let out to Ramnidh and others as ordinary tenants.

Exs. A-2 to A-6 are the copies of khewats for different years. The appellants rely on them because the names of Ramnidh and his successors are there as holders of the 2 annas 8 pies share in the under-proprietary khata, but it is clear to us that the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 lost the under-proprietary rights in 1890 but somehow their names were not removed from the khewats.

It was contended that the ejectment suit brought by the Ajudhia estate in the year 1890 against Ramnidh and others was brought in a representative character and therefore all the co-sharers should be considered to have been ejected from the area of 24 biswas 17 biswas. There is no justification for us to accept this contention as there is no evidence in support of it. The note in the remarks column of Exs. 1 and 2 shows that Ramnidh, Ganga and Ajudhia, holders of *khata*s Nos. 3, 4 and 5, were ejected and the numbers of specific plots are given. There is no doubt that on the application made in 1875 the khata was divided into several shares and each branch took possession of its share which was separately assessed to rent.

Ex. A-7 is a copy of an application which Ramnidh and others had made for correction of the entries in the khewat. They alleged that they had obtained a decree from the Settlement Court for 129 bighas and odd, and that the area in their possession was shown to be only 76 bighas and 10 biswas.

Ex. A-8 is the judgment passed on that application which shows that they were correctly entered as qabzadars and that the area given was correct as they had lost 27 bighas at the first settlement and were ejected from 24 bighas and 17 biswas of land in the year 1890.

Ex. A-9 and Ex. A-10 are the copies of orders in appeal which shows that the appeals were dismissed and the order of the first Court was upheld.

We do not see how these documents help the appellants. Ramnidh tried to get back the land from which he was ejected, but failed in his attempt.

Reference was made by the learned Counsel for the appellants to Exs. A-11, A-12, A-13 and A-14.

Exs. A-11 and A-12 are the copies of judgments in the case for arrears of rent. These documents do not show that Ramnidh or his successors were in possession of any under-proprietary khata.

Ex. A-13 is the copy of the judgment of the Commissioner in the same case.

Ex. A-14 is the copy of objections filed by Raj Dhar plaintiff No. 7 and Nand Kumar, predecessor of plaintiff No. 8, in the mutation case which the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had filed after the death of their father Beni Madho. The objectors had alleged that the names of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 should not be recorded as sharers in the under-proprietary khata.

Ex. A-15 is the judgment in that case and shows that the objections were dismissed and the names of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were entered in the khewat as holders of 2 annas 8 pies share. It was held that as the share was entered in the name of Beni Madho, their father, therefore it should be entered in the names of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the objectors were directed to seek their remedy in the Civil Court. The order is dated November 9, 1920.

Reference was also made to Exs. A-20, A-16, A-17, A-18, A-19 and A-21.

Ex. A-20 is the report of the Tahsildar in the mutation case.

Ex. A-16 is the judgment passed by one of us sitting singly in the case for profits brought by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The suit was decreed on the basis of the entry of the names of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the khewat.

Ex. A-17 is the khewat for 1310 Fasli. It shows that a 1 anna 4 pies share was mutated in the name of Tirbhuwan Nath after Ramnidh's death.

Ex. A-18 is the khewat for 1311 Fasli which shows that the names of Baleshwar and Dharaj Ram were entered in place of Dharkan.

Ex. A-19 is the khewat for 1317 Fasli and shows that the name of Baleshwar was entered in place of Dharaj Ram.

Ex. A-21 is the khewat for 1332 Fasli and shows that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 held a 1 anna and 4 pies share which Baleshwar held and that mutation of this share was effected in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on July 24, 1924.

The substance of the chief documents relied on by the learned Counsel for the appellants is that the names of the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were entered in the khewat as holders of the 2 annas 8 pies share in the under-proprietary khata, while on the other hand the khetannis filed and relied on by the plaintiffs, Exs. 12 to 18, 20 to 25, prove that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 or their predecessors were never in possession of any of the plots in the under proprietary khata. There is no doubt in our mind that Ramnidh, Ganga and Ajudhia, the predecessors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were ejected from 24 bighas and 17 biswas of land which formed part of their share and the possession of it went to the Ajudhia estate. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 lost all the rights they held in that khata. As we have said the entries in the khewats are not conclusive proof of title and the plaintiffs have discharged the burden and rebutted satisfactorily the presumption raised by such entries.

We may mention that the learned Counsel for the appellants tried to explain the ejectment proceedings, but in our opinion there is no explanation, and the facts are very clear. The suit by the Ajudhia estate for ejectment in 1890 against Ramnidh, Ganga and Ajudhia was not in the representative capacity of all the under-proprietors. We therefore agree with the finding of the lower Courts that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have got no share in the plots in suit as alleged by the plaintiffs.

The next point raised by the learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant is the question of limitation. In the year 1920 the appellants applied for mutation of names in place of their father Beni Madho and Raj Dhar, respondent No. 7, and Nand Kumar now represented by Mst. Rani, his widow, respondent No. 8, filed objections (vide Ex. A-14), but they were dismissed on November 9, 1920, and the objectors were directed to seek their remedy in the Civil Court and mutation was effected in favour of the appellants, (vide the judgment Ex. A-15, to which we have already referred). The case of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is that as the objections were dismissed on November 9, 1920, the period of limitation began to run from that date. Reliance was placed on Art. 120 of the Lim. Act which gives a period of six years for such suits, and the period begins when the right to sue accrues, which, according to the appellant's Counsel, is November 9, 1920. The following cases were relied on, on behalf of the appellants :

1. A. I. R. 1922 Allahabad, 115, (Gopal Das v. Shri Thakur Ganga Beharji Maharaj) (1), 2. A. I. R. 1927 Lahore, 119, (Smail v. Bahab) (2), 3. A. I. R. 1927 Madras, 568, (*Suryanarayana v. On reading these cases it will appear that they have no bearing on the question before us. The only case which may be said to help the appellants to some extent is the case reported in 3 O. W. N., 896 (Mahabir Pattak v. Jageshar Pattak) (9).

In the first case (A. I. R. 1922 Allahabad, 115) (Gopal Das v. Shri Thakur Ganga Behariji Maharaj) (1), the plaintiff sued in 1919 on the allegation that in 1918 he came to know of the wrong entry. It was argued that the limitation began to run from the date of the wrong entry. It was held that mere entry in the village papers would not of itself give the plaintiff a cause of action.

In A. I. R. 1927 Lahore, 119, (Smail v. Bahab) (2), the revenue record showed that the land in suit was entered in the column of ownership in the names of the plaintiffs and the defendants since 1872. In 1897 an attempt was made by the plaintiffs to have the revenue record altered and their names entered not only as in sole possession but as sole owners. This application was rejected. In 1921 one of the defendants applied for partition of the land in suit. The plaintiffs pleaded their title and were referred by the revenue authorities to the Civil Court. It was held that the application for partition was an act of invasion which gave a new cause of action.

This case if anything helps the respondents and not the appellants.

In A. I. R. 1927 Madras, 568, (Suryanarayana v. Bullayya) (3), it was held that in a suit for declaration that an entry in the Record of Rights that the defendants are ryots with permanent rights of occupancy is wrong is not barred by reason of the fact that the defendants had, in a previous suit more than six years of the institution of the suit for declaration, set up rights of permanent occupancy in the written statement as against the plaintiffs and to their knowledge, the cause of action based on the entry in Record of Rights being an independent one from the one based on such denial.

This case if anything supports the contention of the respondents.

In A. I. R. 1927, Cal. 30, (Abdul Ghafur Chowdhury v. Abdul Jabbar Mia) (4), the only cause of action alleged was a wrong entry in the Record of Rights, and it was held that in a suit for declaration limitation would run from the date of final publication of the Record of Rights.

In 1 P. L. J. 73, (Sheikh Amirud Din v. Sheikh Saidur Rahman) (5), the suit was under s. 111-A of the Ben. Ten. Act. In the Record of Rights which was published on November 14, 1905, the plaintiff was shown as a tenant liable to pay rent to the defendant. The defendant obtained a decree for rent against the plaintiff on August 1, 1912. On October 7, 1912 the plaintiff instituted a suit for a declaration that he was a lakheraj tenant and that he was not liable to pay rent to the defendants. It was held that the suit was substantially one under the Ben. Ten. Act, 1885, and therefore the cause of action will be from the date of the publication of the Record of Rights.

On a perusal of the judgment it will appear that this case has no bearing on the present case.

It is not necessary to discuss the remaining cases, excepting the case reported in 3 O. W. N., 896, (Mahabir Pattak v. Jogeshar Pattak) (9), as we are of opinion that they have no bearing.

In the case reported in 3 O. W. N. (Mahabir Pattak v. Jogeshar Pattak) (9), the wrong entry was made at the instance of the plaintiff himself and the application for correction of khewat did not give the plaintiff a fresh cause of action. The earlier cases referred to in this judgment were distinguished on the ground that the erroneous entries were made behind the back of the plaintiff.

In the present appeal the entry was made behind the back of all the plaintiffs except plaintiffs Nos. 7 and 8.

This case was distinguished in the case reported in 10 O. W. N., 366, (Sukhdasi Kuar v. Fateh Bahadur Singh) (10). At p. 374 it is stated as follows:—

"Lastly it was contended that the suit was barred by limitation ... The plaintiff had no grievance against the entries until the defendants asserted title on their basis for the first time in February 1930. It is this wrong assertion which constitutes the cause of action for the present suit."

The case in 3 O. W. N. 896, (Mahabir Pattak v. Jogeshar Pattak) (9), was again distinguished in the case reported in 11 O. W. N. 1297, (Bhagwati Prasad v. Chauharja) (11), in which it was held that where it is alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff had been all along in possession of the land in suit and that his application for correction of jamabandi had been dismissed by the Revenue Court and a cloud had been cast upon his title, a suit for declaration of title brought within time, calculating limitation to begin from the date of the order of the Revenue Court, is not time-barred.

(10) 10 O W N 366 (374); 141 Ind. Cas. 316; A I R 1933 Oudh 283; Ind. Rul. (1933) Oudh 237.

We may again point out that in the mutation proceedings the objections were filed not by all the plaintiffs, but only by Raj Dhar, respondent No. 7, and Nand Kumar, who is now represented by Musamat Rani, his widow, respondent No. 8. It is difficult to understand how the suit could be barred against the other plaintiffs who had nothing to do with the mutation proceedings. The cloud against them was cast when the appellants' suit for profits for the years 1336, 1337 and 1338 Fasli, was decreed by this Court on February 6, 1935, and if we take this date as the starting of the period of limitation, the suit is within time. In our opinion the decisions reported in 12 O. C., 320 (Jevanand v. Beni Madho) (12) and 7 O. L. J., 237, (Baij Nath Singh v. Arjin Singh) (13), apply to the present case.

In the case reported in 12 O. C. 320 (Jevanand v. Beni Madho) (12), it was held that although the settlement entry gave plaintiffs a cause of action the decree for rent gave them a fresh cause of action and the present suit brought within six years of the decree was within time. When plaintiff has got a right every invasion of that right gives him a fresh cause of action.

In the case reported in 7 O. L. J. 237, (Baij Nath Singh v. Arjin Singh) (13), it was held that so long as nobody interferes with a man's possession and enjoyment of his share in a property, the fact that his share is inaccurately recorded in the revenue papers does not affect his title to it.

The finding of the lower Courts is that the plots comprising 77 odd bighas of land have all along been in the exclusive possession of the plaintiffs, and the appellants had no interest left in this area. Nor had they ever been in possession of any portion of it, or received any profits before. We therefore agree with the lower Courts that the suit is not barred by limitation.

In the plaint one of the reliefs sought was that "the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not entitled to get and recover from the plaintiffs Rs. 71-8-6, the amount of profits and the costs decreed by the Court of the District Judge, Gonda, in Case No. 51 of 1932, re: Kamta Prasad and others, appellants versus Ram (12) 12 O C 320; 4 Ind. Cas. 159.

Ujagar and others respondents, decided on January 24, 1933."

This is the case in which the decree for mesne profits passed by the learned Judge was affirmed by this Court on February 6, 1935. The learned Counsel on behalf of the respondents has not pressed for this declaration. He simply stated that he wanted the rights of his clients to be protected in future. He further stated that the amount of profits which had been decreed in favour of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 has been realised by them. Under the circumstances we do not think it necessary to decide the question whether any such declaration can be granted. We have held that the appellants have got no share in the plots in suit as alleged by the plaintiffs and their names were wrongly entered in the revenue papers. It therefore follows that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in future cannot get any mesne profits with regard to the disputed land.

Lastly it was half heartedly suggested that the suit for mere declaration was not maintainable. It has been found by the lower Courts that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not in possession of any share and that their names were wrongly entered in the khewat, and we have agreed with these findings, the suit therefore is maintainable.

We therefore uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs against defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

C. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1922), s. 45 (1)—Interested in contract with Municipality—Night soil auctioned—Deposit of full price, condition of sale—Highest bid accepted—Part of purchase price deposited—Auction-purchaser selling manure to another who paying full price, removing it—Subsequent purchaser cousin of member—Night soil thrown on member's field—Another member helping in removal—Members if "interested" in contract with Committee.

There was an auction sale of night soil manure belonging to a Municipality and one M purchased it for Rs. 625. Under the condition attached to the sale, he had to pay the full price immediately and until payment he was not entitled to remove the material. He paid Rs. 300. He borrowed Rs. 325 from one N who deposited that amount with the Municipal Committee. Being unable to pay off the loan, he sold the manure to N for Rs. 625 on receipt of Rs. 300 in cash and in adjustment of the loan of Rs. 325. N was the natural brother of H one of the accused. N got permission from the Committee to remove the manure. Thereon the accused got it removed through the Municipal sweepers to H's field. The other accused G who was also a member of the Committee, helped the accused H by giving Municipal sweepers, in the removal of the manure:

Held, that the contract could not be discharged until the conditions were fulfilled, i. e., by payment of the full price. The transaction could be characterised as a "contract" even after the property in the manure had passed to M, the highest bidder, and by the purchase of the manure from M after he became owner of it, H could be regarded as having become interested in a contract with the Municipal Committee. [p. 164, col. 1; p. 162, col. 2]

Held, also that G who simply assisted in the removal of the stuff could be regarded as a person interested in the contract with the Municipal Committee. The word 'interested', in s. 45 (1), C. P. Municipal Act, is to be interpreted in its ordinary wide sense and not confined to interest in money and includes jobbery. 121 Ind. Cas. 819 (2), explained and commented upon. Cr. R. App. of the order of the Court of the Sessions Judge, East Berar Division, Amraoti, dated January 12, 1939.

Order of Reference

Niyogi, J.—(June 20, 1939).—This is an application to revise the order of the Sessions Judge, Amraoti, passed in Criminal Appeal No. 269 of 1938 on January 12, 1939.

The applicants Nos. 1 and 2, who are members of the Municipal Committee, Morsi, were convicted of the offence punishable under s. 108, I. P. C., read with s. 45 (1) of the C. P. Municipal Act, and sentenced to pay fines. On appeal the convictions were upheld but the fines were reduced.

The facts are that on February 4, 1938, there was an auction-sale of night soil manure and one Motisa purchased it for Rs. 625. Under the condition attached to the sale, he had to pay the full price immediately and until payment he was not entitled to remove the material. He paid Rs. 300 and on February 16, 1938, he obtained 6 days' time to pay the balance. He borrowed Rs. 325 from one Narayandas who deposited that amount with the Municipal Committee on March 2, 1938. He being unable to pay off the loan, sold the manure to Narayandas for Rs. 625 on receipt of Rs. 300 in cash and in adjustment of the loan of Rs. 325. Narayandas was the natural brother of Hazarimal (applicant No. 1) but became his first cousin by adoption. Applicant No. 2 Matagulam is not related to them.

After having purchased the manure from Motisa, Narayandas got permission from the Municipal Committee to remove it. Thereon the applicants got it removed through the Municipal sweepers to applicant No. 1's field. When the matter was brought to the notice of the Deputy Commissioner, he, after Police enquiry, ordered the prosecution of the applicants. Both the Courts below have found that Narayandas and the applicant No. 1 were joint in estate, that Hazarimal purchased the manure from Motisa with the consent of applicant No. 1, that the applicants, who are members of the Committee, engaged sweepers for the removal of the stuff and that it was taken to and deposited in the field of applicant No. 1. The prosecution contended that Motisa's bid was benami for applicant No. 1 but that contention was overruled.

To induce this Court to reverse the finding as to applicant No. 1's consent, it is urged that the statement to that effect made by P. W. No. 3. Motisa was not admissible. It is true that the only evidence to prove the consent was Motisa's (P. W. No. 3's) recounting in the witness-box of Narayandas's statement to him that Narayandas was purchasing the manure with the consent of applicant No. 1 but I cannot accept the contention that it was inadmissible. It was an admission made by Narayandas on behalf of applicant No. 1 who is a party to this proceeding and was therefore admissible under s. 18 of the Evl. Act. The prosecution refrained from examining Narayandas presumably for the reason that he being interested in applicant No. 1 would not say the truth. He could certainly have been examined as a witness for the defence and the omission to so examine him serves to corroborate the truth of Motisa's evidence.

The other findings are also attacked but I see no reason to interfere with them.

Nor do I see any force in the contention that sanction for prosecuting the applicants was necessary under s. 197, Criminal P. O. in view of the ruling in Dulloomiya v. Tularam (1).

The important questions which arise in this case are

- (i) whether the transaction can be characterised as a "contract" even after the property in the manure had passed to Motisa, the highest bidder, and whether, by the purchase of the manure from Motisa after he became owner of it, the applicant No. 1 can be regarded as having become interested in a contract with the Municipal Committee?

- (ii) whether the applicant No. 2 who simply assisted in the removal of the stuff can be regarded as a person interested in the contract with the Municipal Committee?

These questions are of great public importance and are likely to recur. Both parties regard this as a test case. I, therefore, think that a Bench of this Court should pronounce an authoritative opinion on these points.

This case will be submitted to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for reference to a Bench.

OPINION

Niyogi and Gruer, JJ. — (September 4, 1939).—This is a reference made to a Division Bench for the solution of two questions arising out of Criminal Revision No. 105 of 1939.

The two applicants in that revision, Hazarimal and Matagulam, who are members of the Municipal Committee, Morsi, were convicted by a Magistrate, First Class, Morsi, for an offence punishable under s. 163, I. P. C., read with s. 45 (1), C. P. Municipalities Act and sentenced to payment of fines. In appeal to the Sessions Judge, Amraoti, the convictions were upheld although the fines were reduced. Section 45 (1) of the C. P. Municipalities Act reads as follows :

"If any member, officer or servant of a Committee is, without the written permission of the Deputy Commissioner, directly or indirectly interested in any contract with such Committee, he shall be deemed to have committed an offence under s. 163 of the I. P. C."

The facts were that on February 4, 1933, the night soil manure collected by the Municipality was auctioned publicly, and the highest bid, that of one Motisa (Rs. 625) was accepted. Motisa being unable to pay Rs. 325 out of this amount borrowed that sum from Narayandas, who is a cousin of accused No. 1 Hazarimal. Narayandas paid the amount on behalf of Motisa, and Motisa being unable to repay him sold the manure itself on the same day to Narayandas. Narayandas engaged sweepers to dig out the manure and other labourers to remove it to a field held jointly by himself and his cousins Narayandas and Hemraj. He supervised the work himself while Matagulam who is his friend also engaged labourers for this work and employed sweepers of the committee to dig out the trenches. Amongst other defences it was contended that s. 45 (1), was in terms inapplicable to these facts, and the two questions now before us are framed as below :

"(i) Whether the transaction can be characterised as a 'contract' even after the property in the manure had passed to Motisa, the highest bidder, and whether, by the purchase of the manure from Motisa after he became owner of it, the applicant No. 1 can be regarded as having become interested in a contract with the Municipal Committee?"

"(ii) Whether the applicant No. 2 who simply assisted in the removal of the stuff can be regarded as a person interested in the contract with the Municipal Committee?"

It is argued for the applicants that by the time they took any hand in this matter the contract was already completed and wound up, and so there was no longer any subsisting contract in which they could be interested. Section 64 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act is quoted : the sale was complete as soon as the hammer fell in the auction, and it made no difference that part of the sale price remained to be paid and delivery of the goods had to be obtained. It is said that performance of the contract does not include delivery, and reliance is placed on the finding that there is no proof that this transaction was benami : it was a case of a purchase from a previous purchaser and if the Municipality had refused delivery they could have been sued as tortfeasors by the second purchaser. For the second applicant reliance is placed on Emperor v. Narbada Prasad (2), which limits the meaning of 'interested' in such a case to 'financially interested.'

It is pointed out by learned Counsel for the non-applicant that although no doubt by s. 64 of the Sale of Goods Act the sale was complete and property passed when the hammer fell still the sale was one with conditions, and until these were fulfilled the contract remained in force. The lower Appellate Court in para. 1 of its judgment mentions these conditions which are found in Ex. P-16. They are :

"That the full purchase money shall be paid immediately and that the manure shall not be allowed to be removed until such time as the full money is not paid. That the manure shall be removed and trenches emptied within one month and 15 days from the date of the auction, failing which the unremoved manure shall become the property of the Municipal Committee."

If a suit arose out of a breach of these conditions then, in our opinion, it would undoubtedly be one under the contract which remained alive until the conditions were fulfilled. At p. 10 of his work on the Law of Contracts, second edition, Venkatesa Iyer points out five ways in which they may be discharged. The first is by performance :

"Where a party performs his obligation according to the tenor of the contract and at the time stipulated, then the vinculum juris or the tie binding the parties is dissolved."

In the present case the contract would not be discharged until the conditions were fulfilled. At p. 868 Iyer says dealing with s. 4 of the Sale of Goods Act :

"As a contract of sale includes both a sale and an agreement to sell, it follows that both of them may be conditional."

And again :

"Parties may attach certain consequences to the non-fulfilment of conditions, (e. g.), mutual discharge of obligations."

So in the present case the vendee bound himself to remove the manure within a certain time failing which it was forfeited to the Committee. The law is similarly set forth in Anson's Law of Contract, Chap. XIII, s. 3. See also Chap. IV of the Indian Contract Act, ss. 37 to 40 and s. 55.

It cannot be denied that Hazarimal had a direct and personal interest in seeing that the manure was spread on the field which he held jointly with Narayandas and Hemraj because he stood to gain from the improvement thereby expected in the crops. We answer both parts of the first question in the affirmative.

Learned Counsel would distinguish the cases of Hazarimal and Matagulam, and relies on Emperor v. Narbada Prasad (2). Matagulam, it is said, only helped Narayandas out of friendship and was not himself financially interested. The learned Judges in the Allahabad case said :

"An 'interest in a contract' we hold to mean a financial interest, with profit or hope of profit from the contract as the object of the person interested."

A financial interest seems to have been alleged by the prosecution in that case, but if the learned Judges meant that no other kind of interest could come under the section we respectfully disagree. If it was what they meant they gave no reason for saying so. In Nutton v. Wilson (3) Lord Esher, M. R. said that provisions of this kind

"are intended to prevent the members of Local Boards, which may have occasion to enter into contracts, from being exposed to temptation, or even to the semblance of temptation" and again Lindley, L. J., said that "the object..... was to prevent the conflict between interest and duty that might otherwise inevitably arise."

A person can take a deep interest in a thing without being influenced by motives of gain at all. He may be greatly interested in the welfare of a friend and that interest may conflict with his duty. So in the present case if the question of the forfeiture of the manure had come up before the Board Matagulam's interest in Narayandas and the carrying out of the contract on his behalf might well have induced him to favour Narayandas instead of looking at the question with the unprejudiced eye of a dutiful member of the Municipal Committee. Matagulam, according to the evidence, even went so far as to threaten the sweepers with dismissal if they did not remove the manure. He was taking advantage of his position as a member of the Committee to put pressure on the sweepers to work out of hours and on behalf of private persons. In our opinion, the word 'interested' is to be interpreted in its ordinary wide sense and not confined to interest in money. The English case of Hunnings v. Williamson (4) did in fact involve financial interest, but the section of the Metropolitan Management Act, 1855, in question (s. 54) contains the words "concerned or interested" and which are words of general and wide significance, and we think that the word 'interested' in the Indian Act must be given a reasonably wide application. In doing so, of course, one must bear in mind that the intention underlying s. 45 (1) of the Municipalities Act is to prevent jobbery and impure administration. Where the interest proved could not possibly lead to corruption then the word could be interpreted in favour of the accused. But there is also the other consideration on which stress is laid in A. B. v. Emperor (5) : for instance at p. 59.

"It is clear it was intended that all, and every description of jobbing by the Corporation should be put an end to as far as mere legislation could do it" and again at p. 61*.

"All such provisions . . . are designed to put a check on every kind of jobbery, and every fraudulent or improper use of office, by Municipal members and servants."

It is clear that both in England and in India such restrictions upon public servants such as councillors in their private dealings are meant to be most stringent, and effect must be given to them.

Our answer to the second question is therefore also in the affirmative.

Order.—The two questions of law which were referred to a Bench for opinion have been answered in the affirmative. The convictions of both the applicants must therefore stand.

As to the sentence I think there is room for consideration. In the circumstances of the case the applicants might in good faith, though erroneously, have believed that their conduct did not contravene the law and as the convictions are likely to disqualify them from continuing as members of the Committee, I reduce the sentences of fines passed against Hazarimal and Matagulam to Rs. 50 and Rs. 25 respectively.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 58, s. 47—Objection by party to suit under O. XXI, r. 58 dismissed summarily as collusive—Subsequent application under s. 47, if barred by res judicata.

Where an objection under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C., made by a party to the suit to an attachment of property in execution of decree is dismissed summarily as being collusive, without any enquiry, the dismissal must be deemed to have been on the ground that objection under O. XXI, r. 58 was not competent. The question of res judicata does not arise in such a case and subsequent application by the party under s. 47 is not barred.

Ex. S. A. from an order of the District Judge Amritsar, dated March 9, 1939.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Chandar Gupta, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal arising out of execution proceedings relating to a decree. A certain house was attached by the decree-holder upon which one Daulat Ram put in objection under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C., claiming the house as his exclusive property. The objection was summarily dismissed on February 19, 1937, without investigation on the ground that it appeared to be collusive. Daulat Ram then instituted a declaratory suit to establish his right but the suit was dismissed on June 23, 1937, on the ground that the suit was not brought under s. 47, Civil P. C., as Daulat Ram was a party to the suit in which the decree had been obtained and, therefore, his objection should have been under s. 47, Civil P. C. Daulat Ram then put in a second objection petition under s. 47, Civil P. C. This was allowed by the executing Court but the learned District Judge held on appeal that the second objection petition was not competent in view of the dismissal of the first petition under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C., as the first petition also must in law be held to have been under s. 47, Civil P. C. He accordingly dismissed the objection petition of Daulat Ram as incompetent. He has preferred a second appeal.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that there was no objection to a second petition being entertained in the circumstances of this case as the first petition purported to have been made under O. XXI, r. 58 and was summarily dismissed without any enquiry. He contended that there could be no question of any res judicata in the circumstances and therefore the second objection petition under s. 47, was competent and ought to have been decided on merits. This contention appears to me to be sound. There are no doubt authorities in which it has been held that even if an objection petition is made under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C., the decision may operate as res judicata, but the circumstances of those cases are clearly distinguishable inasmuch as the objection was either decided on merits or in circumstances where the rule of constructive res judicata would come into operation. In the present instance, the objection purported to be under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil P. C. and was treated as such by the Court. No notice of the objection was issued to the opposite side and the objection was dismissed summarily on the ground that it appeared to be collusive. In these circumstances it seems to me clear that there could be no question of even constructive res judicata. The first objection in the present case must be held to have been dismissed merely because it was incompetent under O. XXI, r. 68, Civil P. C. The second objection under s. 47, Civil P. C., was certainly competent and in the absence of any objection as to limitation or res judicata I do not see why it should not have been disposed of on merits. I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge, remand the case to him for decision of the objection on merits. Stamp on appeal will be refunded, costs will follow final decision. The parties are directed to appear before the learned District Judge on November 14, 1939.

BOROUGH MUNICIPALITY OF NADIAD—

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Bombay District Municipal Act (III of 1901), ss. 3 (13), 50 (2), 90 (5)—Municipality declaring private street as public one—Soil of such street, if belongs to Municipality—Whether can be claimed by person.

From the definition of "public street" in s. 3 (13), Bom. District Municipal Act, it does not follow that the soil of every public street must necessarily be of the ownership of the Municipality. Section 50, sub-s. (2) (f), says that all public streets, and the pavements, stones and other materials thereof and also all trees, erections, materials, implements and things provided for such streets shall be vested in and belong to the Municipality, and shall be held and applied by them as trustees. Unless it is definitely proved that the soil of any public street belongs to the Municipality, it cannot be presumed to be of the ownership of the Municipality merely on the ground that it is used as a public street. In fact s. 90, sub-s. (5), contemplates a private street being declared by the Municipality as a public street, but thereby the soil of such street does not come to be of the ownership of the Municipality. The only effect of such a declaration is that the street is allowed to be used by the public, and the public can claim a right of way over it as contemplated by s. 3, sub-s. (13) (a) of the Act. Therefore the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer that certain land was a public street does not declare that the Municipality was the owner of the soil of the street. On failure of a person to file a suit within one year after the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer, he is debarred from challenging the Municipality's claim that the land is a public street; but he is not debarred from claiming that even though it is a public street, the soil of the street belongs to him. Modhu Sudan Kundu v. Promoda Nath Roy (3), relied on. [p. 168, cols. 1 & 2.]

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Nadiad, in Appeal No. 144 of 1936.

Mr. J. C. Shah, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Vidyarthi, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title to the land under and in front of Marudia Khadki in Kovada pole and the chowk in front of his house and the room in Nadiad, and for a permanent injunction restraining the Nadiad Borough Municipality from obstructing him in the enjoyment of his said site as its owner. The defendant Municipality contended that the plaintiff was not the owner of the site of the Khadki at the time of the City Survey Enquiry in the year 1916, the Khadki having been declared to be a public street, and the plaintiff's suit having been time-barred as it was not filed within one year after the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer. The trial Court framed two preliminary issues as to whether the suit was bad for want of necessary parties, and whether the suit was not in time as contended by the defendant Municipality; and it recorded findings in the affirmative on both the issues and dismissed the suit. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decree, and the plaintiff has come in appeal. As regards the want of necessary parties, it is evident that the plaintiff is not, nor does he claim to be the exclusive owner of the entire Khadki. There are several houses in the Khadki, and even on the admission of the plaintiff, the owners of these houses have an interest in the Khadki. The proper course for the plaintiff was either to file a suit on behalf of all the owners under O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., if it was permissible for him to do so, or to join them as parties to the suit. However non-joinder of parties is not fatal to the suit, and it is still open to the plaintiff to rectify the defect by joining the other owners of the houses in the Khadki either as plaintiffs or defendants.

As regards the other contention of the defendant Municipality, that the plaintiff should have filed a suit within one year after the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer declaring the Khadki to be a public street, it is necessary to consider certain material facts. The plaintiff alleged that he had no notice of the enquiry by the City Survey Enquiry Officer nor of the order passed by him. The City Survey Enquiry was made in 1915-16, and Ex. 16 shows that Chalta Nos. 1224 and 1225, which formed the Khadki of the site in dispute, were declared to be part of a public street on July 17, 1916. As against Chalta No. 1225, a note was made that it was claimed by the owners of Chalta Nos. 1210-1223 as possessed and owned by them. Against both Chalta Nos. 1224 and 1225 it was noted in col. 5 that it was of the joint ownership of the owners of Chalta Nos. 1210-1223, that is to say, the owners of the houses standing on the Khadki. Chalta No. 1224 is described as Khadki and Chalta No. 1225 as Padtar. In col. 10 a note was made against both the numbers that no evidence was produced, that they were decided to be part of a public street, that members of the same family were not found to be residing in that street, and that the Municipality had got certain otlas from that pole removed. It is admitted that no protest was made by the residents in that Khadki against the order of the City Survey Enquiry Officer, nor was any suit filed within one year thereafter. The lower Courts have observed that on that account the present suit is barred under s. 64, Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925. By this they really mean that it is barred under s. 50-A, Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901, which was in force when the City Survey Enquiry Officer's order was passed. Sub-section (1) of s. 50-A of that Act provides as follows :

"In any Municipal District to which a survey of lands other than lands ordinarily used for the purposes of agriculture only has been or shall be extended under any law for the time being in force, where any property or any right in or over any property is claimed by or on behalf of the Municipality, or by any person as against the Municipality it shall be lawful for the Collector after formal enquiry, of which due notice has been given to pass an order deciding the claim."

It is clear from this that before an order deciding a claim is passed, it is necessary that the Collector or the City Survey Enquiry Officer must give due notice to the parties concerned and then hold a formal enquiry. If after such an enquiry a decision is given, sub-s. (2) of s. 50-A of the Act provides that any suit instituted in any Civil Court after the expiration of one year from the date of such an order shall be dismissed, (although limitation has not been set up as a defence), if the suit is brought to set aside such order or if the relief claimed is inconsistent with such order, provided that the plaintiff has had due notice of such an order.

The plaintiff contends that he does not know if any formal enquiry was held by the City Survey Enquiry Officer, that he did not receive any notice of any such formal enquiry, and that he did not receive any notice of the order passed by the City Survey Enquiry Officer as required by sub-s. (3) of s. 50-A, Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901. All these contentions were rightly disallowed by the lower Courts. The extract from the Survey Register (Ex. 16) clearly shows that the owners of the houses in the Khadki did appear and put forward their claim at least to the Khadki Chalta No. 1225 as the note in col. 9, shows. The remark made by the City Survey Enquiry Officer in col. 10, that no evidence was produced shows that he expected the said claimants to appear before him and adduce evidence in support of their contention. In the absence of evidence he came to his decision from surrounding circumstances and held that both Chalta Nos. 1224 and 1225 were part of a public street. From these circumstances it may be presumed that a formal enquiry must have been held by the City Survey Enquiry Officer after giving due notices to the parties concerned as required by sub-s. (1) of s. 50-A of the Act. This could have been proved by the direct evidence of the notices and other proceedings held by the City Survey Enquiry Officer, but unfortunately those proceedings have now been destroyed, as seen from the reply given by the Mamlatdar of Nadiad to the plaintiff (Ex. 15). According to Ill. (e) to s. 114, Evi. Act, judicial and official acts may be presumed to have been regularly performed. There was no special reason why the City Survey Enquiry Officer should have omitted to follow the procedure laid down in s. 50-A, Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901. Presumably the order passed by the City Survey Enquiry Officer must have been communicated to the plaintiff and other persons interested. In fact sanads must have been issued to the owners of the houses in the Khadki in respect of those houses. No such sanad has been produced by or on behalf of the plaintiff. From the sanad it could have been seen whether the Khadki which is one of the boundaries was or was not shown as a public street.

When the defendant Municipality came in the way of constructing otlas in the Khadki, the residents of the houses in the Khadki made an application to the District Deputy Collector on August 13, 1923, (Ex. 27), requesting that the Khadki should be declared to be of their private ownership. That application was rejected, and an appeal was preferred to the Collector on October 25, 1923, (Ex. 28). The Collector also rejected that appeal on the ground that the claim was time-barred. At least when this application and the appeal were presented, the plaintiff had come to know the order passed by the City Survey Enquiry Officer, and no suit was filed even within one year after that. Subsequently, on July 9, 1929, the plaintiff built an otla and a privy on a portion of the Khadki, and the defendant Municipality ordered their removal. This suit was not filed even within one year after that. It is thus clear that the presumption that the procedure laid down in s. 50-A, Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901, must have been followed by the City Survey Enquiry Officer before deciding that the Khadki in suit was a public street stands un rebutted. It is also to be presumed that the decision was communicated to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff admittedly came to know of it at least in the year 1923; and if the plaintiff wants to have that decision set aside or asks for any relief which is inconsistent with that decision, then his claim is barred under sub-s. (2) of s. 50-A, District Municipal Act.

But the matter does not rest there. The plaintiff is at liberty to ask for any relief in respect of the Khadki if that relief is not inconsistent with the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer. The wording of that decision is "decided to be part of a public street," which does not mean that the soil of that street belonged to or was vested in the Municipality. The expression "public street" is defined in s. 3, cl. (13), as follows:

"Public street" shall mean any street—

(a) over which the public have a right of way, or (b) heretofore levelled, paved, metalled, channelled, sewered or repaired, out of Municipal or other public funds, or

(c) which under the provisions of s. 90 is declared by the Municipality to be, or under any other provisions of this Act becomes a public street."

It does not follow from this definition that the soil of every public street must necessarily be of the ownership of the Municipality. Section 50, sub-s. (2) (f), Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901, says that all public streets, and pavements, stones and other materials thereof and also all trees, erections, materials, implements and things provided for such streets shall be vested in and belong to the Municipality, and shall be held and applied by them as trustees. In interpreting s. 32, Beng. Municipal Act, (Beng. V of 1876), which is worded similarly the Calcutta High Court in Chairman of the Naihati Municipality v. Kishori Lal

Goswami (1) observed as follows (p. 173):

"If...the word 'road' carried with it all the soil, all the materials, and all the erections on it, this enumeration, in express words, of 'pavements,' 'stones,' &c. would be unnecessary. Clearly then there must be some limitation to the word 'road'. It does not mean everything above and below the road: and we think, looking at the case in St Mary, Newington v. Jacobs, (2) that the sub-soil did not belong to the Municipality".

In that case the Municipality claimed compensation for the whole soil on the ground that they had a title to the property in the soil under the said s. 32, while the zamindar claimed that money on the ground that the soil belonged to him; and after interpreting the wording of s. 32, Beng. Municipal Act, 1876, the Calcutta High Court held that the soil belonged to the zamindar. In the Bom. Act the word 'street' is used instead of the word 'road'. The same view was taken in Modhu Sudan Kundu v. Promoda Nath Rou (3), and it was held that s. 10, Beng. Municipal Act (Beng. III of 1864), did not deprive a person of any right of private property that he might have in land used as a public road, nor did it vest the sub-soil of such land in a Municipality. It was also further held that when such land was no longer required as a public road, the owner was entitled to claim its possession.

I agree with that view, and unless it is definitely proved that the soil of any public street belongs to the Municipality, it cannot be presumed to be of the ownership of the Municipality merely on the ground that it is used as a public street. In fact s. 90, sub-s. (5), Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901, contemplates a private street being declared by the Municipality as a public street, but thereby the soil of such street does not come to be of the ownership of the Municipality. The only effect of such a declaration is that the street is allowed to be used by the public, and the public can claim a right of way over it as contemplated by s. 3, sub-s. (13) (a), of the Act. If so, the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer that the Khadki was a public street did not declare that the Municipality was the owner of the soil of the street. It may be that at one time it was a private street and was declared by the Municipality as a public street under s. 90, sub-s. (5), Bom. District Municipal Act. Even in that case, the City Survey Enquiry Officer would be justified in holding the Khadki to be a public street, although the soil belonged to the owners of the adjoining houses. If the City Survey Enquiry Officer had decided that the soil belonged to the Municipality and had been declared a public street, then the plaintiff's claim in the present suit would have been inconsistent with that decision. By reason of the plaintiff's failure to file a suit within one year after the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer, he is debarred from challenging the Municipality's claim that the Khadki is a public street; but the plaintiff is not debarred from claiming that even though it is a public street, the soil of the street belongs to him.

After the plaintiff's appeal to the Collector was rejected as time-barred in 1924, the plaintiff put up an otla and a privy in 1929, and when they were ordered to be removed, all the residents in the Khadki made an application to the Municipality requesting that the Khadki be declared to be of the private ownership and not a public street. At a general meeting of the Municipality held on February 28, 1931, (Ex. 22), it was resolved that the public street should be "made" a private street. A reply was given accordingly to the applicants on March 1, 1931, (Ex. 21). That resolution was forwarded to the Collector, but the Collector refused to sanction the conversion of the public street into a private street. When this decision was communicated to the plaintiff and other residents, the present suit was filed.

Section 90, sub-s. (1), Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901, which corresponds to s. 114, sub-s. (1), Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, which now governs the Nadiad Municipality, empowers the Municipality "to widen, open, enlarge or otherwise improve, and to turn, divert, discontinue or stop up any public street." In exercise of this power the defendant Municipality passed a resolution discontinuing the use of the Khadki in dispute as "a public street." Such discontinuance did not require the sanction of the Commissioner under s. 40, sub-s. (2), Bom. District Municipal Act, 1901, or s. 48, sub-s. (2), Bom. Municipal Boroughs Act, 1925, since such discontinuance did not amount to a lease or sale of any Municipal land, unless it is held that the soil of the Khadki belongs to the Municipality. The question whether the soil of the Khadki belongs to the owners of the adjacent houses or to the Municipality has not yet been determined. If it belongs to the Municipality, then the plaintiff has no claim over it, and the suit is bound to be dismissed. If on the other hand it belongs to the plaintiff and other residents of the locality, then the Municipality can discontinue its use as a public street without the sanction of the Commissioner, since thereby it does not part with any land belonging to it. Admittedly, the Municipality passed a resolution at its general meeting discontinuing the use of the Khadki as "a public street," and the resolution was duly communicated to the owners of the houses in that locality. That resolution took effect immediately, unless it is held that it required the sanction of the Commissioner. Whether such sanction is required or not depends on the ownership of the Municipality over the soil of the Khadki. It is, therefore, necessary to raise an issue as to whether the land belongs to the plaintiff or to the Municipality, and this suit cannot be finally disposed of unless a finding is recorded on that issue.

This aspect of the case has not been considered by the lower Courts. They seem to have thought that the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer amounted to an order that the soil of the street belonged to the Municipality and that therefore the plaintiff's claim in this suit is inconsistent with that decision. But, as I have pointed out above, even if the decision of the City Survey Enquiry Officer cannot be challenged by the plaintiff, still he can contend that by reason of the resolution of the Municipality converting the public street into a private street, the land of the street reverts to him as he was its owner before it was declared to be a public street, as held in Modhu Sudan Kundu v. Promoda Nath Roy (3). Both the lower Courts dismissed the suit on their findings on preliminary issues and therefore the suit must be remanded under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil P. C.

For these reasons I allow the appeal and set aside the decree passed by the lower Courts. I frame the following issues: (1) Does the plaintiff prove that the site of the Khadki in suit belongs to him? (2) If so, can the defendant Municipality discontinue the use of the Khadki as a public street without the sanction of the Commissioner? (3) If so, does the ownership of the site of the Khadki, which was till then a public street, revert to the plaintiff? (4) And, if so to what relief is the plaintiff entitled? I remand the case to the trial

*Case remanded.ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 231 of 1937

November 1, 1939

BENNET AND VERMA, JJ.

RANBIR KARAM SINGH—

DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

JOGINDRA CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI

RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law — Adoption — Bringing up child and describing him as adopted, whether valid adoption—Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) — Applicability—Hindu convert to Christianity — Succession to, how governed — Punjab Laws Act (IV of 1872), s. 5—Adoption by Hindu convert to Christianity — Custom must be alleged and proved — Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850) — Scope—Does not deal with succession to estate of convert — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—There must be creation of belief and a person must act on it.

The bringing up of a child, even with the intention of giving one's property to him and describing him as having been adopted, do not constitute adoption in the sense as understood in Hindu Law. [p. 172, col. 1.]

Succession to the estate of an Indian Christian dying intestate cannot be governed by the rules applying to the Hindus to which community he belonged before his conversion to Christianity. In such a case the succession is governed by the Succession Act. 64 Ind. Cas. 559 (1), relied on. [p. 174, col. 1.]

So far as the Province of Punjab is concerned, under s. 5, Punjab Laws Act, 1872, the primary rule for decision in matters of succession is custom, which may be found to govern the parties, but it is for those who allege that there is such a custom to establish it. Thus, it is at least necessary for a Hindu convert to Christianity to allege and to prove that there is any custom of adoption among the Christian community in the Punjab, or in any section of that community, before any question as to whether any such adoption confers on the alleged adopted boy the same rights as an adoption in Hindu Law confers on him, can be considered. 1 Ind. Cas. 597 (4) and 116 Ind. Cas. 308 (5), explained. [p. 175, col. 1.]

The Caste Disabilities Removal Act is intended to deal with the rights to property of the person who is converted and not with succession to the estate of the convert. [p. 175, col. 2.]

The creation of a belief alone is not what s. 115, Evi. Act, requires. It is further necessary that the person who is made to believe something must act upon that belief. [p. 176, col. 2.]

F. A. from the decision of the First Civil Judge, Meerut, dated February 4, 1937.

Mr. O. M. Thomas, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondents.

Verma, J.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 1. The plaintiff's suit was that "it be declared that defendant No. 1 is neither the adopted son of the deceased, Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh or her husband, nor is the legal heir to her estate in the hands of the Administrator-General and Official Trustee, United Provinces, Allahabad, which is divisible according to law only amongst the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 to 4 who are her legal heirs."

The Court below has decreed the suit. The plaintiff and the persons who were originally defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are brothers. Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh deceased was their sister. Dr. J. C. Bhattacharji, who was originally defendant No. 2, seems to have died after the institution of the suit and a number of persons have been brought on the record as his legal representatives.

The plaintiff and his brothers are Christians. So were their sister, Mrs. Surendri Karam Singh deceased, and her husband, Mr. Karam Singh. These facts are admitted. It is also common ground that Karam Singh died intestate on September 2, 1931, and all his property was inherited by his widow, the sister of the plaintiff. It is again common ground that this lady, Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh, also died intestate on April 11, 1932. At the time of her death she was possessed of movable and immovable property and the dispute in this case relates to this property. The case of the plaintiff is that the deceased Mrs. Karam Singh being a Christian, he and his brothers are the legal heirs in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Succession Act. Defendant No. 1, who is a minor under the guardianship of one Dr. Miss O. M. John, contested the suit. The principal pleas raised on behalf of defendant No. 1 were that the property did not belong to the lady, Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh, that all the property was owned by her husband, the late Mr. Sardar Karam Singh, that defendant No. 1 was the legally adopted son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh, and as such was entitled to the estate left by them; that Mr. Karam Singh and his wife were competent to adopt the contesting defendant as their son and heir under the Punjab Customary Laws; and that the plaintiff was estopped from denying the adoption. In para. 24 of the written statement it was further pleaded that "the deceased Sardar Karam Singh was a Sikh by caste before his conversion to Christianity and in the matter of succession was governed by rules of Hindu Law and Punjab Customary Law. The plaintiff and his brothers are no heirs to the late Mr. Karam Singh."

The Court below has held that the property in question belonged to Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh; that defendant No. 1 was not the adopted son of Mr. or Mrs. Karam Singh; that he was not their heir and was not entitled to inherit the property in question: that no custom of adoption governing Indian Christians had been proved, and that there was no estoppel against the plaintiff.

The case of the plaintiff was that defendant No. 1 was a foundling whom the late Mr. Karam Singh had taken over from the Police at Lahore with the intention of protecting him and bringing him up. In proof of this assertion, the plaintiff has filed Ex. 4, which is a certified copy of a Police report dated June 27, 1929. Mr. Muhammad Sadiq, one of the witnesses produced by defendant No. 1, admits that this report bears his signature. He was the Kotwal at Lahore at that time. It is stated in this report that the maintenance and care of "the newly born child" (the word in the original is "tiff" and the verb used in the original denotes that the child was male child) had been at first made over to one Hafiz Lohar, but afterwards, on account of the unsatisfactory manner in which Hafiz looked after the child, it had been entrusted to Mr. Karam Singh, Station Superintendent of the office of the Inspector-General of Police, Lahore. It is also stated in this report that Mr. Karam Singh expressed a desire that the child be made over to him. This report was put up before a Magistrate who sanctioned the making over of the child to Mr. Karam Singh. The case put forward on behalf of the appellant, on the other hand is, that he was born on June 19, 1929, and nine days after his birth he was "given in adoption" to Mr. Karam Singh and his wife by the appellant's mother and her sister. We have not been referred to any evidence to show who the appellant's mother was or who her sister was. As to the manner in which the adoption was performed, the case put forward on behalf of the appellant is that no ceremony of any sort is required by the Punjab Customary Law governing the Sikh community to which Mr. Karam Singh belonged before his conversion to Christianity, that that Customary Law must be applied to Mr. Karam Singh, and that therefore it was not necessary for Mr. Karam Singh to perform any ceremony whatsoever. It is argued that the facts that Mr. Karam Singh took over the appellant, brought him up and used to describe him as his "adopted son," are sufficient to confer on the appellant the legal status of sonship and to entitle him to succeed to the property left by Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh.

Of the witnesses produced on behalf of the appellant, the only person who claims to be an eye-witness of what may be described as the factum of adoption is one Feeroz Din who says that he was Mr. Karam Singh's official orderly. His story is that the adoption took place in the evening in the month of June or July about eight years before January 6, 1937, when he was giving evidence, and that the witness "was massaging the legs of Mr. Karam Singh at the time when a Sikh couple came to him and said that they had brought a boy for the said Mr. Karam Singh. The couple said they would not be able to bring up the child and asked Mr. Karam Singh to adopt the boy."

He states that Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh agreed to the proposal of the Sikh couple who went away leaving the child behind with Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh. After having carefully perused the statement of this witness, we have not the slightest hesitation in agreeing with the opinion of the Court below that the evidence given by this witness in a "tissue of lies." It will also be noticed that the allegation in the written statement is that the appellant was given in adoption by his mother and her sister, whereas the witness's story is that a Sikh couple came to Mr. Karam Singh with the boy and left him behind. Baba Mani Ram is one of the witnesses examined by defendant No. 1 on commission and he states that, as far as he could recollect, Mr. Karam Singh had said in the presence of all the other clerks of the office that he had got the boy "through the agency of the Police". In view of this statement of a witness of the appellant himself, and in view of the inherent improbability of the story related by Feeroz Din, we are not prepared to place any reliance on his evidence. As already stated, there is no other eye-witness of the alleged adoption. It is argued however that the appellant's case of adoption is proved by the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh had this boy baptized on February 2, 1930, and reliance is placed on a copy of the baptismal certificate (Ex. A) printed at p. 39 of the paper book. The Rev. Dinanath, who was the Vicar of the Holy Trinity Church where the baptism took place, has been examined on commission by the appellant

He states that he performed the baptism and that Ex. A is a true copy of the entries in his register which he had before him when he was making his statement.

The argument on behalf of the appellant is that in the column "parents' names" the entry is as follows: "Adopted by Stephen Karam Singh, Surendri Karam Singh," and it is urged that this entry must have been made on a statement by Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh that they had adopted the boy. Although we are not satisfied that the requirements of the law as to the proof of Ex. A have been strictly complied with, we shall deal with this document on its merits. We may also accept the argument that Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh in all likelihood told Rev. Dinanath that the child to be baptised had been "adopted" by them. It must however be remembered that adoption in the technical legal sense is one thing, and the bringing up of a child, even with the intention of ultimately giving one's property to that child, and loosely describing him as having been adopted, is quite another. Although Dr. Miss. John, the certificated guardian of the appellant, has made in the Court below the startling statement that "the custom of adoption prevails very freely amongst the Christians" and that "by adoption I mean perpetuating of the line and that the adopted boy becomes the owner of the adoptive parents" (the word "property" seems to have been left out by oversight) it has not been argued before us that adoption is a recognized institution among Christians in the sense in which it is understood and recognized among the Hindus and in Hindu Law.

It is possible that Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh, who, it is common ground, had no children of their own and had taken over this boy from the Police with the intention of bringing him up, had grown very fond of him and used to describe him as their adopted son, but that would not make the boy Mr. Karam Singh's adopted son in the sense in which that expression is used in Hindu Law. It is further urged that the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh had this boy baptised goes to support the case of the appellant. In this connection reliance has been placed on Ex. C, p. 33, which is alleged to have been the invitation card which Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh are alleged to have issued at the time of the baptism. The witness Feeroz Din has stated that he was given this invitation card "to join the ceremony" and that it remained with him and he made it over to the guardian of the appellant when she visited Lahore. As we have already stated, we do not consider Feeroz Din to be a truthful witness at all. It may further be pointed out that appellant's witness Baba Mani Ram states that he was present at the time of the ceremony of baptism. But no question was put to him as to whether he received any such invitation card. The suit was instituted in January 1935; the appellant's written statement was filed in May 1935, and issues were framed in December 1935. This invitation card was not produced in Court until December 6, 1936. Muhammad Sadiq, another witness produced on behalf of the appellant states that he does not remember if any invitation card to join the ceremony of baptism was issued at the time, although he says that he was present at the ceremony. We do not in these circumstances consider that Ex. C has been proved to be a genuine document. But even if we take it to be a genuine invitation card which was really issued by Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh at the time of the appellant's baptism, that cannot help the defendant. The appellant relies on the words "adopted son of S. Karam Singh..."

The observations which we have made with regard to the entry in the baptismal certificate apply to the use of these words in this invitation card also. Further, the adoption is alleged to have taken place in June 1929, and the baptism took place in February 1930. The position thus is that there is no contemporaneous documentary evidence in proof of the alleged adoption. The oral evidence to prove it consists of the testimony of a solitary witness Feeroz Din which is wholly unsatisfactory. In this connection a statement of the appellant's witness, Mr. J. T. M. Bennet, is significant. A question was put to him in cross-examination:

"What did you understand by his saying that he had adopted the boy? Was it in the ordinary sense amongst Europeans that he was going to bring up the boy as his son; and eventually to make him his heir, or was it in any other special sense?"

The answer to this question is in these words:

"I understood that his adoption was in the ordinary sense understood amongst Europeans that he was going to bring up the boy as his son and make him his heir."

We are therefore not prepared to hold that the appellant has proved the factum of adoption. It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that Mr. Karam Singh, although he renounced Sikhism and embraced Christianity, continued to retain what is described as "the right of adoption." As stated above, it was alleged in para. 24 of the written statement that in the matter of succession, Sardar Karam Singh was governed by rules of Hindu Law and the Punjab Customary Law, it is argued that among the class of Sikhs to which Sardar Karam Singh belonged before his conversion to Christianity and in the locality where his family had originally resided, there was a custom of adoption and that Mr. Karam Singh continued to be governed by that custom. Now, the Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) states in its Preamble that it was expedient to consolidate the law applicable to intestate and testamentary succession in British India. Section 2 (d) defines "Indian Christian" as meaning "a native of India who is, or in good faith claims to be, of unmixed Asiatic descent and who professes any form of the Christian religion."

It is not denied that Sardar Karam Singh as well as his wife were of unmixed Asiatic descent, were natives of India and professed the Christian religion. Defendant's own witness, the Rev. Dinanath, states that he always thought that both of them were good Christians and that, as far as his knowledge went, none of them ever professed either Hindu or Sikh belief. He has further stated that Mr. Karam Singh, to the best of his knowledge, was a member of the Indian Christian community at Lahore and that he and his wife belonged, as far as he knew, to the Church of England and attended the Holy Trinity Church, Lahore. Baba Mani Ram has stated that the funeral ceremonies of Mr. Karam Singh were performed according to Christian rites at Lahore by an Indian Christian padri. Thus, there can be no doubt whatsoever that Mr. and Mrs. Karam Singh were Christians not only in name and form, but they followed the tenets of the Christian religion sincerely and faithfully. It is difficult to believe therefore that Mr. Karam Singh could possibly ever have had any intention of retaining any customs, traditions or practices of the religion which he had deliberately renounced. Section 5 (1) of the Indian Succession Act provides:

"Succession to immovable property in British India of a person deceased shall be regulated by the Law of British India, wherever such person may have had his domicile at the time of his death," and sub-s. (2) of that section provides that succession to the movable property of a person deceased is regulated by the law of the country in which such person had his domicile at the time of his death. There is no question that Mr. Karam Singh as well as his wife had their domicile in British India. Succession to their property, immovable as well as movable, is therefore governed by the Law of British India. Part IV of the Act deals with consanguinity, and by s. 23, which is the first section in that part, it is provided that nothing in that part shall apply to any will made or intestacy occurring before January 1, 1866, or to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh, Jain or Parsi. It follows therefore that the provisions of that part apply to Indian Christians. Section 24 runs thus: "Kindred or consanguinity is the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor," and s. 25 (1) provides that

"lineal consanguinity is that which subsists between two persons, one of whom is descended in a direct line from the other, as between a man and his father, grandfather and great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between a man and his son, grandson, great-grandson and so downwards in the direct descending line."

Section 26 deals with collateral consanguinity. It will thus be noticed that there is absolutely no mention of adoption as creating any kind of relationship whatsoever. Part 5 deals with the intestate succession and by sub-s. (1) of s. 29 succession to the property of any Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jain is excepted. Sub-s. (2) of s. 29 provides:

"Save as provided in sub-s. (1) or by any other law for the time being in force, the provisions of this part shall constitute the Law of British India in all cases of intestacy."

The rules as to succession in the case of an intestacy then follow in Chap. II. It is not denied that, but for the adoption set up on behalf of the appellant, the plaintiff and his brothers are the heirs of the deceased lady under the provisions of the Succession Act. It is argued, however, that as Sardar Karam Singh was a resident of the Punjab, he must be taken to be governed by the Punjab Customary Law even on his conversion to Christianity. It is alleged, on the basis of a statement made by Baba Mani Ram, that Mr. Karam Singh was a Khattri by caste before his conversion to Christianity. It is then argued on the authority of a book called "Customary Law in the Gujranwala District, Vol. XXVI" by Dalip Singh, Settlement Officer, that the custom of adoption did prevail among the Khattris in that district. Now, in the first place we are not satisfied that there is really any clear and convincing evidence that

Mr. Karam Singh was a resident of the district of Gujranwala or was a Khattri by caste. But even accepting these allegations for the sake of argument as true, the question still remains as to whether it can be held that even after Mr. Karam Singh was converted to Christianity he continued to be governed by the customs prevailing among the Khattris of the district of Gujranwala. It seems to us that the argument that succession to the estate of an Indian Christian can be governed by the rules applying to the community to which he belonged before his conversion to Christianity is not sound. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have had occasion to deal with this matter in Kamawati v. Digbijai Singh (1). The relevant portions of their Lordships' judgment are at pp. 533 and 534 of the Report. Their Lordships observe that an argument was submitted to them to the effect that even accepting the view that the deceased was a Christian, still he had by his acts made such an indication as the law would respect, to the effect that his succession was not to be governed by the Succession Act. Their Lordships then observe:

"Their Lordships can give no countenance to such a principle. It is unavailing to quote the cases of Abraham v. Abraham (2) or Sri Gajapathi Radhika Patta Maha Devi Garu v. Sri Gajapathi Nilamani Patta Maha Devi Garu (3). These cases preceded the Succession Act and cannot modify or interpret it."

Proceeding further, their Lordships say:

"The question accordingly is, was the late owner of this estate, or was he not, a Hindu? If he was, the Mitakshara Law would apply. If he was a Christian, the Succession Act, rules would apply."

Then their Lordships state that the argument before them was that, notwithstanding the fact that the deceased was proved beyond question to have been a Christian at the time of his death, the Hindu Law of succession should apply to his estate. The pronouncement of their Lordships with regard to this argument is in these words:

"A situation of nothing but confusion could be thus produced. The plain law of the Succession Act would be eviscerated, and in each case inquiry might have to be entered upon as to whether a deceased subject of the Crown wished or by his acts compelled that the law of the land should not apply to his case. A particular subject can settle that in India, as in other parts of the Empire, by exercising whatever be his religion his power of testacy, and definitely declaring how he desires his affairs to be regulated so far as his own individual property is concerned."

It will be noticed that the argument pressed upon us is of the same type as was submitted to their Lordships, and in our opinion such an argument cannot, in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council quoted above, be accepted. It is argued however that so far as a resident of the Punjab is concerned, the question of succession to his estate must be decided in accordance with the provisions of the Punjab Laws Act, IV of 1872. Now, s. 5 of that Act provides that:

"In questions regarding succession... adoption the rule of decision shall be (a) any custom applicable to the parties concerned.....(b) the Muhammadan Law, in cases of Muhammadans, and the Hindu Law, in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been altered or abolished by legislative enactment or is opposed to the provisions of this Act or has been modified by the provisions of any such custom as is above referred to."

It is obvious that cl. (b) has no application to the case before us, but it is argued on the basis of cl. (a) that the succession to the estate of Mrs. Karam Singh must be held to be governed by the customs prevailing among the Sikhs and the Khattris of the Gujranwala District. This argument however completely loses sight of the important words "applicable to the parties concerned." Learned Counsel appearing for the appellant has invited our attention to two cases decided by the Punjab Chief Court, viz., Mukerji v. Alfred, 1 Ind. Cas. 697 (4) and Sohan Lal v. A. Z. Mukhuin, 116 Ind. Cas. 305 (5). These very cases however are in our opinion against the contention of the learned Counsel. It was held in the first case mentioned above that in the absence of any custom, as provided by s. 5 (a), Punjab Laws Act, the rule of law applicable to the case of Hindu converts to Christianity is as provided for in the Succession Act. It was further held that:

"The test for applying the rule of equity and good conscience to regulate succession in the case of a convert is to ascertain the course of conduct and usage adhered to since conversion."

It would thus appear that this case is no authority for the proposition that the rule of law applicable in the present case should be the custom or practice which prevails in the community to which Mr. Karam Singh belonged before conversion. In the second case mentioned above it was observed that so far as the Province of Punjab was concerned, under s. 5, Punjab Laws Act, 1872, the primary rule for decision in matters of succession was custom, which may be found to govern the parties, but it is for those who allege that there is such a custom to establish it. Thus, even according to the authorities cited by the learned Counsel for the appellant it is at least necessary for the appellant to allege and to prove that there is any custom of adoption among the Christian community in the Punjab, or in any section of that community, before any question as to whether any such adoption confers on the alleged adopted boy the same rights as an adoption in Hindu Law confers on him, can be considered. It is sufficient to state that no such custom has been set up, much less proved. It may be mentioned here that in Sohan Lal v. A. Z. Mukuin, 116 Ind. Cas. 308 (5) mentioned above, which is a decision by a learned Single Judge, a somewhat restricted meaning has been given to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kamawati v. Digbijai Singh (1). In view of the fact however that in the case before us no custom alleged to be applicable to Christians has either been set up or proved, we do not consider it necessary to express any opinion as to the soundness or otherwise of the view expressed on that point in Sohan Lal v. A. Z. Mukuin, 116 Ind. Cas. 308 (5). Reference has also been made to the Caste Disabilities Removal Act XXI of 1850, and reliance has been placed on the word "right" in s. 1. It has been urged that Mr. Karam Singh before he was converted to Christianity had the "right" to adopt a son and that in view of the provisions of this Act he ought not to be held to have forfeited that right. In our opinion, this argument cannot be accepted. A Hindu has the "right" to use the language of the learned Counsel for the appellant to marry, and to have at the same time as many wives as he likes. A Muslim has the "right" to have at the same time four wedded wives. Can it be maintained for a single moment that a Hindu or a Muslim, after renouncing Hinduism or the Muslim faith and embracing Christianity, will under the Caste Disabilities Removal Act continue to possess the "right" of having more than one wife? Various other considerations can be mentioned to show the incorrectness of the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant, but we consider it unnecessary to dwell on it any further. The Caste Disabilities Removal Act is :

"An Act for extending the principle of s. 9, Ragn. 7, 1832, of the Bengal Code throughout the territory subject to the Govt. of the East India Company."

The Preamble provides :

"Whereas it is enacted by s. 9, Regn. 7, 1832, of the Bengal Code, that "whatever in any civil suit the parties to such suit may be of different persuasions, when one party shall be of the Hindu and the other of the Muhammadan persuasion, or where one or more of the parties to the suit shall not be either of the Muhammadan or Hindu persuasion, the laws of those religions shall not be permitted to operate to deprive such party or parties of any property to which, but for the operation of such laws, they would have been entitled," and whereas it will be beneficial to extend the principle of that enactment throughout the territories subject to the Govt. of the East India Company; it is enacted as follows:"

It is clear therefore that the Act is intended to deal with the rights to property of the person who is converted and not with succession to the estate of the convert. The question that arises in the case before us is as to whether defendant No. 1 is entitled to succeed to the estate of the deceased, in preference to the persons entitled under the Succession Act, on the ground that he was taken in adoption by a person who, at the time when he is alleged to have taken him in adoption, was admittedly a Christian. There is absolutely no evidence to show that after his conversion to Christianity Mr. Karam Singh ever expressed any desire, or did anything which can be said to indicate an intention, to retain any custom that might have prevailed in the community to which he had belonged before his conversion. It is said that his mother, who was a Sikh by religion, used to come to see her son and used to stay with him and that Mr. Karam Singh used to permit her to stay in his house. But this can be no evidence of the expression of any intention on the part of Mr. Karam Singh. Reliance is further placed on the statement of Feeroz Din that Mr. Karam Singh performed the funeral ceremonies of his mother according to Sikh religion. In cross-examination this performance of the funeral ceremonies is whittled down to Mr. Karam Singh supporting the arhi on which the dead body of his mother was taken. The witness further states in cross-examination that Karam Singh stayed there only for the night and returned to Lahore the next day. In addition to this, as we have already stated, we are not prepared to place any reliance on the testimony of Feeroz Din. The last point urged on behalf of the appellant is that the suit is barred by estoppel. According to the judgment of the Court below, the argument of estoppel was based on a statement of the present plaintiff in the proceedings for the guardianship of the appellant after the death of Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh. In the Court below reliance was placed on the following statements which the plaintiff made in the Court of the District Judge of Meerut on January 13, 1933, (vide Ex. B, p. 43):

"The adoptive mother of the child was my sister The child is owner of all the property left by my sister. I have no claim."

We fail to understand how these statements can be said to create the bar of estoppel. One may say that the plaintiff, having made those statements on a previous occasion, should not be believed when he makes statements to the contrary in the present case. But that is totally different from saying that the plaintiff is estopped. We agree however with the Court below that the plaintiff has fully explained the statements quoted above on which reliance was placed in support of this argument of estoppel in the Court below. He states in his deposition in the present case that he made the statement (Ex. B) in the guardianship case as he was told by Yakub Ali Khan, Kotwal, Meerut, that there was a will in favour of defendant No. 1 and under that impression he stated, that defendant No. 1 was the owner of all the property which had been left by his sister. He further stated that he had been told by Mr. Mukerji, who was the Vakil of Dr. Miss John in the guardianship proceedings, that defendant No. 1 had been adopted by Karam Singh and that he mentioned that fact in his statement and said that his sister was the adoptive mother of defendant No. 1. It is argued that it is not probable that the lawyer of Dr. Miss John would have had this conversation with the plaintiff. But we see nothing inherently improbable in the story that Mr. Mukerji, although he was appearing for a rival applicant for guardianship, namely, Dr. Miss John, had mentioned to the present plaintiff that Karam Singh had adopted the boy. For one thing, Mr. Mukerji might have felt that an information like that might deter the present plaintiff from actively prosecuting his own application for the guardianship of the boy; and for another, there is nothing to show that Mr. Mukerji had given this information to the present plaintiff after the latter had made his application for guardianship. It may be mentioned that an unsigned and unattested writing purporting to be the last will and testament which Mrs. Surendri Helen Karam Singh is supposed to have intended to execute, has been produced on behalf of the defendant in this case. It is thus not unlikely that this story as to there being a will in existence in favour of the boy was circulated after the death of Mrs. Karam Singh. We agree therefore with the Court below that the explanation given by the plaintiff is sufficient. The arguments on the point of estoppel advanced before us have gone somewhat further. It has been argued that the plaintiff as well as his brothers by their conduct in the lifetime of Mr. Karam Singh showed that they looked upon the appellant as Mr. Karam Singh's adopted son, and reliance has been placed on s. 115, Evi. Act. Granting for the sake of argument that the plaintiff and his brothers did show in the lifetime of Mr. Karam Singh that they looked upon this boy as the son of Mr. Karam Singh, we are at a loss to understand how s. 115 can be brought into play in this case and how it can be said that the provisions of that section in any manner operate to bar the present suit. It is argued that by their conduct the plaintiff and his brothers created a certain belief in the mind of Mr. Karam Singh. But the creation of a belief alone is not what the section requires. It is further necessary that the person who is made to believe something must act upon that belief. We are not told in what manner Karam Singh acted upon the belief which the plaintiff and his brothers are alleged to have created in his mind. Then again, the present suit is not against Karam Singh. To argue that the appellant is a representative of Karam Singh is to beg the whole question. For the reasons given above we hold that the appeal is devoid of any merit and dismiss it with costs.

*Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—
Starting point—Decree amended—Art. 182, Limitation*

Act, if affects s. 48—Limitation, whether begins to run from date of amendment or of original decree—Interpretation of Statutes—Language clear—Must be given effect to irrespective of anomaly.

Article 182, Lim. Act is expressly limited to applications for execution not provided for by Art. 183 or by s. 48, Civil P. C. Inasmuch as Art. 182 clearly leaves the provisions of s. 48 untouched there can be no execution of a decree governed by s. 48 when 12 years have passed from the date of the decree, amendment, or no amendment. It is true that there is no period of limitation for an amendment of a decree to correct an accidental slip or omission under s. 152, Civil P. C., but, because the Code gives the Court power to correct slips or omissions at any time it does not mean that the law of limitation is affected. A correction made in a time-barred decree leaves the decree still time-barred. 138 Ind. Cas. 93 (2), followed, 46 Ind. Cas. 107 (1), Ganesh Das v. Vishnu Das (3) and 185 Ind. A. against appellate order of the District Court, Guntur, dated February 9, 1936.

Messrs. V. Parthasarathy and P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Lakshmayya, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal raises a question of limitation. On March 9, 1922, respondent No. 1 obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada a money decree against the appellant, the appellant's uncle and a cousin, who were the members of an undivided family. The amount for which judgment was obtained was Rs. 3,735 but a mistake was made in drawing up the decree and the figure inserted was Rs. 2,200. It was not until July 16, 1928 that the mistake was corrected under the provisions of s. 152, Civil P. C. On December 6, 1933 the respondent caused the decree to be transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Guntur for execution and on March 5, 1934, he applied for attachment of certain immovable property. The appellant objected to the attachment on the ground that the property was his personal property and the decree had only made him liable to the extent of his interest in the family property. This objection was well-founded and the attachment was raised. On November 12, 1935 the respondent filed another application for execution. Here he asked for the attachment of two decrees, one obtained by the appellant alone and the other in conjunction with his cousin. It was contended that the application was barred by the law of limitation and the contention was upheld by the Subordinate Judge. An appeal followed to the District Judge of Guntur who held that the decree was barred so far as it related to the sum of Rs. 2,200 but it was enforceable to the extent of Rs. 1,535, the difference between the Rs. 2,200 and Rs. 3,755, the figure which was inserted in the decree as the result of the amendment.

It is obvious that the District Judge's decision was wrong in allowing execution of part of the decree. The respondent must be entitled to the full amount, if entitled to anything. When the provisions of s. 48, Civil P. C. and Art. 182, Lim. Act, are considered it, however becomes manifest that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the decree was time-barred. Section 48 (1), Civil P. C., reads as follows:

"Where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made, no order for the execution of the same decree shall be made upon any fresh application presented after the expiration of 12 years from (a) the date of the decree sought to be executed, or, (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree".

Therefore a decree which has been passed for more than 12 years cannot be executed, but where the decree or an order passed subsequent to the decree directs payment of money or the delivery of property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods the date of the default in such a case shall be the starting point for the period of 12 years. Order XX, r. 7 provides that the decree shall bear the date of the judgment. Sub-s. (2) of s. 48 says:

"Nothing in this section shall be deemed (a) to preclude the Court from ordering the execution of a decree upon an application presented after the expiration of the said term of 12 years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within 12 years immediately before the date of the application; or (b) to limit or otherwise affect the operation of Art. 180 of Sch. II, Lim. Act, 1877".

The corresponding Article in the present Lim. Act is Art. 182. Now, turning to cl. (4) of that Article we find that the period of limitation where a decree has been amended is three years from the date of the amendment, but the Article is expressly limited to applications for execution not provided for by Art. 183 or by s. 48, Civil P. C. Article 183 refers to applications to enforce judgments of High Courts and it has no bearing here. Inasmuch as Art. 182 clearly leaves the provisions of s. 48 untouched there can be no execution of a decree governed by s. 48 when 12 years have passed from the date of the decree, amendment or no amendment. It is true that there is no period of limitation for an amendment of a decree to correct an accidental slip or omission under s. 152 of the Code. But because the Code gives the Court power to correct slips or omissions at any time it does not mean that the law of limitation is affected. A correction made in a time-barred decree leaves the decree still time-barred.

The question under consideration has been the subject of decisions by the Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore and Patna High Courts and they have all agreed that an amendment of a decree to bring it in accordance with the judgment does not have the effect of starting a fresh period of limitation. See Narasinga Rao v. Bando Krishna Kulkarni (1), Fakir Chand v. Kundan Singh (2), Ganesh Das v. Vishnu Das (3), and Dulhin v. Harihar Gir (4). In Fakir Chand v. Kundan Singh (2), the Allahabad High Court observed:

"Now no change was made in s. 48, Civil P. C., providing for the extension of the period of 12 years in that section from the date of the amendment of a decree. We consider that the Legislature advisedly omitted that provision for extension from s. 48, and that the omission was not accidental. In our opinion the effect of the omission is that an amendment of a decree does not give a new date for starting a period of limitation, if the application for execution is beyond the period of 12 years allowed by s. 48, that is, that the period of 12 years under s. 48 is final and cannot be extended by any amendment of the decree, whether that amendment is made before the expiry of the period of 12 years, or whether that amendment is made after the expiry of the period of 12 years. The reason why no amendment was made in s. 48 is that probably the greater period of 12 years is allowed by that section, and it is probably the intention of the Legislature that that period of 12 years should be final, and that within that period a decree-holder should amend his decree, and obtain all consequent remedies. If a decree-holder neglects to amend his decree within a sufficient period before the expiry of 12 years to allow him to obtain his remedy by execution, then he has only himself to blame."

I agree entirely with what is said here. In an unreported case of this Court (O. M. A. No. 264 of 1931) Madhavan Nair and Cornish, JJ. without giving any reasons, held that the period of limitation should be calculated from the date of the amendment of the decree. As their decision runs contrary to the plain wording of s. 48, Civil P. C., and Art. 182, Lim. Act, it cannot be allowed to stand. The learned Advocate for the respondent has argued that s. 48, Civil P. C., is not in all cases final and has drawn attention to the provisions of s. 15, Lim. Act, but all that need be said is that s. 48 is final unless there is some statutory provision which governs it in a particular case, and that is not the position here. Section 48 applies in the present case and as more than twelve years had elapsed before the last application for execution was made the decree had become time-barred. The appeal will be allowed and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the District Court. A memorandum of cross-objections filed by the respondent does not call for consideration and will be dismissed without costs.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—I am of the same opinion. Indeed, there is no escape from it when the language of s. 48, Civil P. C., is read in the light of the provisions of Art. 182, Lim. Act. The words used in col. 1 of that Article make it clear that the Legislature did not intend to interfere in any way with the limit of time fixed by s. 48. The Civil P. C., and the Lim. Act were enacted at the same time and a comparison of the provisions of the two statutes makes it abundantly clear that there is an intimate relationship between the two. In the Lim. Act of 1908 a new provision was inserted to fix the point of time from which the period of limitation under Art. 182 has to be calculated where the decree is amended; cl. (4) was added to the Article, so as to make it clear in such a case that it is the date of the amendment from which limitation will run. While the case of an amendment is thus met and provided for by Art. 182, Lim. Act, it is significant that the language of s. 48, Civil P. C., has been left unaltered. It is therefore a fair inference that the period of twelve years should be counted from the date of the decree irrespective of any amendment that it might have undergone since. The date of the amendment does not therefore furnish a fresh starting point under s. 48, Civil P. C., and must accordingly be ignored in making the calculation.

It was suggested on behalf of the respondent that the fact that there is no period of time limited for an application for an amendment under s. 152 introduces an anomaly. It was said that a Court may grant and may be obliged to grant an amendment even after the period of twelve years fixed by s. 48, Civil P. C., and where an amendment is so granted the order would be rendered futile and barren unless s. 48 is understood as permitting the twelve years' period to be calculated from the date of the amendment. This may be an anomaly but the remedy is in the hands of the Legislature. When the language of the statute is clear we cannot refuse to give effect to it on a consideration of this kind.

Somayya, J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice.

Execution of a security bond jointly by brothers does not necessarily show the jointness of the family as even strangers can join in executing a document. [p. 182, col. 1.]

There is no presumption that mutation in the name of a Hindu widow is by way of consolation. [p. 183, col. 2.]

Where there is no definite evidence of separation taking place at a particular time the separation of a family can be proved by the conduct of the family and the attendant circumstances. [p. 183, col. 1.]

The partition of joint estate consists in defining the shares of the co-parceners in the joint family and it is not necessary that there should be an actual division of the property by metes and bounds and the definition of shares may be proved by an entry in the Record of Rights showing the shares of each member of the family, and, further such an entry will be evidence of the severance of the joint status. 172 Ind. Cas. 977 (1) and 175 Ind. Cas. 332 (2), relied on. [p. 183, col. 2.]

The presumption of union is stronger in the case of brothers than in the case of cousins, and the farther you go from the founder of the family the presumption becomes weaker and weaker. [p. 184, col. 1.]

Judgment.—This is an appeal against a decree of the learned Civil Judge of Sitapur dismissing the plaintiffs-appellants' suit for possession of certain immovable properties mentioned in lists A and B attached to the plaint.

The following pedigree has been proved and is not now disputed by the defendants, though in the trial Court they denied that the plaintiffs were sister's sons of Sheo Singh or in fact that Sheo Singh had any sister.

It will thus be seen that while defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are widows of Mathura Singh, the plaintiffs are sons of the sister of Sheo Singh, first cousin of Mathura Singh. The plaintiffs' case is that the property in suit belonged to Sheo Singh who died on December 17, 1920, without leaving any issue but leaving two widows, Bittan Kuar and Kanchan Kuar, that Bittan Kuar and Kanchan Kuar entered into joint possession of Sheo Singh's property after his death, that Bittan Kuar died on February 28, 1924, and Kanchan Kuar thereupon came into possession of the entire property, that Kanchan Kuar also died on April 25, 1930, and on her death Mathura Singh took wrongful possession of the property in suit, that on Mathura Singh's death which occurred on December 11, 1934 his two widows, the present defendants, came into possession of the property, that the plaintiffs are sons of Sheo Singh's sister, Mst. Maharaj Kuar, who died long ago and that as such they are entitled to Sheo Singh's property and that Mathura Singh and his widows obtained possession of the property wrongfully against them. On these allegations they sued Mathura Singh's widows for possession of the property. They originally claimed only a declaratory decree in respect of the property mentioned in list B of the plaint as they said they were already in possession of it but subsequently they amended their plaint and paid court-fee for possession of this property also.

Both the defendants contested the suit. They denied that Maharaj Kuar, the plaintiff's mother, was the sister of Sheo Singh or that Bittan Kuar and Kanchan Kuar were ever in possession of the property in dispute and alleged that the names of Mst. Raj Kuar, widow of Ram Sahai and of Kanchan Kuar and Bittan Kuar were entered fictitiously in the revenue papers for the sake of consolation only. The main defence of the defendants was that there never had been any partition among the descendants of Bakhtawar Singh so that when Sheo Singh died in 1920 Mathura Singh succeeded to the family property by right of survivorship. They further contended that according to the custom prevailing in the family of Bakhtawar Singh, daughters with their issue and sisters and their sons were excluded from inheritance by collaterals and it is only when there are no collaterals or daughters or daughters' issue that sisters and their sons become entitled to the property. Their further plea was that Act II of 1929, under which alone the plaintiffs could be entitled to the property, even supposing that they are the sister's sons of Sheo Singh, has no application to the case. The defendants also put up a plea of limitation.

On the defence raised by the defendants the trial Court framed the following eight issues :

1. Whether Sheo Singh was separate from Mathura Singh? If so, its effect on the ownership of the property in suit?
2. Whether Maharaj Kuar was sister of Sheo Singh?
3. Are the plaintiffs in possession of the property in list B? If not, its effect?
4. Are daughters and their sons and sisters and their sons postponed as against the agnates, and in case there is no agnate then the daughter and her issue and after them the sister and her issue succeed by a family custom, as alleged by the defendant?
5. Does the Act II of 1929 not apply as Sheo Singh died before the Act came into force?
6. Would the Act not enure for the benefit of the sisters and their issues as they were not heirs under the Benares School of Mitakshara Law?
7. Does the Act also not apply because the family is governed by the special custom relating to sister as contained in issue (4)?
8. Is the suit barred by limitation?

To what relief and mesne profits, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?

All the issues except Nos. 1, 4 and 7 were decided by the learned Judge in favour of the plaintiffs, but the suit was dismissed on the findings that Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were members of a joint Hindu family and that there was a custom in the family whereby sisters and their issue were excluded by agnates so that the plaintiffs cannot avail themselves of Act II of 1929.

The two questions therefore that arise in this appeal are (1) whether Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were members of a joint Hindu family or whether Sheo Singh died while separate from Mathura Singh and (2) whether there is any custom in the family of Sheo Singh excluding sisters and their issue if collaterals are in existence.

In support of their case on the first point, namely, that Sheo Singh was separate from Mathura Singh, the plaintiffs-appellants rely on the following documents :

(After detailing the documents the judgment proceeded)

Exs. A-37 to A-40 which are accounts filed by the defendants themselves and which the plaintiffs say are separate accounts of Sheo Singh and prove the separation of Sheo Singh from Mathura Singh. We shall deal with these accounts later on in the judgment.

The plaintiffs further rely on the evidence of the following witnesses :

P. W. No. 2 Mangal, a tenant of Aonri Shahpur who states that Mathura Singh and Sheo Singh sued to take grain rent separately, that Sheo Singh had a grove in the village but Mathura Singh had not and that after Sheo Singh's death, the rent of his sir plots was realised by his widows and not by Mathura Singh.

P. W. No. 4 Mohabbat Bahadur, Patwari of Darapur, who says that he used to visit Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh, that the door of the house of Sheo Singh was to the west and that of Mathura Singh to the north and that the two were separate from each other. He further says that the business and servants of Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were also separate.

P. W. No. 5 Baldeo Prasad, a kayasth zamindar paying Rs. 2,000 as land revenue, who says that the fathers of Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were separate from each other and that he used to send invitations on occasions of ceremonies at his house to Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh separately.

P. W. No. 6 Bishambhar Dayal, kayasth, who deposes to Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh being separate in mess and to their having separate servants and karindas. This witness is a son of Badri Prasad in whose favour Mathura Singh executed the general power-of-attorney Ex. 26. He states that his father used to manage Mathura Singh's sir and wrote his accounts and further that Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh lived in separate houses.

P. W. No. 7 Pirthipal Singh, a zamindar related to the family, who says that in the lifetime of Sheo Singh he used to visit Tambour and that Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were separate from each other in business as well as in food. He also deposes to mutual accounting being made in his presence once between Mathura Singh and Kanchan Kuar.

P. W. No. 8 Paragi, who also deposes to separation between Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh.

P. W. No. 9 Baijnath, another tenant of Aonri Shahpur who says he used to go to the houses of Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh both of whom were zamindars of his village and that their houses mess, servants business, sir etc. were all separate. He further says that he borrowed Rs. 50 from Sheo Singh some twenty-two years ago and in this he is corroborated by Ex. A-38 filed by the defendants in which on date June 3, 1916, there is an entry of a loan of Rs. 50 to Baijnath Chaudhri.

P. W. No. 10 Beni Madho, who is a Khattri by caste and who had a brick kiln in 1914 from which he says Mathura Singh and Sheo Singh purchased bricks separately. He says he received the price of bricks from the two separately and brought suits for the balance against them separately. He referred to his own accounts and stated that he withdrew his suit against Sheo Singh on receiving payment of Rs. 85 from him. In this he is corroborated by Exs. A-39 which shows that on August 3, 1918, a sum of Rs. 85 was paid to Lala Beni Madho after a settlement being made with him. He further deposes that his account books showed that he was paid Rs. 50 by Mathura Singh on November 21, 1918. No question in cross-examination was put to the witness about his accounts with which he refreshed his memory. The plaintiffs have filed certain documents in this Court and have applied for their admission under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil P. C. These documents were rejected by the trial Court and are said to include decrees in suits brought by this witness against Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh. It is said that these decrees fully bear out the evidence of this witness but as for reasons given in our order recorded separately, we are not going to admit these documents, we cannot refer to them.

The last witness on whom the plaintiffs rely is Suraj Kuar, defendant No. 1, herself who was examined on commission. At p. 27 of the record she says :

"Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were separate (alag alag). Their houses were separate. Their mess was joint and also separate. Formerly they were joint in mess and subsequently they had separate mess. Sir, servants and management of the estate (karbar) of Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were separate. Mathura Singh's mukhtar was Badri Prasad. I have forgotten the name of the mukhtar of Sheo Singh."

At p. 30 she says :

"Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh must be adjusting their accounts between themselves," and at p. 32 :

"Badri Prasad was separately engaged by my husband... Badri Prasad was in my husband's service and another man was in the service of Sheo Singh."

This witness in her cross-examination had said that Ram Dayal was karta of the family but in re-examination she stated that he was karta of the family of Mathura Singh.

This finishes the evidence on the point of separation relied on by the plaintiffs. The documents on which the defendants rely are the following.

Ex. A-2, wajib-ul-arz of village Ismailganj prepared at the First Regular Settlement about 1873. In para. 3 it says :

"Raghubar Singh is proprietor and manager in respect of his share and of the shares of Ram Sahai and Ram Dayal, co-sharers. The rest of the co-shares are joint with them in mess. No rendition of accounts is made."

From this it is sought to show that the family of Raghubar Singh and his brothers Ram Dayal and Ram Sahai was joint; but in the first place, the wording of the clause is not very clear and in the second place, even if the family was joint in or about 1873, when this wajib-ul-arz was framed, there is no improbability in separation taking place afterwards. All that the plaintiffs say is that separation took place sometime between the First Regular Settlement and the death of Ram Sahai (vide plaintiffs' Pleadings statement of December 17, 1935) and there is nothing in this wajib-ul-arz which rebuts this statement. Further, the Settlement Circular No. 20 of 1863 which lays down the method of preparation of wajib-ul-arzes shows that it was not the duty of the Settlement Officer to record whether families of landholders are joint or separate.

Ex. A-42, which is a security bond jointly executed by Raghubar Singh and his brothers in 1874. This does not necessarily show the jointness of the family as even strangers can join in executing a document. Moreover, it was executed in 1874 and does not rebut the case of the plaintiff. (After further reviewing the documentary and other evidence relied upon by the defendants the judgment continued).

We are of opinion that the evidence on the side of the plaintiffs, both oral and documentary, is decidedly superior to and more reliable and convincing than that on the side of the defendants. The witnesses produced by the plaintiffs are more disinterested and independent and their evidence is corroborated not only by documentary evidence but by the evidence of some of the defendants' own witnesses.

We now come to Exs. A-37, A-38, A-39 and A-40, which are accounts for the years 1914-15, 1915 to 1917, 1918 to 1920 and 1920 to 1923 respectively. What the respondents most rely on in these accounts are certain entries on the expenditure side showing payments of money to or through Mathura Singh or Badri Prasad (e. g. entries of November 3, November 12, November 20, December 14, December 20, December 26, 1914, and April 26, November 7, 1915, February 27, 1918, November 1, 1919, February 1, and September 30, 1920). We do not think that the fact that some payments were made to Mathura Singh or Badri Prasad, or through them, can lead to any conclusion about the jointness of the family. On the other hand it is significant that while Sheo Singh is always referred to in these accounts as "Thakur Sahib" and his wives as senior and junior "Thakurain Sahibas", Mathura Singh is everywhere mentioned by name and no mention is to be found of his wives. This fact alone goes a long way to support the plaintiffs' case that these accounts are the separate accounts of Sheo Singh; but there are entries in these accounts which prove almost conclusively that Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh were separate from each other. In Ex. A-40 we find an entry of a parole debt of Rs. 600 "borrowed from Thakur Mathura Singh" on February 18, 1923, and there are entries of the repayment of this debt on February 27, and March 24, 1923, in instalments of Rs. 500 and Rs. 100. These transactions no doubt took place after the death of Sheo Singh but if Sheo Singh had died joint with Mathura Singh and Mathura Singh had actually succeeded to him as survivor and was supporting the widows, there could have been no occasion for the widows to borrow a large sum of Rs. 600 from him.

We have already referred to the evidence of P. W. No. 9 Baijnath, who says that he borrowed a sum of Rs. 50 from Sheo Singh twenty or twenty-two years ago and we find an entry relating to this debt dated June 3, 1916, in Ex. A-38. Nothing has been shown in this witness's cross-examination to make us suspect his impartiality and his evidence coupled with Ex. A-38 gives strength to the plaintiffs' case that these accounts are the separate accounts of Sheo Singh. All these accounts are in Urdu in the hand-writing of one and the same person, probably Qurban Ali, and as it is proved that Qurban Ali was in the service of Sheo Singh, this also shows that these accounts represent Sheo Singh's separate accounts.

From the fact that in Ex. A-40 there are certain entries of expenditure amounting to Rs. 80 relating to expenses of music and dancing on the occasion of one of Mathura Singh's marriages it was argued that these entries showed jointness of the family. To our minds, however, so far from showing the jointness of the family they show just the reverse, for if the account Ex. A-40 were the account of the joint family, we should have found in it the entire expenses of Mathura Singh's marriage rather than a partly sum of Rs. 80 spent on dancing and music. Bittan Kuar and Kanchan Kuar were after all the widows of Mathura Singh's cousin and there is nothing strange in their spending something over the marriage ceremonies of Mathura Singh.

The plaintiffs-appellants have filed some accounts in Hindi and applied for their admission under O. XXI, r. 47, Civil P. C. on the ground that those accounts, which are the separate accounts of Mathura Singh, were given to them after the decision of the suit by the trial Court by one of the sons of Badri Prasad. They went to compare certain entries in Exs. A-37 to A-40 with those accounts filed in this Court in order to further show that the cousins were separate and that Exs. A-37 to A-40 are the accounts of Sheo Singh only, but for reasons given in our order on their application No. 621 of 1937 we do not consider it necessary to admit these accounts.

The learned Counsel for the respondents tried to show from the entries in these account books and the lists attached to the plaint that the land revenue paid by Sheo Singh related to the entire family property and not to his own share. There is however nothing to show the exact amount of land revenue payable in respect of the family property between 1914 and 1923, the period to which the accounts relate, and as Sheo Singh was lambardar in almost all the villages and used to pay the land revenue on behalf of his co-sharers also, no conclusion can be drawn from the figures contained in the account books.

The accounts, Exs. A-37 to A-40 so far from proving anything in support of the respondents' case, bear out the case of the appellants.

It is well-established and not disputed that where there is no definite evidence of separation taking place at a particular time, the separation of a family can be proved by the conduct of the family and the attendant circumstances and we are of opinion that in this case there are strong circumstances proving the separation of the family.

To sum up, we have first of all instances of succession to property inconsistent with the jointness of the family. When Ram Sahai died about the year 1886, his property was not only mutated in the name of his widow Raj Kuar to the exclusion of his brothers but Raj Kuar was appointed lambardar of certain villages. When Sheo Singh died mutation was made in favour of his widows and not of Mathura Singh and the order of mutation having been passed by the Tahsildar shows that Mathura Singh did not even contest the widows' right to succeed to their husband. We have also seen that Kanchan Kuar was lambardar in at least three villages. Some of the defendants' witnesses tried to prove that Bittan Kuar and Kanchan Kuar were not in actual possession of the property but their evidence was disbelieved by the learned Judge of the Court below, and we think very rightly. It is well-established that there is no presumption that mutation in the name of a Hindu widow is by way of consolation. Consequently whoever raises the plea of mutation being for consolation must prove it but in the present case there is no evidence worth the name in support of the defendants' allegation on this point. The fact that Ram Sahai and Sheo Singh's widows were lambardars in some of the villages knocks the bottom out of the plea of consolation.

Then, we have evidence not only that Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh's shares were specified in the khewats, but also that they held sir, khudkasht and groves separately. In Anurago Kuar v. Darshan Raut, (1938 O. W., 201) (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the partition of joint estate consists in defining the shares of the co-parceners in the joint family and it is not necessary that there should be an actual division of the property by metes and bounds and that the definition of shares may be proved by an entry in the Record of Rights showing the shares of each member of the family, and, further that such an entry will be evidence of the severance of the joint status. To the same effect is the decision in the case of Harkishan Singh v. Partap

Singh, (1938 O. W. N., 727) (2) in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee say:—

"... According to the Mitakshara Law... partition consists in defining shares of the coparceners in the joint property, and a physical division of the property is not necessary. Once the shares are defined, there is a severance of the joint status. The parties may then make a physical division of the property or they may decide to live together and enjoy the property in common. But the property ceases to be joint immediately the shares are defined and thenceforth the parties hold it as tenants-in-common".

Then, there is evidence that Mathura Singh carried on money-lending business and acquired property in the lifetime of Sheo Singh but there is no evidence that Sheo Singh had anything to do with those transactions. If the defendants' case were true and Sheo Singh were the manager of the joint family, one would expect mortgage deeds and sale-deeds to be in his name rather than in the name of Mathura Singh.

The evidence also proves that the cousins lived in separate houses and had even separate sitting rooms and separate cattle sheds. They also had separate servants and sued and were sued separately. Last but not least are the account books Exs. A-37 to A-40 showing that Sheo Singh kept his own separate accounts from Mathura Singh.

The learned Judge of the Court below has laid stress on the presumption of Hindu Law relating to the jointness of a Hindu family but Sheo Singh and Mathura Singh being cousins and not brothers, the presumption in their case is not very strong. Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law, Para. 233 (1) says:

"Generally speaking, 'the normal state of every Hindu family is joint. Presumably every such family is joint in food, worship and estate. In the absence of proof of division, such is the legal presumption.' In other words, 'given a joint Hindu family, the presumption is, until the contrary is proved, that the family continues joint.' The strength of the presumption necessarily varies in every case. The presumption of union is stronger in the case of brothers than in the case of cousins, and the farther you go from the founder of the family the presumption becomes weaker and weaker."

We are perfectly satisfied that the case of the plaintiffs is true and that Sheo Singh died separate from Mathura Singh.

On the question of the alleged custom of exclusion of sisters and their issue by collaterals the learned Counsel for the respondents relies mainly on the wajib-ul- arz of Isapur, Ex. A-41. Paragraph 4 of this wajib-ul-arz runs thus—

"The custom obtaining in the family of the zamin-dars of this village is that on the death of any co-sharer, if there be any male issue and widow, the male issue get the heritage in equal shares and the widow, food and raimant... If there be no male issue, the real brothers shall be the heirs, generation after generation and shall support the widow. If even real brothers be not in existence, then the widow shall remain the heir for life. If there be two or more widows they shall be the owners in equal shares. In the event of the widow becoming immoral, she shall be deprived of the share. If there be no widow even, then the nearest among the collateral relations of the widow's husband shall get the share and if even he be not forthcoming, then the daughter and her issue and sister and sister's issue shall be the heirs."

The above paragraph can hardly be taken as a record of an invariable custom when we find that on Ram Sahai's death his property devolved on his widow Raj Kunwar and not on his brother, Ram Dayal. As held by their Lordships of the Privy Council wajib-ul-arzes sometimes record not custom but the wishes of those who dictated them or their conception of the law on the subject and in the present case there is no satisfactory evidence to show that the clause of the wajib-ul-arz quoted above, records a custom. It is significant that though the defendants tried to prove the alleged custom by oral evidence also none of the witnesses could cite a single instance in which a sister or sister's son was excluded by collaterals. In Thakur Anant Singh v. Thakur Durga Singh, (L. R. 37 I. A. 191) (3), their Lordships of the Privy Council in a case in which no evidence was given of any instance in which a particular custom had been observed, held that the Appellate Court rightly disregarded the wajib-ul-arzes containing entries which probably connoted the views of individuals as to the practice which they would wish to see prevailing rather than the ascertained facts of a well-established custom. Further, it is difficult to see how there could have been a custom of exclusion of sisters when sisters were no heirs at all in these provinces prior to the passing of Act II of 1929. We are, therefore, of opinion that the wajib-ul-arz of Isapur cannot be taken as establishing the alleged custom of exclusion of sisters and sisters' issue.

The defendants-respondents have filed the wajib-ul-arz of Ismailganj, Ex. A-2, but it contains no such provision relating to the succession of sisters as is contained in the wajib-ul-arz of Isapur. We therefore, hold that the custom set up by the defendants-respondents has not been established. This point is also decided in favour of the appellants.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the plaintiffs' suit decreed with costs in both the Courts.

Forfeiture Act (IX of 1859), s. 20—Section, if repealed by Act VIII of 1868—Mortgagor turning rebel—Property confiscated—Redemption suit by person claiming to be owner must be brought within one year of date of confiscation—Sale certificate—Evidentiary value of.

Section 20, Forfeiture Act, was intended to be a permanent bar against subsequent suits in Civil Court. It has remained in force up to the present day and is not repealed by Act VIII of 1868. The section requires that persons who have any claim that they are owners of property which has been confiscated as the property of another should bring such a claim within one year from the attachment or seizure of the property which they claim. Consequently where the property of a mortgagor who has turned a rebel is confiscated a suit for redemption by person claiming to be its owner is barred if brought more than one year from the date of confiscation. Mahomed Bahadur Khan v. The Collector of Bareilly (2) and Ramphul Tiwari v. Badri Nath (3), relied on. [p. 195, col. 1.]

The sale certificate is the document of title and cannot be lightly ignored by reference back to other documents and it cannot be argued that the property could not have been sold and so must be taken not to have been sold. 63 Ind. Cas. 703 (1), relied on. [p. 197, col. 2.]

F. A. from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Allahabad, dated February 9, 1935.

Messrs. S. K. Dar, Banke Behari and Hyder Mehdi, for the Appellants

Messrs. P. L. Banerji, Mushtaq Ahmad, Mahboob Alam and Radhe Mohan Lal, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—This is a first appeal by Mst. Kunjlas Kunwar and 15 other defendants against a decree for redemption granted in favour of Krishna Deo Singh and other plaintiffs by the learned Civil Judge of Allahabad. The plaint set out that there was a usufructuary mortgage dated February 25, 1848, executed by Badal Singh, guardian and sirbarakar of Bharat Singh minor, the mortgagor, in favour of Mahadeo Prasad and Karanpuri Goshain, mortgagees. The amount of the mortgage money was Rs. 13,001. There was to be no interest but profit would go in lieu of interest and redemption might be made in Jeh of any year. The mortgaged property was set out in Sch. A of the plaint and had become altered by a partition to the property in Sch. B. Para. 3 of the plaint alleged that Bharat Singh only owned one-quarter of the property mortgaged and the remaining three-fourths was owned by Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer and with their consent the name of Bharat Singh was recorded for the entire property and that the mortgage had been made with the consent of these ladies. Para. 4 admitted that on September 7, 1861 the original mortgagees had sold their mortgagee rights to Thakur Sheopal Singh, ancestor of defendants Nos. 1 to 16, the present appellants. Para. 5 stated:

"During the Mutiny in 1857, Bharat Singh turned a rebel. Accordingly his one-fourth share in the mortgaged property was sold at a public auction by the Govt. and the same was purchased by Sheopal Singh aforesaid. Thus Sheopal Singh remained a mortgagee to the extent of three-fourths only. Now defendants Nos. 1 to 16, the heirs and representatives of Sheopal Singh aforesaid, are, as mortgagees, in possession and occupation of three-fourths of the mortgaged property and only a sum of Rs. 9,750-12-0 remains as proportionate mortgage money."

The defence of the appellants is given on pp. 14 to 17. The original mortgage was admitted. It was claimed that the property in fact belonged to Bharat Singh and that Mst. Uttam Kuer and Mst. Gulab Kuer had no right or title therein. Para. 19 claimed that the entire property was confiscated to Govt. Para. 22 claimed that of the Kotwa property out of 44 villages Sheopal Singh received one-fourth share as reward for his loyalty and as to the 16 mortgaged villages one-quarter share was confiscated and purchased by Sheopal Singh on December 21, 1868. Para. 23 admits that the Govt. had exempted in favour of Mst. Uttam Kuer and Mst. Gulab Kuer three-fourths share of Taluqa Kotwa and there was this partition and out of 16 mortgaged villages, they got a five annas share in 9 villages and a share in Raipur. Para. 24 states as follows:

"The rights which Uttam Kuer and Gulab Kuer acquired by exemption were, along with other property, sold at a public auction in execution of a decree of Lala Mahadeo Prasad and Mahant Karan- puri to which Uttam Kuer and Gulab Kuer were also parties and all the rights they had in the mortgaged property became extinguished. The said auction sale took place on April 20, 1877, and the property was purchased by Sheopal Singh. Thus, all the mortgagors' rights in the mortgaged property became extinct since the date of the purchase and Sheopal Singh and his heirs and representatives entered into adverse and proprietary possession and occupation of the aforesaid villages. The suit is barred by 12 years' limitation. Para. 26 stated. The claim is barred by s. 20, Act IX of 1859."

Various issues were framed and the learned Judge in the trial Court has granted a decree for redemption of the property in Sch. B on payment of Rs. 9,240 which is three-fourths of the original mortgage consideration. The appellants have appealed against all portions of the decree.

We shall first of all take up the case of Kotwa Taluqa which stands on a different ground from the other two taluqas. Chak Binda and Motiha as the claim of defendants was that although the Govt. had not confiscated a certain share of the ladies, that share had afterwards been put up to auction sale on another mortgage decree in Suit No. 58 of 1861 and had been purchased at auction sale by Sheopal Singh and it was claimed therefore that with that purchase in 1877 the ladies had no longer any right or title in Taluqa Kotwa by which their descendants could obtain a decree for redemption in 10 villages which now represent the property in Kotwa.

The claim of the ladies to a share in the original property mortgaged will be considered later in connection with the two other taluqas, but in connection with Kotwa the defence is not based on a challenge of their claim but on the fact that Sheopal Singh is alleged to have purchased their rights at the auction sale in execution of a decree No. 58 of 1861. This portion of the case rests on the decree and sale in that case. The mortgage on which this decree in Suit No. 58 of 1861 was based is not available as like many other documents prior to the Mutiny of 1857 it has been lost. The first document on p. 147 is an admission of the claim, filed by the Pleader for the defendants Mst Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer dated April 6, 1861. This sets out that a regular suit was brought against the ladies by Lala Mahadeo Prasad and Mahant Karanpuri for Rs. 10,719-1-3 on account of the amount of a decree for mortgage money with reference to the decision of the Sadar-us-Sadur of December 15, 1855 against a 1 anna 9 pie zamindari share in 44 villages in the Taluqa of Kotwa and with reference to the agreement executed by the defendants dated June 20, 1854. The document then admits that as alleged in the plaint, the claim aforesaid was rightly recoverable

"from the persons of the defendants aforesaid and 1 anna 6 pie zamindari share in 44 villages of taluqa aforesaid in possession of the defendants, mortgaged and hypothecated under the bond on the basis of which the decree was passed as specified in the agreement aforesaid."

On pp 149 and 150 there is the decree in Suit No. 58 of 1861 passed on this admission of claim. This decree states:

"Suit for recovery of Rs. 10,719-1-3, the amount of decree obtained on the mortgage in our favour, the decision of the Sadar-us-Sadur dated December 15, 1855, on the basis of the registered mortgage deed for Rs. 4,999-8-0 principal, dated January 14, 1854, executed by Bharat Singh debtor under the conditional mortgage of a 1 anna 9 pies zamindari share in 44 villages of Taluqa Kotwa, Pargana Juhi, by means of sale, by auction of a 1 anna 3 pie share free from confiscation by Govt. mortgaged and hypothecated under the bond on the basis of which the decree aforesaid was passed, the terms of the agreement executed by the defendants aforesaid, dated and registered on June 20, 1854. . . . The defendants filed an admission of claim through their Pleader. It was, therefore, ordered that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants and the aforesaid property, which is in their possession, for the amount claimed together with costs and interest in the terms of the compromise."

This document makes the matter somewhat clearer and it appears that Bharat Singh had originally executed a mortgage by conditional sale dated January 14, 1854, in favour of Mahadeo Prasad and Mahant Karanpuri and on that a decree had been obtained against him on December 16, 1855. Subsequently there was the Mutiny in 1857 and Bharat Singh was convicted as a rebel and his property was forfeited. Apparently under these circumstances the mortgagees thought it necessary to proceed against the ladies and they based their claim against the ladies on a document which was produced in that record and has been obtained by us from that record. In the Court below a certified copy of this document was filed and is printed on pp. 91 to 93. This document is headed a deed of agreement but it is executed by one person only, Debi Prasad, general attorney of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer. The document on p. 92 from the top of the page sets out the usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 13,001 on 16 villages in Taluqa Kotwa, etc., which is the subject of the present suit dated February 25, 1848. The document states that for a further payment to creditors another sum was borrowed and a document mortgaging the remaining 44 villages of Taluqa Kotwa and certain other property described as Binda and Hakim Patti was executed on behalf of Bharat Singh on January 14, 1854:

"Having regard to the fact that the property is held jointly by co-sharers, the mortgagees aforesaid hesitate in causing mutation of names to be effected."

The beginning of the document has set out that the two ladies have a share in this property. The document proceeds:

"We therefore of our own accord and free will do covenant and give in writing that the entire amount of mortgage payable under the two documents aforesaid is a charge on the entire zamindari (paper torn) mortgaged under the mortgage deeds and on the persons of Bharat Singh and the executors After payment of the amount of mortgage etc, due to the mortgagees, we shall with mutual consent or in any way possible (paper torn) have our names recorded against our respective shares in the 1 anna 9 pie share purchased at auction in this way that the name of Bharat Singh shall be recorded against 3 pies, and against the 1 anna share, me, Gulab Kuer against (paper torn) and the name of Uttam Kuer against the 6 pie share. The terms of the mortgage transaction (paper torn) are and shall be admitted and accepted. I have therefore executed this deed of agreement on behalf of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer by virtue of the power-of-attorney in my favour, registered on April 7, 1854, so that it may serve as evidence."

Although the decree was passed on April 10, 1861, proceedings in execution were spread over a considerable period. Meanwhile on August 30, 1866, the Board of Revenue had passed a final order on p. 179 as follows:

"In supersession of orders No. 385, dated August 15, 1866, Board direct that a 6 pie share of Badul and Bharat in the sixteen villages is to be held confiscated and the names of the two female relatives are to be recorded as owners of the 1 anna 6 pie share in the Taluqa."

It is clear from this order therefore that the ladies were recorded before the partition as owners of 1 anna 6 pie share in the whole of Taluqa Kotwa. On pp. 219 to 222 there is a rubkar in execution of the decree in Suit No. 58 of 1861. The final order is that the application for execution was allowed for a sum of Rs. 6,628-12-0. On pp. 186 to 189 there is a document dated March 6, 1877, which is the notice of sale of Mauza Ramaipur and other villages in Taluqa Kotwa and the sale was fixed for April 20, 1877. The notice states that:

"this sale shall relate only to the rights and interests of Dilas Kuer and other judgment-debtors to the property specified as given below."

In col. 1 there are the names of different mauzas and in col. 2 there is the amount of share and in the third jama (revenue). This is headed: "Name and Govt. jama of the mahal or part of the mahal to be sold by auction..." There is no doubt that it is in this column for the amount of share that the notice states what share is to be sold. The contention for the plaintiffs is that the share to be sold was only 7 annas. If that had been so, the figures '7 annas' would have appeared in col. 2 and not in the figures '12 annas.' The plaintiffs rely on a note in the last column which is headed; "Detail of share or crop of each judgment-debtor mentioned by the decree-holder in his application." Apparently this column is intended for specification of how the different judgment-debtors hold the total share which is entered as the share to be sold in col. 2 and it is not to this last column that a purchaser looks to find the property which is to be sold. Opposite the first village Ramaipur there is a note as follows:

"This Mauza Ramaipur is in possession of Sheopal Singh by virtue of mortgage. The former mortgaged share 5 annas and the share mortgaged with conditional sale 7 annas. Whatever rights and interests of defendants are in this should be sold by auction."

The next village Mauza Katwarapur has a note as follows:

"In Mauza Katwarapur a 5 annas each is in possession of Sheopal Singh by virtue of mortgage and the rest in possession of defendants. The rights and interests of the defendants should be sold by auction."

The subsequent villages in this list have a similar note down as far as Mauza Shahbaz, that is the last of the 12 annas share villages and the other villages have a note that the rights and interests of the defendants should be sold by auction. The argument for the plaintiffs is that so far as Ramaipur is concerned, the mention is made in this last column that the mortgage with conditional sale was 7 annas and therefore the argument is that this note should be read as applying to all the other villages and that only 7 annas was to be sold according to this notice. We cannot accept that view. The note clearly related to Ramaipur. The note does not say that 7 annas is to be sold. It is true that the note does mention the mortgage with conditional sale as 7 annas but that is all. A fair construction of this document certainly is that what was notified for sale was 12 annas of all the villages Ramaipur to Shahbaz and these are the nine villages on p. 8 in which redemption is claimed of a 5 anna share and the remaining village Raipur is 1 anna 6 pies the whole of which was to be sold according to this notice of sale.

On p. 223 there is an order of the Court of the sale officer dated April 19, 1877 to the effect that the report of the Sadar Kanungo showed that there was a difference between the notice and the pattidari statement as regards amount of share and jama and a copy of the report was sent to the Subordinate Judge for instructions. On p. 225 the Pleader for the decree-holder asked that the entire rights and interest of the judgment-debtors may be sold by auction with reference to the correct share and jama of the defendants. This reply of the Pleader was forwarded by the Court. On p. 224 the sale officer notes that this reply was received after conclusion of the sale by auction of the property. The fact that this was received after the conclusion of the sale is also mentioned on p. 227, line 11. Learned Counsel pointed out that the report of the Sadar Kanungo in question is given as a record of the pattidari statement on pp. 243 and 245. These nine villages are shown beginning with Lurhwa on p. 243 and continuing to p. 245. There is however no real difference in regard to the shares of the judgment-debtors which are shown on pp. 241 and 242 as annas 12, and in the pattidari statement on pp. 243 to 245 in the margin also as annas 12 for these nine villages. The matter therefore is of no importance. It is admitted for the plaintiffs-respondents that no objection was taken by the ladies to the sale notice or at the time of sale. On pp. 226 to 228 there is a rubkar of the sale officer of the date of sale, April 20, 1877 and in that he sets out that the property sold was 12 annas share in these nine villages and 1 anna 6 pies in Raipur and he states that the sale was concluded for Rs. 1,905 in the name of Sheopal Singh. There was an objection dated May 19, 1877, made by the judgment-debtors which is in a typed book, pp. 8 and 9. In this they objected to the amount of Rs. 1,900 realized at the sale and claimed that it should be Rs. 30,000 and they objected to the want of beat of drum in all but four villages and to the fact that some objection of theirs was not decided before attachment was made. They do not state in this objection any objection to the amount of property sold which was entered as 12 annas in the rubkar of the sale officer and in the notice of sale. On p. 229, line 38, the rubkar of the Civil Court states :

"This day when the defendants made a relinquishment the objection of the defendants was rejected and an order was passed for confirmation of the sale. It is therefore ordered that the sale in this case, dated April 20, 1877, be confirmed."

The date of this order is July 21, 1877. In accordance with this order a sale certificate dated November 12, 1877 was drawn up in favour of Sheopal Singh which is printed on pp. 237 to 239. That document sets out the nine villages 12 annas shares and Raipur 1 anna 6 pies share as the amount of share sold and states in the remarks column "in this the rights and interests of the defendants were sold." Learned Counsel for plaintiffs-respondents argued that some weight should be attached to these words but we consider that these words are of an ordinary nature and their entry is a mere matter of routine. It is not to be denied for the plaintiffs that the ladies had the right and title to the entire 12 annas and therefore the expression cannot be taken to mean that a less amount than 12 annas was sold. The rubkar beginning at p. 240 was sent for mutation in favour of Sheopal Singh as is shown by the order on p. 246, line 4. In this matter the defendants-appellants rely on a ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramabhadra Naidu v. Kadiriyaasami Naicker (1), where on p. 489 their Lordships state :

"Certificates of sale are documents of title which are not to be lightly regarded or loosely construed. There is full opportunity for challenge of all proceedings in the execution of mortgage decrees at the time, and except in clear cases a purchaser ought not to be harassed in his possession by disputes arising years after his purchase."

Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents relies on the following documents for his case that only 7 annas out of the 12 annas was sold by this auction sale. Exhibit 58 on pp. 231 to 233 is a simple mortgage deed by Sheopal Singh and his son, Ajodhya Prasad Singh, dated November 10, 1877. This sets out :

"For the satisfaction of the said creditor we have, in order to secure payment of the amount due under this bond, pledged, hypothecated and mortgaged in Taluga Kotwa, Pargana Jhusi the shares of Uttam Kuer and Gulab Kuer which I, Sheopal Singh, purchased at an auction sale held on April 20, 1877 and execute this simple mortgage to secure the loan hereunder borrowed."

In the table on p. 232 there are the nine villages in which there was a 12 annas share sold shown as being now mortgaged by the purchaser to the extent of 7 annas. The argument is made that because he was now mortgaging 7 annas therefore it must be assumed that he had only purchased 7 annas. This argument is not logical because if a man purchased 12 annas, he is not compelled to mortgage the whole of that amount specially as the mortgage in question was for a small amount of Rs. 1,145. There is nothing in the document which states that the whole of the share which had been purchased at the auction sale was being mortgaged. Reference is only made to the auction sale to show what was the title of the mortgagors. Similar remarks apply to the simple mortgage deed also executed by Sheopal Singh and his son on November 10, 1877, to the same mortgagees printed on p. 234 to 236.

Another line of argument was taken by learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents to the effect that it would have been incorrect to put up for sale 12 annas of these nine villages because that 12 annas was not all responsible for the mortgage and that only the amount responsible for the mortgage should have been put up or would have been put up for sale. The facts that are basis of this argument are as follows: On p. 92 there is set out the usufructuary mortgage of 16 villages in Taluqa Kotwa and then the words are used "thereupon a document mortgaging the remaining 44 villages of Taluqa Kotwa," etc., was executed on January 14, 1854. This no doubt recites that the 44 villages in the mortgage of 1854 were none of them the same as the 16 villages in the usufructuary mortgage. The matter was certainly not made clear in the decree in Suit No. 58 of 1861 which merely says that there was to be a sale by auction of the share of 1 anna 3 pies "in 44 villages of Taluqa Kotwa." It was not stated which were the 44 villages. Now learned Counsel refers in detail to the partition proceedings in 1873-75. On p. 204 there is a partition agreement between the parties to that partition of whom No. 31 is Uttam Kuer, wife of Mohan Singh. Number 32 is Dilas Kuer wife, and 33 Krishna Deo Singh, son of Amar Bahadur Singh. This Uttam Kuer was not to be confused with Uttam Kuer No. 14. The share of these ladies, Krishna Deo Singh, and Sheopal Singh is shown in the list as a 2 annas share on p. 206. Sixty villages of Taluqa Kotwa were divided into Class I 37 villages which were called uparwar villages, that is villages on high ground and Class II villages kachhar or low ground villages, that is villages liable to alluvial action. In Class I there were six more villages added by agreement on p. 208. All the nine villages with which we are concerned were thus added in Class I which was brought up to the total of 43 villages and it was provided in regard to these 43 villages that there would be division by entire villages among the eight groups of shareholders, shown on p. 206. The other villages were to be divided up by pattis in each village which is called bong bat. On p. 212 lot No. 5 was given to Mohim Singh, husband and karpardaz of Mst. Uttam Kuer zamindar for the proprietors of Patti Badal Singh and it is this lot No. 5 with which we are concerned. A document which has not been printed but of which a translation has been made Ex. 42, shows that these nine villages comprised lot No. 5 and it is admitted that in these nine villages as shown on pp. 243 to 245 Sheopal Singh was entered for 4 annas and the ladies and Krishna Deo Singh for 12 annas. On p. 216 the ladies made an application as follows:

"It is submitted that Sheopal Singh is the zamindar of 16 villages in the ilaga of the applicants. Now 15 villages held as mortgagee and 28 villages of the applicants' ilaga have been taken (?) together (?) and partition has been effected with reference to gaumbat and lots have been formed. Out of 43 villages a lot of 9 villages has fallen to the share of the applicants with reference to the lots. Out of 16 villages possession over one village, viz., Balrampur, has been continued as before and two villages out of those held as mortgagees have been continued as before, i. e., possession has been maintained over the villages of Lurhwa and Ohak Karim alias Khanipur. Accordingly with the exception of the villages of Ramaipur and Katwarpur and after taking out all the villages of Balampur, Lurhwa and Ohak Karim alias Khanipur, with reference to the lots, the arbitrators may separate the other villages from the applicants' gaumbat to which applicants shall have no objection."

It is claimed on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the 43 villages which went to form the 16 annas of the nine villages came actually from 15 villages which were subject of the usufructuary mortgage of 1848 and 28 villages which were not but which were subject to the 1854 mortgage. The argument therefore is that as only 2d of the 43 villages were subject to the 1854 mortgage, the whole of the 12 annas in the nine villages should not have been sold in execution of the decree on the 1854 mortgage. The mortgagees of the 1854 mortgage, Mahadeo Prasad and Sheopuri Goshain, are shown on p. 149 as residents of the city of Allahabad, and they were not in possession of the shares mortgaged, nor were they parties to the partition suit. The suit was in 1873 to 1875 and the rights of these mortgagees had previously merged in 1861 in the decree which they obtained in Suit No. 58 of 1861. Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents has failed to show us that there is anything on the record showing that the partition suit settled that the mortgage of 1854 should be limited to any particular portion of the 12 annas share in these nine villages. That suit did not deal with this question at all, nor could it deal with it in the absence of the mortgagees. Learned Counsel argues that in the "agreement" or declaration of June 20, 1854, by the attorney of the ladies the 44 villages of the 1854 mortgage are said to be separate from the 16 villages of the usufructuary mortgage, and the partition settled that 5 annas of the 12 annas in the nine villages was under the usufructuary mortgage, therefore the balance of the 12 annas, that is 7 annas, should be held to be under the 1854 mortgage because the principle of keeping them separate should still prevail. It will be noted that the only mention of 7 annas mortgage was for a single village Ramaipur in the column of detail of shares in the notice of sale on p. 186, and for that and the other villages the share for sale in col. 2, was shown as 12 annas.

Of the nine villages shown with 5 annas shares usufructuarily mortgaged in Kotwa after partition in list B of the plaint, p. 8, only two appear in the list of villages in the original usufructuary mortgage list A on p. 6. These two are Ohak Karim, also known as Khanipur, No. 21, p. 8 and No. 26, p. 6, and Lorhua, No. 22, p. 8, No. 27, p. 6. The other seven villages on p. 8, No. 17 Ramaipur, No. 18 Katwarpur, No. 19 Sarai Chachack, No. 20 Deokali, No. 23 Todarpur, No. 24 Zarait Shahbaz and No. 25 Zarait Suthan do not appear on p. 6 for Kotwa, and therefore they were not subject to the original usufructuary mortgage but, if we accept p. 92, line 9 as correct, were subject to the mortgage of 1854. Mahadeo Prasad, etc. the decree-holders in Suit No. 58 of 1861 would find that in Kotwa Taluqa the judgment-debtors, who had originally 1 anna 6 pies out of 2 annas, that is three-fourths of the family share in these seven villages, had after partition been entered for 12 annas out of 16 annas, also three-fourths of the family share (the remaining 4 annas being held by Sheopal Singh, a relative who had obtained it by purchase at confiscation sale). The natural conclusion of the decree-holders would be that as the three-fourths share had been subject to their 1854 mortgage, so the three-fourths share after partition should be subject to the mortgage decree. The judgment-debtors did not make any objection before or after the sale to this sale of the whole 12 annas.

Whether there was some error in the shares sold in 1877 is a matter which cannot be questioned now after all these years. The mere fact that Sheopal Singh, the purchaser, was a usufructuary mortgagee does not in our opinion entitle the plaintiffs to re-open the question, in this suit of 1933. The matter is long ago time-barred. We hold that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that they have any right of redemption in the villages of Taluqa Kotwa, and accordingly we allow the appeal in regard to Taluqa Kotwa.

We now turn to the case in regard to the other two talukas which are shown in the plaint as Taluqa Chak Binda, 12 villages, 2 annas share, and Taluqa Motiha, 4 villages, 1 anna share. In each case the claim is for redemption of 3/4ths of these amounts i. e. 1 anna 6 pies for Taluqa Chak Binda and 9 pies for Taluqa Motiha. The first objection taken on behalf of the defence was that the ladies had failed to establish that they ever had any right or title to this property. The right and title of the ladies is based on this document of which a copy is printed on pp. 91 to 93 and of which we have obtained the original. If we assume that this was a genuine document executed as it purports to have been executed on June 20, 1854 and registered on that date there are still some difficult questions on which the plaintiffs have failed to satisfy us. The first point is that this document is not any sort of agreement although it is headed "agreement." The document is executed by Debi Prasad who describes himself as general attorney of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer and on their behalf he puts forward an allegation that the ladies owned 1 anna share in the case of Gulab Kuer and 6 pies share in the case of Uttam Kuer and that Bharat Singh only owned 3 pies share. The pedigree of this family is given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on p. 29 as follows:

Now it is clear from this pedigree that these two ladies Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer could never have had any right or title in 1848 or in 1854 or at any period to the property of the family. The husbands of both these ladies were alive at the time in 1848 and Amar Bahadur Singh, husband of Gulab Kunwar, has a son Krishna Deo Singh, plaintiff No. 1, who is still alive and the husband of Uttam Kuar had a son Sheo Pratap Singh. Although the mortgage deed of 1848 was in the name of Bharat Singh, minor, alone under his father Badal Singh as guardian, the document sets out on p. 91 the method in which the document on p. 91 derived a title for these two ladies under these difficult circumstances is as follows:

"The zamindari property of Amar Bahadur Singh, Sheo Ratan Singh and Rachhpal Singh in the talukas aforesaid was, in consultation with the executants and Mst. Basant Kuar, mother and guardian of Bharat Singh minor, all of whom were the co-sharers in possession of the property purchased in the name of the minor aforesaid at an auction sale held in execution of a decree. The sale proceeds were deposited after borrowing the same from Lala Manohar Lal Mahajan, resident of Rani Mandi, in the City of Allahabad with mutual consent. It was agreed upon that all should jointly pay the prior debt payable by the ancestors and the sale proceeds recently borrowed due to the creditor by mortgaging zamindari property in the ilagas aforesaid and that after the debt has been paid and the ilaga is released each co-sharer should have her name recorded in the public registers with reference to her old share and enter into possession."

To support these allegations no documents are produced. The allegations appear to be that there was a borrowing from Lala Manohar Lal in the name of the ladies and the minor. It is not alleged in this document that the ladies had any property with which the auction purchase could be made. It was merely alleged that the money was borrowed in their names and there is nothing whatever to confirm the allegation. Moreover on p. 92, line 10 it is admitted that there was a further deed of mortgage on January 14, 1854 and this again was in the name of Bharat Singh alone. Now this document (the agreement) was produced for the first time in suit No. 58 of 1861 and by that time the Mutiny had taken place in 1857 and the property of Bharat Singh and other members of the family had been confiscated. The ladies had therefore put forward a claim that they were the owners of the property. It is under these doubtful circumstances that this ingenious claim is made unsupported by any document to show that the ladies had borrowed any money from Lala Manohar Lal. We are unable to accept that the statement of Debi Prasad, the general attorney of the ladies, does give them any right or title to the property in question. This finding would be sufficient alone for the dismissal of the plaintiff's suit for redemption of the property mortgaged in Talukas Chak Binda and Motiha in the name of Bharat Singh in 1848.

Assuming that the plaintiffs had overcome this difficulty the next point taken by the defence is that the property even if it had belonged to the ladies was treated by the authorities as the property of Bharat and was all confiscated and sold in the proceedings after the Mutiny. On p. 97 there is an order of the Court of committal to Sessions, dated May 28, 1858, of Bharat Singh and other members of the family, his father Badal Singh and Amar Bahadur Singh, husband of Mst. Gulab Kuar and Rachhpal Singh. The Sessions case is noted as decided on December 13, 1861. On pp. 142 to 145 there is a rubkar of Mr. Nazir Ali Khan, Deputy Collector, exercising the powers of a Magistrate dated April 29, 1860, and he sets out that the 7 accused persons including Bharat Singh, Badal Singh, Amar Bahadur Singh and Rachhpal Singh had been submitted to the Court of the Special Commissioner for passing an order confiscating their property as they were ringleaders. A table of the different accused and their shares follows and it is stated that in regard to accused No. 3 Bharat Singh he appeared on January 14, 1859 after the expiry of the period allowed in the Queen's Proclamation. The zamindari property was attached under general orders dated February 20, 1858 and April 29, 1858 passed in this case. "This should be entered in the statement showing the property confiscated." The order follows on p. 145 to the effect that "the rubkar should be put up before the Magistrate for two purposes: (1) the zamindari property of No. 3 Bharat Singh... be entered in the statement showing confiscated property."

On p. 193 there is a statement dated July 15, 1870 of the confiscated property of the rebels and it shows Taluqa Motiha four mahals. It states that Badal Singh had 3 pies which was confiscated by order of Mr. Mayne, Special Commissioner, dated February 20, 1858 and of this amount Mahadeo and Mahant Karanpuri were mortgagees and that the zamindari rights should be sold. The next entry is similar, for Bharat Singh 6 pies. And for Amar Bahadur 3 pies which was shown as confiscated and granted to a loyalist Asapal Singh, but this 3 pies was not mortgaged. There was therefore 9 pies in Taluqa Motiha which was confiscated with the direction "it should be sold."

On p. 271 there is an extract from the list of villages confiscated which refers to Bharat Singh and Badal Singh as the owner of 3 annas share in Binda and Chak Moqim which was confiscated under various orders of February 20, and April 29, 1858 and June 6, 1860. There was also another 1 anna shown for Bharat Singh mortgagor which was in possession of Mahadeo and Mahant Karanpuri, mortgagees in Chak Binda and Chak Moqim, Urna and others 12 villages, and further a 1 anna in the same villages in Taluqa Chak Binda also with Bharat Singh and Badal Singh, mortgagors, and Mahadeo and Mahant Karanpuri as mortgagees. These entries undoubtedly relate to the villages which were usufructually mortgaged in Taluqa Chak Binda and the entry of confiscation shows that the rights shown for the mortgagors were confiscated in the whole of the 2 annas claimed on p. 5 of the plaint. We therefore find that both in Taluqa Chak Binda and in Taluqa Motiha there was the confiscation of the property of the mortgagors. Now it is true that various objections were made to the attachment by the ladies. On pp. 98 and 99 there are two applications by one Gur Datt Chaube who was put down as the employee of Gulab Kuer in the first case and in the second he apparently applies on behalf of the lady whose husband was Mohim Singh, i. e., Mst. Uttam Kuer. The petitions were both made on July 3, 1858, and the petitions asked that 1 anna of Mst. Gulab Kuer in Taluqa Kutua and Taluqa Chak Binda should be released and also Motiha. The other petition does not mention a share. On pp. 102 and 103 there is the order of the Court dated July 8, 1858. The order is very brief:

"Let parwanas be issued to the Tahsildars of Sikandara and Kiwai for release of the property of the defendants."

Learned Counsel for plaintiffs-respondents contends that this order was passed on these applications. He also claims that it was passed on the merits of the claims of these ladies after an inquiry. The order was passed five days after the applications were made. We consider that this was an interim order of release from attachment without any inquiry passed merely on the allegations that were contained in the applications. There were parwanas issued by the Court to various Tahsildars on pp. 100, 101, 103, 104 and 105. The Tahsildars made various replies. On p. 109 the Tahsildar of Kiwai and Mah reported that there was no property of the ladies attached in that Tahsil. This Tahsil contains Taluqa Chak Binda and Motiha as is shown on p. 5 of the plaint.

The history of these talukas must be distinguished from the history of Taluqa Kotwa in which the Tahsildar's Report on p. 107 of July 12, 1858, was that although Bharat Singh and Badal Singh were recorded in the pattidari register of zamindars and Uttam Kuer was not recorded in that register, still in the register of revenue the name of Uttam Kuer was recorded as manager of 1 anna, and a similar report was made in regard to Gulab Kuer as manager of 2 annas on p. 110 in Taluqa Kotwa, and the matter is mentioned in another report on p. 112 of January 19, 1859, which states that the 2 annas was released to Gulab Kuer and the 1 anna was released to Uttam Kuer in accordance with the order of the Court of August 2, 1858. It is to be noted that there was no such release in the Taluqa of Chak Binda and the Motiha. On p. 147 there is an order of the Court dated August 8, 1860, in the file of Mauza Motiha to the effect that the properties of Bharat Singh, Badal Singh and Amar Bahadur Singh had been confiscated by the Govt. under order of the Magistrate dated June 2, 1860, and of the Collector dated June 6, 1860. The order of the Magistrate is that printed on p. 142. This order doubtless was passed in regard to all the villages in Ohak Binda Taluqa and Motiha Taluqa. On p. 271 there is an order for mutation in the name of the Crown for all the villages of Ohak Binda Taluqa to the extent of 1 anna, the entry being :

"Queen Empress, mortgagor Mahadeo, son of Kandhai Lal, and Mahanth Karanpuri, disciple of Niranjanpuri, mortgagees in possession."

On p. 280 there is a similar order in the register of mutation for Motiha Mauza opposite two entries of 3 pies for Bharat Singh and one entry of 3 pies for Badal Singh. There was also in Motiha a mutation on pp. 278 and 279 of 3 pies which had been in the name of Gulzari Singh, son of Bhagwan Singh, and this was mutated in the name of the Queen Empress on the ground of confiscation. It is true that there is not the entry of the usufructuary mortgage for this 3 pies share. On pp. 282 and 283 there is also another entry for Binda and Ohak Moqim on dispossession of Bharat Singh from a 3 annas share of confiscation but this was not shown as mortgaged property. From 1860 to 1863 the confiscated property in these two taluqas remained under direct management of the Crown in the contrast to Taluqa Kotwa in which a share of 3 annas had been released to the management of the ladies. On pp. 200 and 201 there is an entry of a Govt. order of October 24, 1863, which grants permission for the sale of this confiscated property in Ohak Binda and mortgage is mentioned. On p. 180 there is the list of sale for these two taluqas the property to be sold on September 20, 1864, the amount to be sold being 2 annas in Ohak Binda and 9 pies in Motiha both under the usufructuary mortgage. On p. 160 there is an enquiry by the Court from the Tahsildar of Kiwai as to the amount of share and revenue in the property confiscated by Govt. and whether the name of the rebel or of the Govt. was recorded against the confiscated share and other points. The reply of the Tahsildar dated March 12, 1864, is on p. 161 in regard to Ohak Binda. He states that the name of the Govt. was recorded against a 2 annas share bearing a revenue of Rs. 586 and that Sheopal Singh mortgagee was in possession. On p. 162 there is a petition by the two ladies dated July 20, 1864, in regard to all three taluqas in which they state that only the name of Bharat Singh was recorded but that the ladies got their names recorded for 44 villages in Taluqa Kotwa and got that taluqa property released on August 22, 1858, but that they did not get possession of Ohak Binda or Motiha Taluqas. They asked that they should be given relief by release of the shares they claimed in all three taluqas and that only the remaining share of Bharat Singh should be sold by auction. On p. 163 the report of the Tahsildar dated July 27, 1864, in regard to Ohak Binda states :

"The applicant wants the release of the confiscated share of Bharat Singh rebel, which has been advertized for sale and has been granted for loyalty, alleging it to be her share. The share of Bharat Singh was forfeited under order of Mr. Mayne, Special Commissioner, dated February 20, 1858, and this confiscation was sanctioned by Govt. The prayer of the applicant for release of the share aforesaid is, therefore, groundless. Report is submitted. Necessary orders may be passed."

On p. 164 there is the second application made by the ladies by way of a petition dated September 10, 1864, to the Board of Revenue. The application is in regard to all three taluqas. On p. 268 there is the order of the Board of Revenue on September 17, 1864, referring the matter to the Collector. The reply of the Collector dated September 19, 1864, is on p. 159 and is as follows :

"In reply to your docket No. 434 dated 17th instant, regarding a petition by Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer I have the honour to report that their names are not shown in the malgozaree registers as zamindars of talukas Motiha and Ohak Binda.

2. The recorded proprietors are Badal Singh and Bharat Singh whose proprietary rights were confiscated in 1857. Since confiscation, Govt. has been the recorded proprietor.

3. The petitioners are the wives of two notorious absconders, cousins to each other, and nephews of Badal who is father of Bharat Singh.

4. The petitioners declare that they purchased the zamindari they now claim seven or eight years before the rebellion, from Ummar Bahadur and Ruchpal Singh, or in other words they purchased the property of the husband of one and the father-in-law of the other, but that it was recorded fictitiously as the property of Bharat Singh.

5. Independently of the improbability of these statements, it must be noted that the petitioners have never advanced their claims in this Court, during the seven years that have elapsed since the confiscation of this zamindari.

6. It is evidently a last attempt to save their husband's former property from the final sale which will transfer it into new hands.

7. A family tree is attached to which reference is requested."

On p. 160 at the top of the page there are the words : "Board's order. Application rejected. 30. 9." The appellant claimed that this is the order of the Board on the letter of the Collector on p. 159. Mr. Banerji for the respondents-plaintiffs claims that this is not the order. His ground for saying so is that the certified copy filed of the order is on a separate piece of paper from the certified copy of the letter. If this was not the order, as the copies have been filed in the Court below, it was open to Mr. Banerji to have sent for the original document and have shown that some other order was passed and that the appellants were wrong in producing that order in the Court below as the order on the letter. No other order has been shown by Mr. Banerji, nor is it shown by him that the original does not contain the order. It is also to be noted that on the letter of the Collector it would not have been possible to pass any order to the contrary effect and that the most that the Board might have done would have been to make further enquiries.

On p. 168 there is the third petition of the ladies dated September 19, 1864, which was addressed to the Court asking that the sale fixed for the next day might be postponed and their rights safeguarded. Apparently this was in regard to all three talukas as they signed in regard to those talukas. On p. 167 the order of the Court on this petition was :

"That this application be placed on the record and as a precautionary measure the auction-purchasers be informed of the contents of the application."

On p. 165 there is a petition of Sheopal Singh dated September 19, 1864. The order on this is on p. 167 and is, "At the time of auction-sale the purchasers be informed of the contents of the application." On p. 169 there is a robkar of the Collector dated September 20, 1864 setting out the sale of the 2 annas share in Mauza Chak Binda bearing a revenue of Rs. 586 which was in possession of Sheopal Singh as mortgagee and the rejection of the petition of the ladies, and the letter from the Board of Revenue containing their petition to the Board, and that a reply was sent on September 19, 1864 (which is the letter on p. 159 of the Collector) and reference is also made to the third petition of the ladies and it was stated that the purchasers were informed of the particulars in the aforesaid applications. It was further stated that the sale went on for a long time and Sheopal Singh purchased the rights in Taluqa Chak Binda for Rs. 2,108. On p. 181 there is an extract from the list of confiscated property for sale by auction which shows this sale to Sheopal Singh of Taluqa Chak Binda and also the sale to Sheopal Singh on the same date of Taluqa Motiha for Rs. 550. On p. 171 there is an order of the Court informing the Tahsildar of Kiwai of these two sales. On the same date there is a report of the Tahsildar dated December 5, 1864 stating that there was mutation by the removal of the name of Govt. and the entry of the name of Sheopal Singh, auction-purchaser. Sheopal Singh has been in possession of the shares of 2 annas in Chak Binda Taluqa and nine pies of the share in Motiha Taluqa for the period from the auction sale in 1864 up to the date of suit on November 1, 1933 which is a period of 69 years. The remaining three pies in Chak Binda appears to have been confiscated and granted to someone as is shown by the letter of the Collector on p. 159. Or it may be that the deed of the usufructuary mortgage was not originally for more than 9 pies share in Taluqa Motiha. It is to be noted that we have not got that mortgage-deed before us or any copy of it. Be that as it may, it is clear that there never was any entry of these ladies for possession of any share of the property in Motiha which was the subject of the usufructuary mortgage and therefore the descendants of these ladies the plaintiffs cannot claim through them a right of redemption. The distinction between the history of these two talukas and the history of Kotwa is shown by the correspondence between pp. 173 and 179.

On p. 173 the Commissioner on June 11, 1866 made a reference to the Board in regard to Taluqa Kotwa alone and on p. 173, line 37 he stated that Mr. Sladen, the Collector, considered that confiscation was barred by the admission of these women as managers and by the share they had in the mortgage. The Commissioner himself took a contrary view. The first order of the Board on p. 174 was passed on the erroneous assumption that the ladies had been entered for shares and on a subsequent reference the Board passed a final order on p. 179 dated August 30, 1866 to the following effect :

"The Board direct that a 6 pie share of Badal and Bharat in the sixteen villages is to be held confiscated and the names of the two female relatives are to be recorded as owners of the 1 anna 6 pie share in the taluka."

No such order was ever obtained by the ladies in regard to Taluqa Chak Binda and Motiha. What happened in those talukas was that their names were never entered as managers or in any other capacity, that the Tahsildar never released any of the property in their favour, that the sale took place of the shares as recorded in the names of the rebels and that Sheopal Singh purchased those shares and obtained mutation in his favour. No objection was ever taken and his possession has all along been without challenge. We are of opinion that under these circumstances the descendants of the ladies cannot now re-open this matter in regard to Chak Binda and Motiha and that the plaintiffs have failed to show that there was any right, title or interest of the ladies in these two talukas. On this ground also the case for the plaintiffs must fail. A further ground brought forward by the appellants is the provisions of Act IX of 1859, s. 20. This Act was to provide for the adjudication of claims to property seized as forfeited and it provided for Courts of special commission to be set up. We have seen that the matter of confiscation was brought before such a Special Commissioner in Allahabad and that his decision was that the shares in Taluqas Chak Binda and Motiha were to be confiscated. No application or objection was ever made by these ladies to that Court. Section 20 of that Act provides as follows :

"Nothing in this Act shall be held to affect the rights of parties not charged with any offence for which upon conviction the property of the offender is forfeited, in respect of any property attached or seized as forfeited or liable to be forfeited to Govt. provided that no suit brought by any party in respect of such property shall be entertained unless it be instituted within the period of one year from the date of the attachment or seizure of the property to which the suit relates."

This section in our opinion clearly requires that persons who have any claim that they are owners of property which has been confiscated as the property of another should bring such a claim within one year from the attachment or seizure of the property which they claim. Various objections have been taken to the application of this Act which have found favour with the Court below. One of these objections is that s. 20 would not apply because by Act VIII of 1868 certain provisions of the Act were repealed, namely ss. 1 to 15 and s. 19. The repeal was made because by the year 1868 the special Courts had finished their work and were no longer necessary and ss. 1 to 15 related to those special Courts. The application of s. 18 had expired, but as regards s. 20 its application was permanent because it was intended to be a permanent bar against subsequent suits in Civil Courts.

Hence s. 20 has remained in force up to the present day.

Another objection taken to the Act is that there really was no attachment or seizure of the property in question and therefore the period of one year did not begin to run. Now we have seen that as regards these two Taluqas of Chak Binda and Motiha there was an attachment by the Criminal Court and this was carried out by the Tahsildar and the application of the ladies against this did not result in the Tahsildar of Kiwai releasing the property in these two talukas from attachment. Accordingly, in our opinion, the property was attached and the period of one year did begin to run. The relevant portions of the paper book are p. 142, line 25 :

"Hence a parwana be issued to the Sub-Inspector of Police for taking all necessary action in connection with the arrest and attachment of the property of the seven accused mentioned."

This property as shown on p. 143 included the property in Chak Binda Taluqa and Motiha. On pp. 109 and 111 there are the reports of the Tahsildar of Kiwai and there is the letter of the Collector on p. 159 saying that they had no property recorded for them. We think therefore that from the date of the attachment which was in accordance with the order of March 9, 1858 mentioned on p. 142, line 21 and which had been objected to in the petitions of Gur Datt Chaube (pp. 28 and 99) dated July 3, 1858, time began to run against these ladies under s. 20, Act IX of 1859. As they did not bring any claim within one year from that attachment in 1859 their right to contest the attachment became barred.

This view of the effect of Act IX of 1859 has been taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Muhammad Bahadur Khan v. The Collector of Bareilly (2) a case decided in 1874. The suit was brought in 1865 before amendment of the Act of 1868. It was held that where B's estate is confiscated the sons of his brother A who should have had a share could not sue after the expiry of one year from the date of the attachment. Another case in which the matter was considered after the amendment of the Act is Ramphul Tiwari v. Badri Nath (3) where a Bench of this Court held that a case stronger than the present, brought by the reversioners of a widow less than 12 years after the death of the widow was similarly barred. We are therefore of opinion that the present suit would also be barred by the provisions of Act IX of 1859. For all the reasons we have given we consider that the suit of the plaintiffs must fail in its entirety. We allow this appeal with costs and we dismiss the suit of the plaintiffs with costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

Verma, J. — I agree that the appeal should be allowed and wish to add only a few words. It is common ground that at the time of the execution of the mortgage deed in question the names of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer were not entered in the revenue records in respect of the property in question, or for the matter of that, in respect of any property whatsoever. The names of various male members of the family were entered against different portions of the property belonging to the family. It must also be borne in mind that the mortgage deed, of which redemption is sought by the plaintiffs as the representatives of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer, was executed by Bharat Singh alone, or rather on his behalf by his father and guardian Badal Singh.

The case put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents is that although the entire property belonging to the family stood in the names of the male members alone and the names of the ladies Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer were not entered, and although the property mortgaged under the deed in question stood in the name of Bharat Singh or Badal Singh, and although the mortgage in question was made by Bharat Singh or Badal Singh, yet the ladies had a proprietary interest in the property and must therefore be treated as mortgagors along with Bharat Singh and Badal Singh. The defendants-appellants deny this. The further contention of the defendants-appellants as to Taluqa Chak Binda and Taluqa Motiha is that even if it be taken for granted that the ladies had any proprietary interest in the property, the Govt. confiscated the entire property as belonging to Bharat Singh and Badal Singh, who had been found to have been rebels during the Mutiny, and it was sold as the property of the rebels and was purchased by Sheopal Singh, the predecessor-in-title of the appellants, and no suit having been brought by the ladies within one year as required by Act IX of 1859, whatever rights they might have possessed came to an end. The plaintiffs-respondents, on the other hand, contend that the Govt. released the shares of the ladies, which were found to amount to three-fourths of the property in question, and consequently the confiscation and sale must be taken to be operative in respect of only one-fourth of the property which was the share found to belong to Bharat Singh and Badal Singh.

It seems to me that the case put forward on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents is an unusual and improbable one and a heavy burden rests on them. Not only were the husbands of these ladies, viz. Amar Bahadur Singh and Mohim Singh, alive, but they were actually entered in the Govt. records as the proprietors, and the names of the ladies were not, as stated above, entered against any property. It has nowhere been stated by the plaintiffs when and how these Hindu ladies came to acquire a share in the property, and no evidence has been adduced on the point. In the plaint there are merely the bald statements that the original mortgagor was the owner of only one-fourth of the entire property mortgaged, that the remaining three-fourths was owned by Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer, that with the consent of the ladies the name of the original mortgagor stood recorded in the papers against the entire property mortgaged, and that "the persons named above" (evidently meaning Badal Singh and Bharat Singh) had mortgaged with possession the entire property under the mortgage deed dated February 25, 1848 with the knowledge and consent of the Msts. No evidence has been given in support of the allegations made in this paragraph that the names of Badal Singh and Bharat Singh had been recorded in the papers against the entire property mortgaged with the consent of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer, nor has any evidence been given of the fact that the mortgage deed in question was executed with the knowledge and consent of the Msts.

At the trial reliance was placed on Ex. 30 and on certain documents of the time of the Mutiny and of the period immediately following it to show that the allegation made in para. 3 of the plaint to the effect that "the original mortgagor was the owner of only one-fourth of the entire property mortgaged" and "the remaining three-fourths was owned by Mst. Gulab Kuer and Uttam Kuer" was true. As has been pointed out by my learned brother, Ex. 30 is a unilateral agreement, and there is nothing to show that it was executed by Debi Prasad, who purported to act as the general attorney of these ladies, with the knowledge of the mortgagees of 1848, Madadeo Prasad and Karanpuri. There is no evidence whatsoever to show that the statements made in this deed as to the original title to the property and as to a purchase at auction sale having been made in the name of Bharat Singh in consultation with Bharat Singh's mother and with the consent of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer, are true. It does appear that the mortgagees, Mahadeo Prasad and Karanpuri, subsequently in Suit No. 58 of 1861 obtained a decree against these ladies on the basis of this deed of agreement in respect of another deed of mortgage, executed on January 14, 1854, which has been variously described as a simple mortgage or as a mortgage by conditional sale. The present suit is not in respect of that mortgage, but there is nothing on this record to show that the mortgagees of 1848 or Sheopal Singh ever accepted Mst. Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer as having had any interest as mortgagors in the property which had been mortgaged in 1848.

So far as the other documents are concerned, they are ambiguous and indecisive. It is possible to argue on the basis of some of them and they lend some support to the contention of the plaintiff, but the documents relied on by the defendants-appellants, e.g., Exs. E, G, K, L, M and N and again Exs. T, WW with the order of the Board thereon, and OCO, with all of which my learned brother has dealt in detail, fully support the contention of the defendants-appellants. Even if these ladies had any interest in the two Taluqas of Ohak Binda and Motiha it was their duty to bring a suit within one year, and that not having been done, any such right that they are alleged to have had, came to an end.

The case as to Taluqa Kotwa stands on a slightly different footing. The defendants-appellants admit that after the Munity the Govt., rightly or wrongly, were persuaded to release a three-fourths share in these 16 villages, with which we are concerned in this suit, in favour of Mst. Gulab Kuer and Mst. Uttam Kuer and that they came to be recorded as the proprietors of that share. The parties are also agreed that in or about the year 1873 there was a Revenue Court partition in the course of which certain proceedings took place and certain villages were allotted to the different parties in certain shares. It is common ground that a number of entire villages and shares in certain villages were allotted to this family in which these ladies had a three-fourths share. The contention of the appellants is that subsequently, in 1877, the decree-holders of the Suit No. 58 of 1861 put up to sale the entire property belonging to these ladies in the villages of Taluqa Kotwa with which we are concerned and had them sold and that Sheopal Singh purchased the whole of the share belonging to these ladies.

Here, again, it may be that there are certain documents which lend some support to the contention of the plaintiffs, but these documents also are ambiguous. On the other hand, the sale certificate Ex. LL and the rubkar, Ex. PP are decisive in favour of the defendants-appellants. In view of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramabhadra Naidu v. Kadiriyasami Naicker (1), the sale certificate is the document of title and cannot be lightly ignored by reference back to other documents and it cannot be argued that the property could not have been sold and so must be taken not to have been sold. The sale certificate leaves no room for doubt that the entire 12 annas, i. e., three-fourths share of the ladies was purchased by Sheopal Singh.

The plaintiffs-respondents have laid great stress on Exs. 58 and 59 and have urged that the language of these two documents is such that it must be held that Sheopal Singh stated in these documents that he had purchased only 7 annas out of the 12 annas belonging to the ladies and not the remaining 5 annas which had been held during the partition proceedings to represent what had been usufructually mortgaged in 1848. We are not prepared to accept the contention that the language of these two documents is such that it must necessarily be held that Sheopal Singh was mortgaging all that he had purchased at the auction sale held in execution of the decree. The documents are open to the construction that he was mortgaging a portion, namely 7 annas, of the property which he had purchased at the auction sale. The contention of the defendants-appellants therefore must be accepted and it must be held that the plaintiffs-respondents failed to establish that they had any subsisting title to the property which they sought to redeem.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Letters Patent Appeal No. 5 of 1939

September 7, 1939

HARRIES, C. J. AND FAZL ALI, J.

KUBAD MIA—APPELLANT

GUHI MIA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 49, 17 (2) (v)—Integral part of transaction creating charge—Registration of document, necessity of—Tendering of such unregistered document to prove agreement to execute further document such as sale-deed—Proviso to s. 49 as added by Act XXI of 1929, whether retrospective in effect—Document held created right in immovable property—Pleadings—Amendment—Letters Patent Appeal—Suit for specific performance, if can be turned into one for compensation.

Where a charge is created by a term which is an integral part of the transaction, then the document must be registered and cannot be tendered in evidence even to prove an agreement to execute a further document such as a sale-deed. Where, however, the promises are distinct and separable, then a document, though it creates a charge, can be put in evidence to establish a promise to execute a further document such as a sale-deed. 98 Ind. Cas. 108 (5) and 119 Ind. Cas. 633 (6), relied on. 56 Ind. Cas. 642 (4), distinguished. Observations in 155 Ind. Cas. 47 (3), held obiter. [p. 201, col. 2.]

The proviso to s. 49 Registration Act, which was added by Act XXI of 1929 does not have retrospective effect and therefore cannot affect an agreement which was executed four years before the amending Act XXI of 1929 came into force and which if unregistered could not be adduced in evidence according to law in existence before 1929. 148 Ind. Cas. 229 (1), explained. 147 Ind. Cas. 1057 (2), applied.

Held, that the agreement in question undoubtedly gave the plaintiff a right in the immovable property; it gave him not only possession but security for the money which he had already paid. Hence the document created a right in immovable property. [p. 200, col. 1.]

A Court should not grant an amendment in a suit for specific performance unless such is asked at an early stage. A suit for specific performance therefore should not be allowed to be converted into one for compensation or damages at the stage of Letters Patent Appeal. 111 Ind. Cas. 413 (7), relied on. [p. 202, col. 2.]

L. P. A. from the decision of Mr. Justice Agarwala, dated November 30, 1938.

Mr. S. C. Mazumdar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. C. Mukherji and N. N. Ray, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal from a decision of Agarwala, J. dismissing a second appeal. The suit out of which the proceedings arose was brought by the plaintiff claiming specific performance of certain agreement entered into between him and the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The learned Munsif who heard the suit decreed the plaintiff's claim; but on appeal the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner, Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad, reversed the decision of the Court below and dismissed the claim. He held that the agreement sought to be specifically enforced could not be tendered in evidence and therefore the plaintiff could not prove his claim. The plaintiff appealed to this Court; but Agarwala, J. held that the decision of the lower Appellate Court was right and dismissed the appeal. It is against that decision that the present Letters Patent Appeal has been preferred. The agreement in question was entered into between the plaintiff and the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the year 1926 and is in these terms:

"I, Nilkantha Ghati of Metala Pargana Nagar Keari, execute this deed of security (thika abadha) to this effect: For giving you kabala of my homestead land which appertains to my share in my maurashi mukarrari mauza which is plot No. 813, described in Sch. III, the total amount is settled at Rs. 300 in the presence of five gentlemen and out of that agreed sum I receive Rs. 200 and give the property as security to you. As long as you do not pay the remaining Rs. 100 which is fixed for sale-deed (kabala) so long you will not be able to erect any house on the land but you will remain in possession in bringing it under cultivation, to that I or my heirs will not take objection. On the day you pay the remaining Rs. 100 for sale-deed (kabala) I shall be bound to execute registered sale-deed (kabala) after fixing the proportionate rent of the said land. To this effect after receiving Rs. 200 I execute this deed of security after giving the said land as security."

The plaintiff paid the sum of Rs. 200 and obtained possession of the land. However, he has not paid the remaining sum of Rs. 100, though he is ready and willing to do so. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 later settled the land with other defendants who ejected the plaintiff therefrom, and accordingly the latter brought this suit seeking specifically to enforce the contract and to compel defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to execute a sale-deed in his favour on receipt of the balance of the purchase money, namely Rs. 100. As I have stated, the learned single Judge of this Court held that the agreement sought to be specifically enforced could not be put in evidence by reason of the fact that it had not been registered, and therefore the plaintiff could not prove his case. The only question in the appeal therefore is whether this document is one requiring registration, because if it does not require registration then it could be adduced in evidence to establish the plaintiff's case. Section 17 (1), Registration Act, sets out the documents which require registration, and sub-cl. (c) requires all non-testamentary instruments which acknowledge the receipt or payment of any consideration on account of the creation, declaration, assignment, limitation or extinction of an such right, title or interest in immovable property to be registered. Sub-section 2, cl. (v) of this section however provides that "any document not itself creating, declaring, assigning, limiting or extinguishing any right, title or interest, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards to or in immovable property, but merely creating a right to obtain another document which will, when executed, create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any such right, title or interest" need not be registered. The result of non-registration of a document requiring registration is provided for in s. 49 of the Act, which says that no document required by s. 17 of the Act or by any provision of the T. P. Act, 1882, to be registered shall be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property. There is however a proviso to this section, which is in these terms :

"Provided that an unregistered document affecting immovable property and required by this Act or T. P. Act, 1882, to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance under Chap. II, Specific Relief Act, 1877, or as evidence of part performance of the contract for the purposes of s. 53-A, T. P. Act, 1882, or as evidence of any collateral transaction and not required to be effected by registered instrument".

There can be no question that if this latter proviso applied to this case, the agreement, though unregistered, could be adduced in evidence. It has however been contended on behalf of the respondents that this proviso cannot affect the case by reason of the fact that it only came into force in the year 1930. The proviso was added to s. 49, Registration Act, by s. 10, T. P. (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929; and s. 15 of that Act, expressly provides that nothing in the Act shall be deemed to affect (b) the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered before the Act came into force; and s. 1 (2) provides that the Act should come into force on April 1, 1930. The respondents argue that one of the effects or consequences of non-registration of the agreement in question was that it could not be adduced in evidence, and as such was undoubtedly the case until this amending Act was passed. If the amending Act applied to transactions which took place before the passing of the Act, then the consequences of non-registration would no longer apply. However, as the Act is not to affect the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done, it is argued that any document executed before the Act, which could not be adduced in evidence by reason of non-registration, is not affected by the amending Act. On behalf of the appellant however, it is contended that the High Court at Allahabad has taken a different view. It is urged that this proviso relates only to procedure and there is no reason why the proviso should not be considered to be retrospective. In Sohan Lal v. Atal Nath (1), a Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that a document executed before the amending Act XXI of 1929, could be adduced in evidence after the passing of that Act though it had not been registered as required by the Registration Act at the time when it was executed. The learned Judges stated that the matter was one relating to procedure, and therefore the amending Act could be regarded as retrospective. It was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges however that s. 15 of the amending Act XXI of 1929 makes this provision applicable only to transactions entered into after the passing of the Act and in the absence of any reference to s. 15 of the amending Act XXI of 1929 this case cannot be considered as an authority in support of the appellant's contention. Rowland, J. in Dharichhan Singh v. Mahabir Singh (2), held that the amendment of the T. P. Act by the amending Act XXI of 1929 cannot assist a plaintiff whose suit was commenced before that Act came into force, as such proceedings were expressly saved by s. 15 of the amending Act. In my view, the reasons given by Rowland, J., in that case apply equally to this case. Section 15 of the amending Act XXI of 1929 expressly says that any remedy or proceeding or anything done in the course of any proceeding pending in any Court when the Act came into force, was not to be affected by the Act. The same section also says that the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered before the Act came into force was not to be affected by the Act. As I have stated, one of the consequences of failure to register this document was that it could not be adduced in evidence. That was a consequence which the Act expressly states should not be affected. In my view therefore the proviso to s. 49 did not have retrospective effect and therefore cannot affect this agreement which was executed four years before the amending Act XXI of 1922 came into force. That being so, it must be held that the agreement in question could only be admitted in evidence if it fell within s. 17 (2) (v), Registration Act.

This latter provision renders registration unnecessary if the document does not create any right, title or interest of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards to or in immovable property, but merely creates a right to obtain another document which would, when executed, create such a right. It has been contended by the appellant that the agreement in question does not create any right in immovable property, but merely creates a right to obtain a sale-deed, that is another document which would, when executed, create a right in immovable property. It is therefore necessary to consider the document in order to see whether it does create an interest in immovable property or merely creates a right to obtain a sale-deed. In my view this agreement clearly created a right in immovable property. The document is itself stated to be a deed of security, and it is provided that on payment of Rs. 200 out of the purchase price of Rs. 300 the land is to be delivered to the plaintiff as security and that the latter should hold it as security for the sum of Rs. 200 until he paid the balance of Rs. 100. There is a further provision that whilst the land is held by the plaintiff as security he cannot build on it though he can bring it under cultivation. It is true that there follows a provision that on the day the plaintiff pays the remaining sum of Rs. 100 the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 would execute a sale-deed; but this latter provision is only one of many terms in the agreement.

There can be no question that possession of the property passed to the plaintiff under the agreement, and he was given a right to hold it and to cultivate it as security for the sum of Rs. 200 which he had already paid. Such an agreement undoubtedly gave the plaintiff a right in this immovable property: it gave him not only possession but security for the money which he had already paid. Agarwala, J. was of opinion that the document created a right in immovable property, and with that view I agree. It has however been strongly urged by Mr. Mazumdar on behalf of the appellant that the promise to execute a sale-deed on receipt of the balance of the purchase price is the only promise sued upon in this case, and that being so the document could be adduced in evidence of this isolated promise. Reliance was placed upon a case of this Court, Abdul Latif v. Debi Mahton (3), in which it was held that where in an unregistered document there are two distinct provisions, one creating a charge or mortgage and requiring registration and the other being an agreement for sale not requiring registration there is nothing to prevent the plaintiff in a suit for specific performance wherein the charge or mortgage is not sought to be enforced from relying on that part of the document which purports to be a mere agreement to sell. This Court purported to follow the case in Vyavan Chetti v. Subramanaiah Chetti (4). It is to be observed however that this Court in construing the document then under consideration held that it was a document which gave the plaintiff merely a right to call for a sale-deed and that it was not an agreement which created any interest in immovable property. That being so any observations of the Court as to whether terms in a document can be severed were purely obiter. It is to be noted however that Wort, J., who delivered the leading judgment observed at p. 628* that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (5), was an authority for the contention that where a document created a specific charge as well as a right to demand a sale-deed such a document required registration under s. 49, Registration Act. In my view the case in Abdul Latif v. Debi Mahton (3), to which I have referred is not an authority in favour of the appellant's contention in this case, because the point which is now before the Court was not before the Court in the earlier case.

The appellant has strongly relied upon the case in Vyavan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (4), which is a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council; but in my view that case is clearly distinguishable from the present one. In the Madras case the facts were as follows: The appellants were the first mortgagees of certain immovable property, and the respondents held a second mortgage of the same property. They agreed that both parties should, as regards rights, stand in the same position without claiming prior or subsequent rights and divide and appropriate in equal halves as per terms mentioned whatever amount might be realized on the date of realization. The appellants realized part of the estate and the respondents sued them in order to obtain their share of the proceeds to which they claimed to be entitled by virtue of the agreement. The agreement was unregistered and an objection was raised by the appellants that the agreement required registration and not being registered could not be used in evidence. Their Lordships held that on the construction of the agreement that if the whole effect of the agreement was to provide merely that the realized money was to be divided in equal shares there was nothing to require it to be registered, and if, on the other hand, there were two distinct provisions, the one relating to rights of property and the other with regard to the division of the money realized, then as the proceedings in the suit related merely to the question of the realized money, the agreement need not be registered for the purpose of being given in evidence in this suit, though it might require registration in a suit relating to the regulation of the rights against the estate itself.

It has been contended that in the present case the agreement to execute a sale-deed is a distinct and separate agreement and that the agreement of 1926 can be put in to prove this portion though it might not be admissible in evidence as proving a right or interest in immovable property by reason of want of registration. It is to be observed that in Vyavan Chetti v. Subramanian Chetti (4), there were two distinct and separate agreements one relating to rights in immovable property and the other relating to rights in the proceeds realized. The only question which arose in the case was whether or not the respondents were entitled to a half share of the proceeds collected by the appellants. It was possible to separate and sever the two terms and to regard them as independent of each other. In the present case, it is quite impossible to sever the terms. In my view the provision that the defendant would execute a sale-deed on payment of the balance of Rs. 100 is an integral part of the whole agreement and it cannot be severed and treated as something distinct and apart from the other terms which undoubtedly create an interest in immovable property. In my view, the present case cannot be distinguished from the later decision of the Privy Council in Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (5). In this latter case there was an agreement for the sale of immovable property which acknowledged the receipt of Rs. 1,000 part of the purchase price paid by the buyer as earnest money. The seller refused to complete and the buyer sued for specific performance. The agreement was not registered. Their Lordships held that under s. 55, sub-s. 6 (b), T. P. Act, 1882, the buyer was entitled to a charge upon the property in respect of the earnest money, and that consequently the agreement created an interest in it, with the result that it was required to be registered under s. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act 1908, and was not exempt by s. 17, sub-s. (2) (v). Therefore the suit could not be maintained having regard to s. 49, Registration Act. It is true that no such charge upon property in respect of earnest money is now created by reason of an amendment of the law after the decision of that case; but the case is still clearly an authority for the proposition that if an agreement creates a charge by implication of law then it is an agreement affecting immovable property and cannot be regarded as an agreement merely creating a right to demand a sale-deed. It appears to me that the present case is a stronger one than the case which was before their Lordships of the Privy Council. In the latter case the charge was created by implication of law, whereas in the present case the charge is expressly created by the terms of the agreement. As I have already stated, Wor, J., in Abdul Latif v. Debi Mahton (3), expressly held that Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (5), was still an authority for the contention that a specific charge created by an agreement would render it liable to registration though the agreement also contained a provision relating to the execution of a further document such as a sale-deed. These two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council appear at first sight to be conflicting, but they are clearly distinguishable. Where a charge is created by a term which is an integral part of the transaction, then the document must be registered and cannot be tendered in evidence even to prove an agreement to execute a further document such as a sale-deed. Where, however, the promises are distinct and separable, then a document, though it creates a charge, can be put in evidence to establish a promise to execute a further document such as a sale-deed. Such is the view expressed by Sir George Lowndes who delivered the judgment of the Board, in James Skinner v. R. H. Skinner (6). He observed:

"In the present case the document under consideration, in addition to creating an interest in the immovable property concerned, provides as one of the terms, and therefore as an integral part of the transfer, that the vendor should, if the vendee so requires, execute a registered sale-deed, and it is contended for respondent No. 1 that, notwithstanding the non-registration, he can sue upon this agreement putting the document in evidence as proof of it. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this is within the prohibition of the section".

In my view the present case cannot be distinguished from the cases in Dayal Singh v. Indar Singh (5) and James Skinner v. R. H. Skinner (6) to which I have referred. That being so, the agreement as it was unregistered, could not be tendered in evidence even to establish the promise by the defendants to execute a sale-deed on payment of a future sum of Rs. 100. Agarwala, J., was therefore right in holding that this document was not admissible in evidence and that the plaintiff had therefore not established his case. Lastly, it was argued that even if this document is not admissible in evidence to establish the defendant's promise, yet it is admissible in evidence to establish that the plaintiff has paid a sum of Rs. 200 upon a consideration which has failed. We were therefore asked to treat this case as a suit for the return of Rs. 200. In my view, a suit if it lay at all, would be a suit not for the return of Rs. 200 but for damages for breach of contract, and the plaintiff would not be able to prove his contract without putting in the document, and in my view the document could not be adduced in evidence for want of registration for the reasons which I have already given. The plaintiff was given possession of the property and remained in possession for nearly ten years, and such possession is expressly stated in the document to be by way of security for the sum of Rs. 200 which he had paid. It in no way follows that upon dispossession the plaintiff has lost Rs. 200. He may have derived considerable profit from the property during his possession, and, on the other hand, the possession might not have been worth reasonable interest on the money. His claim would have to be a claim for damages or compensation and not for the return of money upon a consideration which had failed. Consideration had not wholly failed because he had been in possession for a long period of time.

In any event, the Court could not at this late stage convert the suit into one for compensation or damages. It is true that the plaintiff, after asking for specific performance and possession, asked for such other and further relief, but in no Court did he ask for damages in the alternative, and it appears to me that to ask for such in a Letters Patent Appeal is asking for alternative relief at too late a stage. Further, there is authority of their Lordships of the Privy Council, which makes it clear that a Court should not grant an amendment in a suit for specific performance unless such is asked at an early stage. In Ardeshir Mama v. Flora Sasoon (7) a plaintiff claimed, pursuant to s. 19, Specific Relief Act, specific performance of a contract, and compensation in addition or in substitution, and subsequently gave notice abandoning his claim for specific performance. It was held that he could not recover damages for breach of contract without amending the plaint, since relief under s. 19, Specific Relief Act could be decreed only where the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform the contract and that it was therefore still subsisting. It was further held that the Court even at the trial, had power to allow the necessary amendment, but that power should be exercised most carefully and jealously, and with due regard to the position of both the plaintiff and the defendant. An amendment should not be allowed when the suit has been pending as one for specific performance for a long period, during which the defendant had been prevented by s. 27 (b), from dealing with the property. As I have stated an amendment is asked at this very last stage, and in my view this Court cannot grant it having regard to the views expressed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case to which I have referred. That being so, the Court cannot give the appellant any relief by way of compensation. For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that the decision of Agarwala, J. was right and I would therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Fazi Ali, J.—I agree.

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 300 of 1939

November 17, 1939

NIYOGI AND GRUBE, JJ.

HORILAL—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 339 (2), 337, 164—S. 339 (2) to be read in conjunction with s. 337—S. 337 does not contemplate recording of statement by accused as preliminary to tender of pardon—Statement of confessional nature recorded before tender of pardon, not strictly according to provisions of s. 164—Admissibility of, against accused in his trial after forfeiture of pardon—Procedure to be followed in recording statement of accused after tender of pardon.

Sub-s. 2 of s. 339, Criminal P. C., has to be read in conjunction with s. 337. Section 337 itself does not contemplate and authorise the recording of any statement by the accused as a preliminary to the tender of pardon. [p. 204, col. 2; p. 205, col. 1.]

Any statement made by an accused person before he receives pardon under s. 337 must, if it is of a confessional nature, be recorded strictly in accordance with the procedure prescribed for the record of confession by ss. 164 and 361, or the statement of the accused after he has been pardoned may be recorded in his character of a witness under s. 164, Criminal P. C., or his statement may be one which is recorded formally as that of a witness examined in the course of an enquiry or trial. The word "statement" contemplated in sub-s. 2 of s. 339, appears primarily to refer to a statement made by him as a witness as contemplated in sub-s. 2 of s. 337 in the course of an enquiry or trial. It may also include a statement recorded under s. 164 after the tender of pardon but it can in no case include a confessional statement made by an accused person before the tender of pardon unless it was recorded in accordance with the strict procedure provided for recording confessions. [p. 206, col. 1.]

Hence a statement made by the accused, of a confessional nature, before he had been tendered pardon and after he was put on solemn affirmation, is inadmissible against him in his trial after he has forfeited the pardon if it is not recorded as a confession in the manner prescribed by ss. 164 and 361. It is also otherwise inadmissible for the reason that the accused was induced to make that statement implicating himself and others on the promise of a pardon. [ibid.]

[Case-law discussed and relied on]

In recording a statement after an acceptance of pardon, the Magistrate has the power of administration of oath or solemn affirmation under s. 164, Criminal P. C. The proper procedure then to be followed by a Magistrate is to record the statement of the approver immediately after, and not before, tendering pardon. A statement so recorded is clearly admissible in evidence under s. 339 (2). 142 Ind. Cas. 776 (10), relied on. [p. 206, col. 2; p. 207, col. 1.]

Or A, from the order of the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Chhindwara, Camp Seoni, dated September 21, 1939.

Mr. S. R. Mangrulkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranick, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Niyogi, J.—The appellant Horilal and two others by name Bhagchand and Hiralal were originally challaned under s. 302, I. P. C., for murdering one Dhanaram and his wife Mst. Kala. In the course of the proceedings Horilal was granted pardon under s. 337, Criminal P. C., but when he was examined in the Court of the Sessions, Judge, Chhindwara, (in the Sessions Trial of Bhagchand and Hiralal which was numbered 25 of 1938) he turned hostile to the prosecution and was consequently declared to have broken the conditions of his pardon. On the certificate of the Public Prosecutor that Horilal had forfeited the pardon, criminal proceedings were started against him for the offence of murder in the Court of the Head Quarters Magistrate, First Class, Seoni, who committed him to the Court of Session, Chhindwara, to stand his trial. The learned Sessions Judge found that Horilal failed to comply with the conditions of the pardon entailing its forfeiture. As a result of the trial Horilal was found guilty of murder and sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court.

The outline of the case may be briefly stated. On October 29, 1938, Dhanaram the deceased accompanied by his wife Mst. Kala the deceased and her younger sister Mst. Ghasiti left their village Sukri in a bullock cart for village Simariya where Dhanaram's uncle-in-law Onkar resided. Mst. Kala was wearing ornaments on a somewhat generous scale. The party halted for a time at Mauza Kohka to witness the festival of Madai where it is alleged they were observed by Horilal, Bhagchand and Hiralal. They left Kohka about the time of sunset and while they were half way between Kohka and Gadkhapa in the Kohka forest the couple were done to death. The girl, Mst. Ghasiti, however, escaped unscathed and she disclosed the details of the murder to one Beharilal of Gadkhapa who happened to be on his way to Kohka. On a message sent by him to Mauza Ghodawadi Narayan Prasad, Sub Inspector of Police, hastened to the spot and held the inquest and seized certain articles. The investigation was then taken over by Ehaful Rahman Khan, Sub-Inspector of Police, Seoni, who arrived there on receipt of information about the incident from Zadu, the elder brother of the deceased Dhanaram, through Rupchand Kotwar. In the course of the investigation Horilal's kurta, Art. P-1, was seized from his person. Horilal, it is alleged, discovered an axe, Art. D-1, from the field of one Gulli and he also led the Police to Bharamal's field where Mst. Kala's ornaments were stated to be buried, but they were not discovered. He, as alleged, took the Police to the scene of the occurrence and pointed out various places where Bhagchand and Hiralal lay in wait for their victims before the commission of the crime. Horilal was arrested on November 6, 1938 and produced before Mr. R. P. Kote, Magistrate, First Class, on November 8, 1938, for the record of his confession. Horilal was sent back to jail as the Magistrate stated he could record his confession on November 11, 1938. On that day the Magistrate received a memo. from the Sub-Inspector asking him not to record his confession. He was therefore sent back to the jail custody with an order that he should be produced on November 18, 1938. On November 12, 1938, the Magistrate received a memo. from the Sub-Inspector of Police, Seoni, that Horilal had agreed to disclose the facts connected with the murder and that he should be examined with a view to his being granted a pardon and examined at the trial as an approver. On the same day the Magistrate recorded his statement and submitted it to the Additional District Magistrate for orders. On November 17, 1938, the Additional District Magistrate, Seoni, tendered him pardon and he was later examined as a witness in the Court of Session. Both the statements made by him and recorded by the Magistrate on November 12, 1938 and by the Sessions Judge on January 6, 1939, are exhibited in the case and marked as Ex. P-25 and Ex. P-30. There is no doubt that the latter flatly contradicts the former statement. It is clear that if the first statement was true he totally failed to comply with the conditions of his pardon.

The evidence on the record is meagre and it is not by itself capable of sustaining the conviction unless his statement recorded by the Magistrate on November 12, 1938, Ex. P-25, in anticipation of the grant of pardon, can be admitted into evidence against him.

Apart from his statement, Ex. P-25, the circumstances proved against the appellant are that he was seen in the company of Bhagchand and Hiralal on that critical evening, that none of the three was present to hear the recital of Ramayana at the house of Mullu (P. W. No. 13), that he pointed out the axe, Art. O, that he led the Police to a place where certain ornaments were supposed to have been concealed although they were not discovered and that his kurta, Art. P-1 was found blood-stained. A critical examination of each of these circumstances exposes its weakness. Mst. Budho (P. W. No. 24) saw Horilal and Bhagchand sitting together under the eaves of the house of Hiralal at Mausa Kohka. It was towards evening and they were smoking chilam. The witness, however, says they were in the habit of sitting together like that as she had seen them together quite often in the past. It may be that the three individuals did not attend the Ramayana recital but that is not by itself sufficient to show that they had gone out for committing murder. The axe, Art. O, pointed out by Horilal does not make any contribution to the evidence as the Imperial Serologist was not able to detect any blood on the scrapings from the axe blade sent to him. His kurta, Art. P-1, was also devoid of any evidentiary value as the blood-stains on it had become disintegrated and their origin could not be determined. His conduct in leading the Police to the place where the ornaments were supposed to be buried loses all its significance in the absence of the discovery of the ornaments.

Mst. Ghasiti was not examined as a witness against Horilal, presumably for the reason that she had not stated in the previous case that she had seen Horilal.

The conviction rests essentially on the confessional statement which he had made before Mr. Kote on November 12, 1938, Ex. P-25. It is remarkable that even in that statement Horilal assigned to himself a very minor part. If, however, that statement is admissible against him that invests the circumstances proved against Horilal with some corroborative value. The question, therefore, is whether the statement is admissible against him.

The statement was recorded on November 12, 1938, before he had been tendered pardon which was done on the 17th. It would be held admissible if it is the statement contemplated by sub-s. 2 of s. 339, Criminal P. C. Sub-section 2 of s. 339, has to be read in conjunction with s. 337. That section lays down that in case of certain specified offence certain specified officers may at any stage of the investigation or enquiry into or trial of the offence with a view to obtaining the evidence of any person supposed to have been concerned in or privy to the offence tender a pardon on his making full and true disclosure of the whole circumstances within his knowledge relative to the offence, sub-s. 2 of that section says:

"Every person accepting a tender under this section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any."

Inasmuch as the procedure regarding grant of pardon is laid down in s. 337, the terms of that section alone will be the test to determine whether or not the statement recorded by Mr. Kolte was in accordance with law. The wording of that section reproduced above leaves no room for doubt that the tender of pardon is to precede the making of full and true disclosure and not to follow it; that is, the true and full disclosure is expected to be made by the approver when he is examined as a witness in the enquiry or trial. Section 337 itself does not contemplate and authorise the recording of any statement by the accused as a preliminary to the tender of pardon.

Section 337, not lending any support to this course, one may well look to another section to which recourse is usually to be had in the course of the investigation, namely, s. 164, Criminal P. O. That section authorises certain specified classes of Magistrates to record any statement or confession made to them in the course of an investigation or at any time afterwards before the commencement of the enquiry or trial. In so far as the statement amounts to a confession it is clearly inadmissible as it was not recorded as a confession in the manner prescribed by ss. 164 and 364, Criminal P. O., in view of the recent ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nazir Ahmad v. King-Emperor (1); it is also otherwise inadmissible for the reason that as admitted by the prosecution, see Ehafazul Rahman Khan (P. W. No. 5), Laxminarayan (P. W. No. 32) and R. P. Kolte (P. W. No. 33), the accused Horilal was induced to make that statement implicating himself and others on the promise of a pardon.

Now the question is whether it was admissible as a statement recorded by the Magistrate under s. 164. It is pertinent to observe that Horilal was put on solemn affirmation before he made the statement as if he was a free person. There has been some divergence of judicial opinion as to the range of the meaning of the word "statement." In Queen-Empress v. Bhairab Chunder Chuckerbutty (2) and Queen-Empress v. Malka (3), it was held that the statement did not include the confession of a person accused of an offence. In Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (4) and Ghulam Mohammad Khan v. King Emperor (5), it was held that in that section there can be no distinction between a statement made by an accused and a confession made by him, and that his statement must be recorded as provided by this section. The Patna case does not appear to go as far as the Calcutta case does in that it holds that the section contemplates a statement made by an accused person before a Magistrate which is not a confession but is wholly of an exculpatory nature. If it is a statement of that nature, viz., that made by an accused person as a witness and not in his character of an accused person, that statement cannot be treated as substantive evidence but can be used only for cross-examining him in the witness-box: see Harnam Kisha v. Emperor (6) and In re Kuruppanna Pillai (7). It is clear that whether it is recorded as a statement or as a confession under s. 164, Criminal P. O., it is inadmissible against the accused who made it.

Although s. 337 does not contemplate recording of any statement by a Magistrate in the course of the investigation it is quite conceivable that after an accused is granted pardon he ceases to be an accused person and he can be examined as a witness: see Harumal Parmanand v. Emperor (8) and Faqir Singh v. Crown (9). When he ceases to be an accused person he may well be examined under s. 164, Criminal P. O. after administering him oath, as was done in the cases reported in Crown v. Parma Nand (10), Ram Nath v. Crown (11) and Anup Singh v. Emperor (12). In all these cases the accused's statement was recorded under s. 164, after he was granted pardon and he was free to make a statement on oath. Whether that section permits the recording of the statement on oath or solemn affirmation is also a vexed question. The point is discussed in Crown v. Parma Nand (10), but it is unnecessary to pursue the point here as the accused person in the present case was not put on his trial for perjury.

From the foregoing discussion it is clear that any statement made by an accused person before he receives pardon under s. 337, must, if it is of a confessional nature, be recorded strictly in accordance with the procedure prescribed for the record of confession by ss. 164 and 364, or that the statement of the accused after he has been pardoned may be recorded in his character of a witness under s. 164, Criminal P. O., or his statement may be one which is recorded formally as that of a witness examined in the course of an enquiry or trial. The word "statement" contemplated in sub-s. 2 of s. 339, Criminal P. O. appears primarily to refer to a statement made by him as a witness as contemplated in sub-s. 2 of s. 337, in the course of an enquiry or trial. This was the view taken in The Local Government v. Mullu (13). It may also include a statement recorded under s. 164, after the tender of pardon but it can in no case include a confessional statement made by an accused person before the tender of pardon unless it was recorded in accordance with the strict procedure provided for recording confessions.

The statement Ex. P-25 under consideration was neither a confession nor a statement recorded under s. 164, Criminal P. O. nor one recorded in terms of sub-s. 2 of s. 337. It was, therefore, not a statement following within the ambit of sub-s. 2 of s. 339 for the reason that the statement contemplated there, refers to "full and true disclosure" which the accused person makes after he receives pardon in accordance with s. 337 (1), Criminal P. O.

If Ex. P-25, is excluded from the evidence as it ought to be there is left no evidence worth the name to warrant the conviction. It must, therefore, be set aside and the appellant directed to be released forthwith.

In Criminal Appeal No. 300 of 1939.

Per Guer, J.—I agree that the appellant ought to be acquitted in this case, as the statement he made on November 12, 1938, should not be used against him and the remaining evidence is, without

I wish to add only a few remarks.

The learned Advocate-General contended that this statement of the appellant recorded prior to grant of pardon on November 12, 1938, falls under s. 339 (2) of the Criminal P. O. It may possibly be held that grammatically the statement made by a person who has accepted a tender of pardon, may include a statement made by such person before the tender was made to him. But I do not believe that the sub-section was ever meant to apply to such a statement. The learned Advocate relies on Gangram v. Emperor (14), Ram Nath v. Crown (11) and Crown v. Parmanand (10). In the first case it is stated that the approvers were examined by the Magistrate who tendered pardon on October 3, 1922. But it cannot be said from this whether the Magistrate examined them before or after tendering pardon. In the other two cases it is clear that the examination was made after pardon had been tendered. There can be no doubt that such statements made after pardon (even if made immediately thereafter) fall under this sub-section. Before pardon was tendered, the approver was in the position of an accused. After pardon had been conditionally given, he ceased conditionally to be an accused and became a potential witness. Any confessional statement, therefore, recorded before pardon, would be governed by s. 164 and would be admissible in evidence only if the essential provisions of that section had been followed. As the statement was not so recorded in the present case, it is to be ruled out of consideration.

It may be said that the Judge has to ascertain what the approver is likely to state before he can record reasons under s. 337 (1) (a), for tendering pardon. That could be done informally, without taking down what the approver said. But I fully approve of the suggestion made in Crown v. Parma Nand (10), that it might be very necessary to obtain a detailed statement of what the person accepting the pardon has to say, in order to complete the investigation and enquiry and to ascertain what corroboration of his statement might be forthcoming, and it might very well be extremely difficult to wait for that information till the magisterial enquiry commenced. I also agree with the learned Judges in that case that in recording a statement after an acceptance of pardon, the Magistrate has the power of administration of oath or solemn affirmation under s. 164, Criminal P. C. The proper procedure then to be followed by a Magistrate is to record the statement of the approver immediately after, and not before, tendering pardon. A statement so recorded is clearly admissible in evidence under s. 339 (2), Criminal P. C.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Suit for declaration—Relief for unqualified right to maintain and cut bunds according to necessities of irrigation—Right subject to permission of Collector—Maintainability of suit—Second appeal—Interference with discretion of lower Appellate Court.

A suit for declaration in which the relief claimed by the plaintiff is an unqualified right to maintain and cut a part of the existing bunds according to necessities of irrigation and to close and repair them is maintainable and the declaration cannot be said to be based upon a mere contingent right merely because the right claimed is subject to the permission of the Collector as a result of a Notification under s. 6, Ben. Embankment Act of 1882. 150 Ind. Cas. 360 (1), 63 Ind. Cas. 38 (2) and 37 Ind. Cas. 161 (3), distinguished, Ieri Dutt Koer v. Hansuthi Koerain (4), relied on.

The High Court does not interfere ordinarily with the discretion of the Court below when that discretion has been exercised judicially on a full consideration of the evidence in the case. Where, however, the Court below has not directed its mind to the evidence in the case at all, but has disposed of the suit on a preliminary objection, the High Court would not be deviating from the ordinary rule when it does not accept the decision of the Court below in a case where the discretion has not been exercised judicially.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated January 2, 1937.

Messrs. Ray Gurusaran Prasad and Ray Paras Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. Brahamdeva Narayan for Mr. B. P. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Agarwala, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the District

Judge of Muzaffarpur reversing a decision of the Munsif of Sitamarhi. The plaintiffs are the proprietors of Mauza Kushahar in the Sub-Division of Sitamarhi. The defendants, who are residents of villages Harnahi, Sundarpore, Mahuarua, Rasidpur, Kamarauli, Siubar and Parsauni on the north and north-west of village Kushahar, have been sued in a representative capacity. The plaintiffs claim that they have a right to maintain and to cut a part of the existing bunds in the Lapaha Nala and Kabiria Bari and Bhuthie pynes according to the necessities of irrigation of the lands in Mauza Kushahar and also to close and repair the bunds. In 1911, by a Notification under s. 6 of the Ben. Embankment Act of 1882 the provisions of cl. (b) of s. 76 of the Act were extended to the District of Muzaffarpur. This had the effect of prohibiting the obstruction of any water course within the boundary of the Muzaffarpur District without the previous permission of the Collector of the district. In 1924 the plaintiffs erected a bund in the pynes mentioned above and on a dispute arising with Nawab Singh and others, who are defendants in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen, the latter were prohibited by an order under s. 144 of the Criminal P. C. from interfering with the bunds. In 1928, some of the plaintiffs again erected bunds and were prosecuted under s. 76 (b) of the Embankment Act and fined for having erected the bunds without having obtained the permission of the Collector. As a result of this dispute between the plaintiffs and the defendants regarding the right to erect and cut the bunds as occasion requires the plaintiffs instituted the present suit to establish the right which they claimed. The suit was decreed by the first Court after consideration of all the issues raised in the case. On appeal by the defendants the learned District Judge has held that the suit was not maintainable by reason of provisions of the Embankment Act read with s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. He has, therefore, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit without considering the other issues raised in the case. The reason for the learned District Judge's decision is that in his view the plaintiffs were not entitled to what he calls declaration based on a mere contingent right. This contention has been supported by the learned Advocate for the respondents. The learned Advocate contends that the effect of the Notification under s. 6 of the Embankment Act was to abrogate any right the plaintiffs may have had to erect or demolish the bunds complained of except with the permission of the Collector of the District and that as it is impossible to predicate whether the Collector's decision would be granted or withheld, the claim for a declaration which would be of use to the plaintiffs only if the Collector permitted them to erect or demolish the bunds should not be granted. Reliance was placed on a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Faryad Fatima Bibi v. Mujahid Abbas (1), in which it was held that

"Declaratory relief being in the discretion of the Court, it should not be granted in anticipation of a contingency which may not arise."

It may be observed, however, that the ground of the decision was that the learned Judges of the High Court were of opinion that in the circumstances of the case the Court below was not justified in exercising its discretion in granting the relief claimed by the plaintiff. No reference was made to Illus. (c), (d) or (e) of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act which are all cases of declaratory reliefs founded upon contingent rights, and the case was decided purely on its own facts. The next case referred to was Rafiq-ud-din v. Asgar Ali (2), in which a claim for a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to contribution from the defendants if and when the occasion arose was negatived. The learned Judges who decided that case pointed out that the plaintiff was neither claiming a declaration as to his legal character nor a declaration of his rights to any property in the sense in which the word "property" is used in s. 42, that is to say, a right to existing property. Here, in the present case, the plaintiffs are claiming an existing right in respect of the bunds. The decision of the Privy Council in Janaki Ammal v. Norayanasami Aiyar (3), was also referred to. That was a case in which the Privy Council held that a presumptive reversionary heir was not entitled to a declaration of his right as reversionary heir during the lifetime of the widow of the last male-holder. The decision in that case does not appear to have any bearing on the facts of the present case. In the case of Isri Dutt Koer v. Hansbutti Koerain (4) the Privy Council held that although the granting of a declaratory decree is discretionary with a Court yet in the class of case before it, which was a suit during the lifetime of a Hindu widow by a presumptive heir for a declaration that an alienation by her operated only during her lifetime, the grounds for the discretionary refusal of the decree should be very strong. This decision follows Illus. (d) of the section and gives effect to it. In my view, therefore, the ground given by the learned District Judge for holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a declaration sought for is not sustainable.

As I have already pointed out above the relief which the plaintiffs claimed in their plaint was an unqualified right to maintain and cut a part of the existing bunds according to necessities of irrigation and to close and repair them. Whether the effect of the Notification under s. 6 of the Act is to abrogate the existing right to open or close bunds according to the practice prevailing at the date of Notification, for the purposes of irrigation, I have myself considerable doubt; but it is not necessary in the present appeal to decide that question because the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs-appellant stated that he would be satisfied with a declaration that subject to the permission of the Collector the plaintiffs have the right to maintain and cut the bunds as claimed.

The learned Advocate for the respondents contends that the plaintiffs are not entitled to this qualified right inasmuch as the right they claimed in the plaint was an unconditional right. The only case on which reliance was placed to this proposition is the decision of the Privy Council in Maina v. Brijmohun (5). That was a case, however, in which their Lordships held on the evidence that the plaintiffs had failed to establish the rights which they claimed. The last objection of the learned Advocate of the respondents was that this Court should not interfere with the discretion of the Court below in refusing a declaration. This Court does not interfere ordinarily with the discretion of the Court below when that discretion has been exercised judicially on a full consideration of the evidence in the case. In the present instance the Court below has not directed its mind to the evidence in the case at all but has disposed of the suit on a preliminary objection. We are not, therefore, deviating from the ordinary rule of this Court in the matter of interfering with the discretion of the Court below when we do not accept the decision of the Court below in a case where the discretion has not been exercised judicially.

I would, therefore, set aside the order of the Court below and direct under O. XLI, r. 23, that the appeal be re-admitted and disposed of in accordance with law. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Rowland, J.—I agree.

The Munsif had framed nine issues and the District Judge refers only to the plea raised by the defence that the provisions of the Embankment Act are a bar to the suit. This was Issue No. 4. Now the relevant provision of the Civil P. C. is s. 9 which enacts that the Courts shall, subject to the provision herein contained, have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. There is nothing in the Embankment Act which is a bar to any right of suit. In discussing this issue the learned District Judge mixed up considerations of the effect of the Embankment Act which, it was contended, had taken away private rights. This appears to be the subject-matter of Issue No. 9; but that issue is not recited as one of the points for determination. The learned District Judge also refers to s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act which has nothing to do with the question whether the provisions of the Embankment Act are a bar to the suit and which section incidentally he refers to as s. 41. I think it desirable that Courts of Appeal in writing judgments should bear in mind the provisions of O. XLI, r. 31 of the Civil P. C., which are analogous to those of O. XX, r. 4, regarding the judgment of the First Court. Each point which is for determination should be clearly set out otherwise confusion of mind arises as in this case in which it hardly seems clear whether the District Judge regards himself as having disposed of Issue No. 9 or not.

Order accordingly.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 3, s. 25—Tenderer depositing money with tender for supply of grass to prison department—Conditions of tender not fulfilled—Deposit forfeited by Inspector-General of Prisons—Suit for return of deposit—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court to entertain—Powers of High Court under s. 25.

Article 3, Sch. II, Small Cause Courts Act, operates to take out of the purview of Small Cause Courts claims arising out of an act or order purporting to be done by an officer of Govt. in his official capacity, and no distinction arises from the fact that such an order, which is actually made by an officer of Govt. in his official capacity, might have been made by a private person in his private capacity.

The applicant tendered for the supply of grass to the jails. He submitted the tender in the prescribed form with the cash certificate for Rs. 500 to the Inspector-General of Prisons, and the tender was accepted. Under the terms, however, it was a condition of the acceptance of tenders that the tenderer should execute an agreement embodying the conditions of contract, a copy of which was annexed to the tender; and deposit the security mentioned in the said conditions within such time as might be allowed by the Inspector-General of Prisons. In the event of the tenderer's refusing or failing to execute the agreement, or to deposit the security within the said time, the Inspector-General was to be at liberty to cancel the acceptance of the tender and to forfeit the earnest money deposited by the tenderers. The tenderer failed to execute the agreement within the time fixed by the Inspector-General, and the Inspector-General cancelled the acceptance of the tender and ordered forfeiture of the security money. In consequence the tenderer instituted a suit against the Secretary of State for India praying for a decree for Rs. 322 by way of damages and for an order to the defendant to return the said postal cash certificate. The suit was instituted in the Court of Small Causes:

Held, that the very essence of the suit was that it was a claim founded on the allegation that the Inspector-General of Prisons was not entitled to cancel the acceptance or at any rate forfeit the security money and that the U. P. Govt. was liable for damages arising out of other consequences of that act. The suit was therefore excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes under Art. 3, Sch. II, Prov. Small Cause Courts Act. Secretary of State for India in Council v. Munshi Niaz Ahmad (1), relied on. Gopal Sahai v. Secretary of State (2), not followed.

Held, also that the power of the High Court under s. 25 of the Act being very wide, the applicant should be allowed by it an opportunity of having his suit properly determined by a competent Court.

O. R. App. of the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated September 30, 1936.

Mr. Kashi Pershad Saksena, for the Appellant.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act by Sital Prasad Nigam whose suit to recover Rs. 322 by way of damages and for the return of a postal cash certificate of the face value of Rs. 500 and present actual value Rs. 428 was dismissed by the Judge, Small Cause Court, Lucknow.

The facts are stated in the judgment of the Small Cause Court. The applicant tendered for the supply of moonj grass to the jails of this Province for the year 1935. He and his partner Jai Krishna submitted the tender in the prescribed form with the cash certificate for Rs. 500 to the Inspector-General of Prisons on December 24, 1934, and the tender was accepted the same day. Under the terms of the instructions to tenderers, however, it was a condition of the acceptance of tenders that the tenderer should execute an agreement embodying the conditions of contract, a copy of which was annexed to the tender, and deposit the security mentioned in the said conditions within such time as might be allowed by the Inspector-General of Prisons. Paragraph 7 of the instructions proceeds as follows:

"In the event of the tenderer's refusing or failing to execute the agreement or to deposit the security within the said time, the Inspector-General will be at liberty to cancel the acceptance of the tender and to forfeit the earnest money deposited by the tenderer."

The applicant and his partner at first sought adjudication of the proper stamp duty for the deed of agreement but they failed to get it, and as a result they failed to execute the agreement within the time fixed by the Inspector-General and the Inspector-General on January 28, 1935, cancelled the acceptance of the tender and ordered forfeiture of the security money. In consequence the applicant and his partner, presumably after some correspondence with the jail department or authorities on June 2, 1935, served a notice on the Secretary of State for India in Council expiring on August 2, 1935, and thereafter on March 19, 1936, the present applicant alone instituted a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council through the Deputy Commissioner, Lucknow. In this suit he prayed for a decree for Rs. 322 by way of damages and for an order to the defendant to return the said postal cash certificate. He founded his claim on the refusal of the jail authorities to return the earnest money of Rs. 400 represented by this cash certificate of Rs. 500. The damages he claimed with reference to his having supplied two orders for moonj grass at Lucknow and Benares jails on January 22 and 21, 1936, and as damages for the loss caused to him by the withholding of the cash certificates deposited by him other than the cash certificate for Rs. 500. The suit as it stands is in no sense a suit to enforce the contract or a suit to recover money due under the contract.

The learned Judge of Small Cause Court framed no less than 7 issues. On issue No. 2 he held against the plaintiff that the plaintiff was himself to blame for cancellation of the theka, and the acceptance was rightly cancelled. On Issue No. 1 he held that the contract was not to be a completed one unless and until the thekadar executed an agreement deed. It followed that the acceptance of the tender did not amount to appointment of the plaintiff as thekadar, and the plaintiff never was so appointed. On Issue No. 3 it was held that the earnest money was forfeited. On Issue No. 4 it was held that as the defendant was competent to cancel the tender, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any loss on account on that action. On Issue No. 5 as to the responsibility for delay in the return of Rs. 700, it was held that the defendant's officers could not be held responsible for the delay in question as the plaintiff had himself failed to help the jail authorities. On Issue No. 6 it was held that the plaintiff had not suffered any loss on account of the conduct of the defendant's jail officers, and finally on Issue No. 7 it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to sue alone.

The plaintiff being dissatisfied with the dismissal of his suit as a result of the above findings has come to this Court under s. 25. The learned Assistant Govt. Advocate has raised three preliminary objections which I shall take in the reverse order to that in which they have been argued before me. First he raised a point about the soundness of the notice served on the Secretary of State for India in Council under s. 80 of Civil P. C. On the view I take of this case that point may have to be raised at some future date in some other Court, and I will not therefore discuss it. His second point is in regard to limitation. I will merely state what the point is, because again this may be raised at some future stage. The point raised is that this suit was filed on March 9, 1936, against the Secretary of State for India in Council and was dismissed on September 30, 1936. The application under s. 25 was filed on January 12, 1937. On April 1, 1937, s. 179 of the Govt. of India Act of 1935 came into force, and it became necessary to substitute the U. P. Govt. for the Secretary of State for India in Council as defendant opposite party. No application for this purpose was made until August 17, 1938, and it is contended that by that date, taking the cause of action from the two dates given in the plaint, namely December 24, 1934 and August 2, 1935, the suit was time-barred. The reply put forward on behalf of the applicant is that this was only a change of designation and not a change of person, and that really the Secretary of State for India in Council and the U. P. Govt. ought to be regarded as essentially the same person. I do not propose to decide the question which again will be one which may arise for decision at a later stage.

The third point which he has urged is that on the facts as stated and the frame of the plaint in this case the Judge of the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. The Second Schedule of the Prov. Small Cause Courts Act contains a list of suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes. Article 3 of this relates to:

"A suit concerning an act or order purporting to be done or made by any other officer of the Govt. in his official capacity."

The very foundation of this suit, it is contended, is not the contract alleged to have been executed but the act or acts of the Inspector-General of Prisons in cancelling the acceptance of the tender and forfeiting the earnest money. Learned Counsel for the applicant has contended strenuously that this is a simple money suit for money due under a contract, but I am unable to see how this contention can be supported for a moment. The very essence of the suit is that it is a claim founded on the allegation that the Inspector-General of Prisons was not entitled to cancel the acceptance or at any rate forfeit the security money and that the U. P. Govt. is liable for damages arising out of other consequences of that act. The learned Assistant Govt. Advocate has referred to Secretary of State for India in Council v. Munshi Niaz Ahmad, (5 O. C., 403) (1), in which reference was made to two former cases, in one of which it was held that before a suit can be held to fall under Art. 3 of Sch. II of the Prov.

Small Cause Courts Act, the plaintiff must allege some particular act of some particular official which has given rise to the suit. That is precisely the situation which does exist in the present case. Learned Counsel for the applicant placed his reliance on Gopal Sahai v. Secretary of State, (91, P. L. R. 1902) (2). I have not got the original of that case before me, but the wording, presumably of the head-note, which appears in Mitra's Prov. Small Cause Courts Act (7th Edition, 1935) at p. 111 runs as follows:

"A suit by a contractor for recovery of earnest money ordered by a commissariat officer to be forfeited is not within this Article, because the order given by the officer forfeiting the money was such an order as might have been passed by any private person with whom the tenderer might have contracted to supply goods and to whom earnest money might have been paid."

With the greatest possible respect for the Judge or Judges who arrived at that decision, I am unable to see how on the facts stated the case was taken out of the purview of Art. 3 merely on the ground that the order was such an order as might have been passed by any private person. Article 3 operates precisely to that end to take out of the purview of Small Cause Courts claims arising out of an act or order purporting to be done by an officer of Govt. in his official capacity, and no distinction appears to me to arise from the fact that such an order, which is actually made by an officer of Govt. in his official capacity, might have been made by a private person in his private capacity. I am of opinion that that case is of no help to the decision of the question which arises in the present case. The learned Assistant Govt. Advocate points out that consent cannot confer jurisdiction on a Court and has referred to two cases on this point, but as the point is not contested on behalf of the applicant I need not quote them. Learned Counsel for the applicant did refer to s. 21 of the Civil P. O., but no argument can be founded on that section which relates really to irregular assumption of jurisdiction and not to absolute want of jurisdiction. It has been held that where the Court has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit its decree is a nullity, even though the parties may have consented to the jurisdiction of the Court. Strictly speaking that is the position here. However at the same time the position as it stands before me at this moment is that the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed by the Judge of the Small Cause Court, he having no jurisdiction even to entertain the suit, the applicant has come under s. 25, and under that section he can ask this Court to pass such order with respect to the suit as it thinks fit, and the order which he suggests, on the assumption of my finding that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, is that the trial Court should be ordered to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court.

As regards this suggested order the learned Assistant Govt. Advocate, while recognising that an order under O. VII, r. 10 can be passed by the trial Court or even by an Appellate Court, suggests that such an order would not ordinarily be made in the exercise of revisional jurisdiction, the exercise of that power being purely discretionary. I might have been prepared to accept this view had the case fallen under s. 115 and had the point ever been raised at an earlier stage; but the power of this Court under s. 25 of the Small Cause Court Act is very wide, and on the whole I think that the plaintiff-applicant should be allowed an opportunity of having his suit properly decided by a competent Court. At the same time it is his fault that the case has come up to this stage and for that reason he must necessarily meet the costs of the U. P. Govt. I order accordingly that subject to the payment as a condition precedent of the costs ordered by the lower Court and the costs of the Govt. incurred in this Court, the plaint may be returned to the applicant for presentation to the proper Court. The applicant will be allowed a period of two months only for payment of this amount of costs. Failing deposit of the costs within that time his application will stand dismissed.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 116 of 1939

July 12, 1939

DUNKLEY, J.

U WIN TSU—APPELLANT

versus

SECRETARY OF STATE—RESPONDENT

Burma Municipal Act (III of 1898), s. 43—Municipal councillor, position of—Liability for misapplication by his own acts or by his agents—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Finding of fact.

The position of councillors with regard to the Municipal fund is in law that of trustees. As trustees they would be bound to exercise over trust properties the same degree of caution and care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the case of his own property. They would be liable for any loss of the trust fund which was facilitated by the gross neglect of their duties as trustees by their own acts or by the acts of their agents.

Held, on facts that the President of the Municipal Committee was guilty of acts of malfeasance, on account of loss caused by the embezzlement of the tax collector whom he had appointed without taking security, though he had no power to do so and consequently he was liable to make good the loss under s. 43, Burma Municipal Act. 33 Ind Cas. 428 (2), relied on.

In a second appeal under the provisions of s. 100, Civil P. O., the findings of fact of the first Appellate Court are binding upon the High Court, however gross the appellant may assert those findings to be.

S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Toungoo, dated February 2, 1939.

Mr. C. H. Campagnac, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. Thein Maung, Advocate-General, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal under the provisions of s. 100, Civil P. O. and therefore the findings of fact of the first Appellate Court are binding upon me however gross the appellant may assert those findings to be. Durga Choudhrani v. Jawahir Singh (1). I have listened on behalf of the appellant to a long argument which has been mainly directed to showing that on the evidence the learned Judges of the Courts below should have held that the deceased akunwun was responsible for the embezzlement and that the appellant who was President of the Municipal Committee at that time, had no responsibility for it. Out of this argument two questions of law arose. One was that there was no evidence whatever in support of the two findings of fact, first, that the President received from U Min Din father of the defaulting tax collector, Ba Zan, prior to his appointment, a letter warning him of Ba Zan's bad character. In regard to this matter the conclusion must be that there is no evidence to show that the appellant ever got this letter. Consequently, I must hold that that letter has not been proved but, in fact, the District Judge on first appeal attached no importance to it. The second finding of fact in regard to which it is alleged that there was no evidence is the finding that the appellant received from the akunwun at different times a number of reports warning him that Ba Zan had not furnished the required security and further warning him that Ba Zan would not permit his tax tickets and collections to be checked, and ultimately warning him that a report of the contumacy of Ba Zan ought to be made to the District Superintendent of Police and the Deputy Commissioner. In regard to this matter the appellant's own evidence is sufficient proof, to my mind, that these reports were received by him.

He admits that on April 18, 1934, he made a detailed answer to charges which had been framed against him by the Committee when he was called upon to make good the loss of Municipal funds. In charges Nos. 3 and 4 these reports were set out; altogether there were six of them. In his answer to these charges the appellant did not deny that he had received any of these reports. The appellant has further admitted in his evidence that at a special meeting, which was held to consider the explanation of the akunwun on September 9, 1933 this explanation was read and discussed. This explanation mentioned all these reports and attached to it were copies of the reports themselves. The appellant admits that at the meeting he did not deny that these reports had been received by him. There was therefore in my opinion ample evidence on which the learned District Judge could hold that all these reports had been received by the appellant. The second question of law which has been raised is that even on facts which have been found, it has not been established in law that the appellant is liable for the loss which has been incurred by the Municipal Committee. The responsibility of a member of the committee rests upon the provisions of s. 43, Burma Municipal Act, which is as follows:

"Every person shall be liable for the loss, waste or misapplication of any money or other properties belonging to the committee if the loss, waste or misapplication is a direct consequence of his neglect or misconduct while a member of the committee....."

The construction of the provisions of a section of the Bom. Dist. Municipalities Act, similar to this section of the Burma Municipal Act, was considered by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Manilal Gangadas v. Secretary of State (2). In the course of his judgment Batchelor, J. said at p. 175:

"The position of councillors with regard to the Municipal fund is in law that of trustees and their liabilities therefore must be determined upon this footing. As trustees there can be no doubt that they would be bound to exercise over trust properties the same degree of caution and care as a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the case of his own property..... As trustees therefore it seems to me that they would be liable for any loss of the trust fund which was facilitated by the gross neglect of their duties as trustees and upon this footing their liability would be the same whether loss was caused by an act from moral turpitude or by a crime."

And Hayward, J. said:

"The councillors have thus been placed in the position of public trustees and would therefore be liable under the ordinary law for any misapplication whether by their own acts or by any other agency through their neglect of the property to the Municipality."

With these observations I am in entire agreement. It is idle for the appellant to set up that, because the akunwun did not take certain steps in this matter, which if they had been taken would have prevented the embezzlement, therefore any negligence of which he himself had been guilty cannot make him liable under the provisions of s. 59 Municipal Act, because, as the akunwun has intervened, the loss cannot be held to be a direct consequence of his neglect. On the contrary, if the akunwun's act led to this embezzlement and to the situation which arose therefrom, in which the Municipal Committee was unable to recover either from the tax collector or his sureties the amount embezzled, then, whatever further negligence on the part of some other persons may have intervened, the loss to the Municipal Committee is plainly the direct consequence of the appellant's neglect. Now, according to the bye-laws of the Toungoo Municipality, the President is the chief executive authority in all departments; that it is for him to see that the subordinates of all departments carry out their duties in the manner prescribed. Under r. 9 in Chap. XI, Part IV of the Rules under the Burma Municipal Act, it is laid down that every officer or servant of a committee who is appointed, whether permanently or temporarily, to a post in which he is required to receive or disburse money belonging to such committee, shall give security to such sufficient amount the committee may fix in each case and the security shall be of such a nature as is required by the Local Govt. from a Govt. servant of similar class who performs similar duties. Maung Ba Zan was appointed a tax collector by order of the appellant. The appellant admits that he had no authority to appoint a tax collector as tax collectors could be appointed by the Committee only. By an order of the appellant as President tax tickets were handed over to Maung Ba Zan on June 6, 1932. The akunwun received this order and was of course compelled to obey it. He duly handed over the tax tickets to Ba Zan although on that date Ba Zan was not a tax collector or employed by the Committee in any capacity whatever there was no vacancy of tax collector and Ba Zan himself had not made an application for appointment. Incidentally: of course, Ba Zan had furnished no security.

On June 7, that is the next day, one of the tax collectors applied for leave to the appellant. On June 8, Ba Zan applied for this leave vacancy. This application instead of being presented at the Municipal office as it ought to have been, was presented direct to the appellant. On the reverse thereof the appellant passed an order appointing Ba Zan to this vacancy and directing that the usual security should be taken from Ba Zan. He made no attempt to find out whether Ba Zan furnished it or not. He admits himself that he made no inquiries about Ba Zan as to whether he was a man suitable for the appointment, or whether he was able to furnish security, or whether persons whom he had named in the application as willing to stand surety for him were prepared to stand surety, or even if prepared to stand were persons of property who were likely to be suitable as sureties. On June 9, there was a meeting of the Municipal Committee. This appointment of Ba Zan was not mentioned by the appellant at this meeting although he presided at it. Yet he admits himself that he made an appointment which he had no authority to make. And although he had an opportunity on June 9, of getting the appointment confirmed by the Committee he did not take the opportunity and for very obvious reasons. On June 17, he received from the akunwun a report to the effect that Ba Zan had not furnished security. He took no action whatever on the report. On July 6, the appointment of Ba Zan came before one of the sub-committees of the Municipal Committee for a confirmation of the President's order of appointment. The appellant did not mention to the sub-committee that Ba Zan so far had not furnished security. He now alleges that he did not do so because the akunwun or secretary, I am not sure which he means, informed him that the practice was that no security need be given until the appointment had been confirmed by the Committee. If such information was given it was of course contrary to the provision of Statutory r. 9 of Chap. XI in Part IV of Burma Municipal Act. But it is quite clear that no such information was given to him because, already on June 17, the akunwun had reported Ba Zan's failure to give security.

This appointment of Ba Zan was confirmed by the sub-committee although, quite clearly, it could not have been confirmed if the sub-committee had been apprised of the true facts or at least if it had been confirmed then the negligence would have passed on to the Committee, unless the Committee took steps to see that the security was immediately furnished. On July 9, the proceedings of the sub-committee came before a full meeting of the Committee over which the appellant presided for confirmation and again no mention was made of the fact that Ba Zan had failed to furnish any security. During July, August, September and October the akunwun made no less than five reports to the appellant in which he set out that Ba Zan still had not furnished any security; further that he had attempted on several occasions to check his collections and his tax tickets but had not been able to do so. He asked for the President's orders but received no orders. These reports of the akunwun were, to use familiar language, burked by the appellant. Now on November 3, the akunwun took action on his own authority and he seized the tax tickets from Ba Zan. On checking them he found that there was a shortage of over Rs. 4,000. What did the appellant do in this extremely serious state of affairs? Nothing. Unless we are to believe the evidence which has been called on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the appellant was delaying matters in order to assist Ba Zan to find the money to make good the shortage. Instead of doing what any reasonable, prudent and honest man would have done, that is, call an immediate meeting of the Committee, he called no meeting of the Committee at all until December 19, and in the meantime no action of any kind was taken against Ba Zan and only upon the orders of the Committee which were passed at that meeting was a report made to the Police against Ba Zan. These are the simple facts of the case. The acts of which the appellant was guilty were acts of the grossest malfeasance, not merely of misfeasance. It is clear that owing to the appellant's failure to perform his duty and his gross misconduct Ba Zan was appointed tax collector without any security being furnished and was allowed to break all the rules and regulations for the periodical checking of his accounts. It cannot be said that the loss to the Municipi-pal Committee has not been directly caused by the misconduct of the appellant. The decisions of the lower Courts were plainly correct and the appellant is certainly responsible to make good the loss to the Municipal funds. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs: Advocate's fee 20 gold mohurs.

Hindu Law—Debts—Antecedent—Debt by father by exchanging villages—Subsequent mortgage in favour of stranger to pay off this debt—At time of incurring debt, subsequent mortgage in contemplation—Debt, if deprived of its character of antecedency—Pleadings—Amendment—New claim involving extensive amendment of plaint and entirely changing the nature of the case held could not be allowed at the appellate stage.

Where father incurred debt by exchanging villages and subsequently executed a mortgage in favour of a stranger to pay off the earlier debt, the earlier debt is an antecedent debt, in fact as well as in time. The character of the debt cannot be altered by the fact that at the time of incurring the debt the father knew that he would not be able to meet the liability and had in contemplation the execution of the subsequent mortgage to pay the debt.

The great-grandson instituted a suit challenging the mortgage executed by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather, on the ground that the debt for the discharge of which it was executed was not antecedent. In the Appellate Court he prayed to be allowed to challenge the original debt itself:

Held, that the claim could not be put forward as it involved extensive amendment of the plaint and would entirely change the nature of the case.

F. A. from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Moradabad, dated May 31, 1934.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and S. B. Johari, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. N. Malaviya, for the Respondents.

Verma, J.—The appellants were the plaintiffs in the suit. The principal reliefs claimed in plaint were these:

(a) It may be declared that the property bounded as set forth below and owned by the plaintiffs is not liable to be sold at auction in satisfaction of the decree, dated December 17, 1931, passed in suit No. 10 of 1930, Param Singh v. Chaudhari Narain Singh by the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Moradabad.

(b) If in the opinion of the Court the plaintiffs may be entitled to the relief in respect of a portion of the property instead of the entire property the plaintiff's right may be declared in respect of that portion of the property."

The Court below has granted to the plaintiffs a declaration that the property in question is liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage-decree No 50 of 1930

"for the amount due under the decree minus Rs. 3,588-3-0 being part of the principal of the mortgage of February 1, 1926, and interest allowed on this part of the mortgage consideration by the decree."

The plaintiffs have filed this appeal and the defendant-mortgagee-decree-holder, Param Singh, has filed cross-objections with regard to this sum of Rs. 3,588-3-0. The plaintiffs are the minor sons of Raghunath Singh who is the son of Umrao Singh and Umrao Singh's father was Narain Singh. Thus, the plaintiffs are the great-grandsons of Narain Singh. Between the years 1921 and 1924 Narain Singh purchased by means of several deeds zamin-dari property in a village called Athain. The family also owned a village called Kuchauli. It has been found by the Court below that this was the ancestral property of the plaintiffs and this finding has not been challenged by the respondents. One Shiam Singh was the owner of a village called Uchaiti. In the year 1925 it was agreed between Shiam Singh on one side and Narain Singh and his son Umrao Singh and grandson Raghunath Singh on the other that these two villages, namely, Kuchauli and Uchaiti, be exchanged between the parties. Accordingly, on May 23, 1925 a deed of exchange was executed. It is Ex. 16 and is printed at p. 101 of the paper book. The parties to this transaction were agreed that Kuchauli was worth Rs. 40,000 and Uchaiti was worth Rs. 60,000. Narain Singh and his son and grandson had therefore to pay the difference, namely, Rs. 20,000 to Shiam Singh. The manner in which this payment was made was this. Shiam Singh had on July 14, 1921 borrowed a certain sum of money from Param Singh, the present defendant-respondent and had hypothecated half of Uchaiti. On the date of exchange, it was found that the amount due on this mortgage from Shiam Singh to Param Singh was Rs. 10,656-8-0. Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh took this liability upon themselves. There was another debt which Shiam Singh had to pay to Kanhai Lal and Kalyan Rai. The details of this debt are these. At one time Shiam Singh did not own the whole of Uchaiti and his cousin Ganga Dutt had a share in it. By a deed of exchange dated January 3, 1923 Shiam Singh gave to Ganga Dutt certain property situated in villages Sultanpur and Phalenda Iahapur and took from him in exchange his share in village Uchaiti. Ganga Dutt it appears had borrowed Rs 2,500 from Kanhai Lal and Kalyan Rai under a deed of simple mortgage of July 5, 1922 and Shiam Singh had undertaken this liability.

On May 25, 1925 the amount due to Kanhai Lal and Kalyan Rai was found to be Rs. 3,300 and Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh took over this liability of Shiam Singh also. A sum of Rs. 457-8-0 was paid in cash by Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh to Shiam Singh. The total of these three items came to Rs. 14,414 leaving a balance of Rs. 5,586. The payment of this amount to Shiam Singh was made by means of another transaction. Narain Singh owed money to Kanhai Lal Kallu Mal under a registered bond dated June 22, 1921 and the amount was Rs. 5,414. Along with the deed of exchange a deed of simple mortgage was executed by Narain Singh on May 25, 1925 in favour of Shiam Singh for Rs. 11,000 and the zamindari property in village Athain mentioned above was mortgaged. Out of the mortgage money, Rs. 11,000, the sum of Rs. 5,414 was left in the hands of Shiam Singh for payment of the debt due from Narain Singh to Kanai Lal and Kallu Mal and the balance, namely, Rs. 5,586, was acknowledged by Narain Singh as having been received because of the liability under the deed of exchange. Narain Singh and this son and grandson were unable to discharge the liabilities which they had undertaken under the deed of exchange and failed to pay the amounts due to Param Singh and Kanhai Lal Kalyan Rai. Consequently they executed on February 1, 1926 a deed of simple mortgage in favour of defendant-respondent Param Singh for Rs. 20,000 and mortgaged village Uchaiti. The mortgage money, Rs. 20,000, was made up of four items. The amount due to Param Singh under the mortgage deed dated July 14, 1921 executed in his favour by Shiam Singh had by this time become Rs. 11,095-10-0 and this sum was allowed credit for. A sum of Rs. 1,792-6-0 was left in the hands of Param Singh for payment to Shiam Singh in liquidation of a portion of the liability that rested on Narain Singh and his family in respect of the sum of Rs. 5,586 mentioned above. The amount due to Kanhai Lal and Kalyan Rai under the deed executed by Ganga Dutt on July 5, 1922 had by this time reached the figure of Rs. 3,529-3-0 and this sum was also left in the hands of Param Singh for payment to those creditors. The balance, namely, the sum of Rs. 3,588-3-0 was paid by Param Singh to Narain Singh in cash before the Registering Officer at the time of registration of the mortgage-deed. Param Singh brought suit No. 50 of 1930 against Narain Singh for the recovery of the amount due on foot of this mortgage and obtained a mortgage-decree for sale. The declaration prayed for by the plaintiff in the suit out of which this appeal has arisen is in respect of this decree. The Court below has held that the consideration of the mortgage-deed in question was valid to the extent of Rs. 16,411-13-0 as it constituted antecedent debt and that no legal necessity for the balance Rs. 3,588-3-0 was proved.

Learned Counsel appearing for the plaintiff-appellants has urged that the Court below is not right in holding that the liability incurred by Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh under the deed of exchange of May 25, 1925 constituted antecedent debt. His argument is that at the time of the execution of the deed of exchange Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh must have known that they would not be able to pay the debts which they were undertaking to pay and that therefore it follows, as a matter of necessary inference, that the mortgage which was ultimately executed on February 1, 1926, was in contemplation even at that time. We are unable to accept this argument. It is clear, and is not disputed, that Param Singh had absolutely nothing to do with the deed of exchange which was executed on May 25, 1925. It is conceded that there is absolutely nothing to show that he in any manner brought it about or had any connection with it. The argument thus resolves itself into this, that the mortgage deed subsequently executed in favour of Param Singh must be invalidated because of a certain frame of mind which Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh, are alleged to have had on May 25, 1925.

In the first place there is absolutely no evidence to show that Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh at that time contemplated the execution of a deed of mortgage in future in favour of Param Singh or of anybody else for the liquidation of the liabilities which they had undertaken. For aught we know to the contrary, they may have hoped to be able to meet those liabilities out of the income of their proerty. Secondly, we fail to see how Param Singh can be penalized for what Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh might have had in contemplation at the time of the execution of the deed of exchange between them and Shiam Singh. In essence what happened on May 25, 1925, was this. Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh had to pay a sum of Rs. 20,000 to Shiam Singh on account of the difference in the value of the two villages, Kuchauli and Uchaiti. Not having got the money to pay to Shiam Singh in cash they incurred debts for the purpose of making payment to Shiam Singh. The manner in which they incurred these debts was this that they took over certain liabilities of Shiam Singh. In lieu of the liabilities thus incurred, they subsequently gave the mortgage in question to Param Singh, the antecedent liabilities forming part of the mortgage money to the extent of Rs. 16,411-13-0. In our opinion, this did constitute antecedent debt. Learned Counsel has referred to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad (1) and has relied on the proposition that "antecedent debt means antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached."

Now, the transaction impeached in this case is the mortgage of February 1, 1926, in favour of Param Singh. The antecedent debts relied upon by Param Singh consist of the liabilities incurred by Narain Singh and his son and grandson on May 25, 1925, in consequence of the transaction of exchange into which they entered with Shiam Singh. We fail to see how such a debt can be said to offend against the rule laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Accordingly, we hold that the decision of the Court below that the consideration of the mortgage deed in question was valid to the extent of Rs. 16,411-13-0 is correct.

Learned Counsel appearing for plaintiff-appellant has next urged that he should be allowed in appeal to challenge the transaction of exchange itself and to pray for its cancellation. The reliefs prayed for in the plaint have been quoted above. No relief in respect of the exchange of May 25, 1925, was claimed. It is true that in the body of the plaint it was stated that Narain Singh, Umrao Singh and Raghunath Singh should not have exchanged village Kuchauli with village Uchaiti but no relief was asked for in respect of it. The position thus is that the plaintiffs treated village Uchaiti as their ancestral property as it had been acquired by giving in exchange the ancestral village of Kuchauli and claimed the reliefs mentioned above on the footing that village Uchaiti belonged to them. It is conceded that the plaintiffs cannot put forward the claim mentioned above without undertaking extensive amendments of the plaint which will entirely alter the nature of the case. The plaintiffs cannot in our judgment be allowed in these circumstances to change the whole nature of their claim and to ask for any relief in respect of the transaction of exchange.

We come now to the cross-objection filed by Param Singh defendant-respondent. It has been urged that legal necessity for the sum of Rs. 3,588-3-0 is proved. No necessity for this borrowing in cash is mentioned in the mortgage deed itself. Learned Counsel has laid before us the statements made by his client Param Singh in the witness-box in the Court below. The case put forward by him in his deposition was that he asked Narain Singh why he was borrowing Rs. 3,588 in cash and that the latter replied that "he wanted this money to get a new well constructed and to fit his old well with a Persian wheel and tube. He said the new well he would construct would also be fitted with a Persian wheel and tube."

Prompted by his Counsel by means of the question 'what further necessity did he mention?' Param Singh came out with the further story that Narain Singh said that he would purchase bullocks for improving cultivation and camels for the Persian wheels and that he required some money for household expenses. In cross-examination he stated that Raghunath Singh had got a well constructed six years ago. He admitted, however, that he had not seen this well. He further stated:

"I have not seen the old well either. I have not seen any of the Persian wheels I have stated about above. All that I heard about the wells and the Persian wheels was from Shib Lal. I have no personal knowledge about the wells or the Persian wheels or the tubes. No camel or bullock was purchased by Narain Singh in my presence. Shib Lal told me about the purchase of camels and bullocks by Narain Singh."

It is noteworthy, however, that this Shib Lal had been examined as a witness for Param Singh a day before and not a single question had been put to Shib Lal with regard to these matters. Lower down in cross-examination he made these statements :

"I did not ask Narain Singh as to what were the household expenses for which he was taking cash. I had no idea what these expenses were likely to be. I did not ask him what amount he needed for household expenses or other expenses. The above talk took place 15 days before the execution of the mortgage deed for Rs. 20,000. I did not consider it necessary to ask anyone else respecting the necessity during the said interval of 15 days."

These statements of Param Singh make it perfectly clear that the story which he has related about the necessities for which this sum of Rs. 3,588-3-0 was borrowed is untrue and has been invented for the purposes of this case. It is also falsified by the evidence of his witness, Jagat Singh, who is an attesting witness of the mortgage deed in question. He stated that "Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 3,500 was given in cash towards the consideration of the said deed." Counsel then put the question, "Was any necessity for this amount mentioned?" and the reply given by the witness was :

"By whom, Param Singh, Narain Singh or anybody else did not give the necessity but I asked Umrao Singh about it. He said he wanted money for purposes connected with cultivation. I did not ask him what these purposes were."

We are unable therefore to place any reliance on the testimony of Param Singh. We hold, in agreement with the Court below, that no valid necessity for the advance of this sum of Rs. 3,588-3-0 has been made out. Learned Counsel for defendant-respondent has referred to s. 53, Civil P. C., and has urged that his client is entitled to a personal decree against the plaintiffs as the suit was filed within six years of the execution of the deed of mortgage and as Narain Singh has died during the pendency of this appeal. He asks us to give him a declaration that he is so entitled. In our judgment, no such declaration can be given to defendant Param Singh. It is not necessary for us in this case to express any opinion as to whether Param Singh is entitled to any decree against the plaintiffs or any other member of their family or not. If, and when, Param Singh takes any proceedings for obtaining any decree the Court in which such proceedings are taken will consider the point. For the reasons given above we dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objection with costs.

Custom (Punjab)—Gaur Brahmins of Karnal town—Burden to prove that they are governed by custom lies on them—Their settlement in town from time of Mughal Emperors or being notified as agricultural tribe, whether proof that they follow custom—Custom, how to be established.

Where the parties are Gaur Brahmins and are residents of Karnal town the burden of proof as regards the alleged custom lies on them and the burden is heavy as the parties are Hindus of the highest caste. 4 Ind. Cas. 947 (1), 73 Ind. Cas. 759 (2), 90 Ind. Cas. 1045 (3) and 134 Ind. Cas. 302 (4), relied on.

The mere facts that the Gaur Brahmins have been settled in the town of Karnal from the time of the Mughal Emperors and that Gaur Brahmins of Karnal District have been also notified as an agricultural tribe would not necessarily show that Brahmins of Karnal town follow custom. 134 Ind. Cas. 302 (4), relied on.

Custom is a question of fact and it has to be established by proof in the shape of instances, etc., and a finding as to custom cannot be based on mere inferences. The riwaj-i-am would undoubtedly raise a strong presumption in plaintiff's favour, if it is held to be applicable to the parties. 38 Ind. Cas. 354 (5), relied on.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated May 9, 1938.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shamair Chand and Ram Chander, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit by the reversioners of one Mst. Sarupi for a declaration that a gift of land made by her in favour of her daughter's sons was not binding on them according to custom. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the parties were governed by Hindu Law and not by custom, and the Courts below have found this issue in their favour and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. From this decision, a second appeal is preferred by the plaintiffs, supported by a certificate from the learned District Judge on the question of custom.

The sole point for decision in this appeal is whether the plaintiffs have proved that they are governed by custom and not by Hindu Law and whether according to that custom the daughter's sons in whose favour the gift in question was made were not entitled to inherit the property, as they would under Hindu Law. The parties are Gaur Brahmans and are residents of Karnal town. The burden of proof as regards the alleged custom admittedly lay on them and the burden was heavy in the present case as the parties are Hindus of the highest caste: cf. Maya v. Gurdit Singh (1), Salig Ram v. Badhawa (2), Khazunchand v. Paras Ram (3) and Bhagwani v. Sitaram (4), etc. The oral evidence of the plaintiffs was vague and of little value as the learned District Judge has shown and I agree with him. The plaintiffs were unable to produce any documentary evidence in the shape of judicial decisions, etc. to support their case. The only evidence on which the learned Counsel relied before me was the riwaj-i-am of Pargana Karnal of the year 1880 (Exs. p 11 to p. 15 of which copies have been placed on the record). It was contended that this riwaj-i-am is a strong piece of evidence in plaintiffs' favour and the presumption arising therefrom has not been rebutted in the present case. I am however unable to accept these contentions. It seems to me very doubtful in the first place if the riwaj-i-am produced in this case can be held to be applicable to the parties to the suit, who are residents of a town and not of a village and belong to a caste, which is usually dependent not on agriculture but on other occupations. The learned District Judge has pointed out that according to the evidence, about half of the Brahmans living in Karnal town do not own any land at all and most of them follow other occupations. Many of them follow their priestly avocation. They are owners of 2,000 bighas out of a total of 60,000 bighas.

It was urged that these Brahmans have been settled in the town of Karnal from the time of the Mughal Emperors and that Gaur Brahmans of Karnal District have been also notified as an agricultural tribe. But these facts would not necessarily show that Brahmans of Karnal town follow custom. Even if the Brahmans have been residents of Karnal from the time of the Mughal Kings, they may well be following their personal law as regards succession, etc., and the fact that Gaur Brahmans in the district have been notified as an agricultural tribe would not necessarily show that they (and especially those who are residents of a town) follow custom: see Bhagwani v. Sitaram (4). Custom is a question of fact and it has to be established by proof in the shape of instances, etc., and a finding as to custom cannot be based on mere inferences. The riwaj-i-am would undoubtedly raise a strong presumption in plaintiffs' favour, Beg v. Allah Ditta (5), if it were held to be applicable: but as stated above it seems to me very doubtful if it can be properly held to be applicable to the parties to this suit. I had occasion to consider a similar question in the case of Mahajans of Hissar town in Patrumal v. Badri Parshad (6) and I held therein that the riwaj-i-am was not applicable to them. Most of the reasons given in that judgment will, I think, apply to the present case also.

The learned Counsel for the appellants mainly relied on the fact that from the introduction to the Customary Law of the district it appears that Brahmans were consulted at the time of the preparation of the riwaj-i-ams of the Karnal District. But this general statement would not necessarily show that residents of Karnal town were consulted. In the list of tribes, who were consulted, Rajputs of Panipat town are specifically mentioned in addition to Rajputs of the district generally and if the Gaur Brahmans of Karnal town were consulted they might have been expected to be mentioned separately in the list. The Settlement Officer who was responsible for the preparation of the riwaj-i-am of 1880 noted about the Brahmans of the district as follows in para. 218 of his report:

"The Brahmans have in almost all cases followed the clients from their original abodes to villages in which they are now settled. They hold so little land that I have made but few inquiries about them. (See report of the Revision of the Settlement of the Panipat Tahsil and Karnal Pargana by D. O. J. Ibbetson published in 1883.)"

It is, also noteworthy that in statistical tables Nos. 23, 24 and 25 attached to the report relating to the principal tribes of the district, cities of Karnal and Panipat are excluded. As the learned Judge of the trial Court has pointed out the heading of the riwaj-i-am itself shows that the customs recorded are those relating to residents of villages (dehat). There is no direct evidence that representatives of Brahmans of Karnal town were consulted and in view of all the facts stated above, I do not think it would be safe to presume that they were so consulted. In Sardar Darchan Khan v. Sohaura Mal (7), even the attestation of the riwaj-i-am by a non-agriculturist who had invested in some land in a village was held to be not sufficient to show that he was governed by custom. The present case for the plaintiffs is still weaker as there is no direct evidence to show that the representatives of Gaur Brahmans of Karnal town were actually consulted when recording the custom. It was pointed out that some of the illustrations given in the Manual of the Customary Law of the Panipat Tahsil and Karnal Pargana prepared in 1910 relate to Brahmans of Karnal. It is not quite clear whether these illustrations refer to Karnal town. Besides, it appears from the preface that these illustrations were added later and I doubt whether it would be safe to presume therefrom that representatives of Brahmans of Karnal town were consulted in preparing the riwaj-i-am. In any case, even if it be assumed that the riwaj-i-am applies to Gaur Brahmans of Karnal town, the presumption has been in my opinion, sufficiently rebutted by the evidence on the record.

It has been stated above that the plaintiff's oral evidence was vague and of little value. But it is significant as pointed out by the learned District Judge that their own witnesses have admitted instances of daughters' succession which go against their case. The plaintiffs have not been able to produce any reliable documentary evidence in the shape of judicial decisions relating to Gaur Brahmans while the defendants have produced several such decisions—one of them relating to Karnal town, and others to Panipat. The best proof of custom, after all, consists of instances in which it has been followed and if the custom amongst Gaur Brahmans of Karnal town on the point in question is alleged by the plaintiffs, there is no reason why they should not have been able to produce some reliable documentary evidence in the shape of instances in support of it. Lastly, there is evidence in the shape of an important admission by Ganga Dutt, one of the plaintiffs, and Sham Sundar, a son of another plaintiff (vide Exs D-7 and D-11). The former admitted in the course of his evidence in another suit that amongst Gaur Brahmans daughters succeed in preference to collaterals. It was urged that this statement was not put to Ganga Dutt. But the copy of Ganga Dutt's statement was produced as evidence of an admission by him and was apparently allowed to be put in without any objection. It is significant that he did not go into the witness-box to explain it and no explanation of the statement was offered on his behalf even in the course of the arguments in Ex. D-11 also Sham Sundar seems to have clearly based his claim to a succession certificate on Hindu Law. No explanation was offered as to this fact either. In view of all the facts discussed above, I see no good reason to dissent from the findings of the Courts below on the question of custom. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

If instalment bond for the payment of debt contains a provision that in the event of failure of any instalment the creditor shall have a right to recover the whole amount thereunder and the debtor fails to pay several instalments, time will run from the failure of the instalments against the whole amount and the creditor is not entitled to forego such instalments as have become time-barred, and sue for remaining portion of his debt treating his relinquishment as an act of waiver within the meaning of Art. 75 of the Lim. Act. 138 Ind. Cas. 779 (3), explained and distinguished, Bhopal High Court Reports pp. 231 and 304 and Balkishan v. Harparshad decided on June 11, 1931, by Bhopal High Court, referred to.

If a creditor keeps quiet and does not prefer any suit to enforce his right of realizing the whole amount under an instalment bond with a default clause, time begins to run against him from the date of first default.

An instalment bond contained a default clause giving the creditor a right to realize the whole amount due in the event of failure of any instalment. No instalment had been paid and eleven instalments had become time-barred since the dates of their falling due, and a suit was brought to recover the remaining seven instalments under the bond:

A. against the order of the District Judge, Eastern District?

Mr. Prem Dayal Verma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jagdish Prasad, for the Respondent.

M. A. Khan, C. J.—On a reference being made by a Bench of this Court, the Full Bench considered the point referred to it during the second appeal filed by the defendant. This appeal has been filed by the defendant against the order of the District Judge, Eastern District, reversing the decree of the Court of the first instance. The facts of the case are that the plaintiff filed a suit in the Court of the Munsif at Udaipura on the foot of a bond dated January 24, 1923 stipulating the payment of Rs. 900 to be paid by the defendant in yearly instalments of Rs. 50. The said bond contained the usual default clause giving the creditor a right to realize the whole amount due in the event of failure of any instalment. The plaintiff at the time of his filing his suit had stated that no instalment had been paid and that eleven instalments had become time-barred since the dates of their falling due, and the suit is brought to recover the remaining seven instalments under the bond. The learned Munsif dismissed the plaintiff's suit as time-barred and held that the failure of the first instalment had given the plaintiff a right to sue for the whole amount due under the bond. Therefore time had begun to run from the failure of the very first instalment. On appeal the learned District Judge reversed the finding holding that the condition of realizing the whole amount was for the benefit of the creditor who may or may not avail of it. On second appeal the Bench of the High Court was divided on the point of limitation in the suit and referred it to the Full Bench in the following terms:

"If instalment bond for the payment of debt contains a provision that in the event of failure of any instalment the creditor shall have a right to recover the whole amount thereunder and the debtor failing to pay several instalments, will time run from the failure of the instalments against the whole amount or is the creditor entitled to forego such instalments as have become time-barred, and sue for remaining portion of his debt treating his relinquishment as an act of waiver within the meaning of Art. 75 of the Lim. Act? Whether on the facts proved and admitted in the case under appeal the plaintiff's claim is time-barred."

This reference has been necessitated probably on account of diversity of judicial opinion in British Indian High Courts on the subject. The Lahore High Court has no doubt held in Kundanlal v. Indar Singh, 163 Ind. Cas. 165 (1) that the plaintiff's abstinence in filing a suit on the failure of the first instalment indicates his intention of waiving his right that had accrued to him under the bond. Similarly the Oudh Chief Court has in Raja Jagatjit Singh v. Manodat, 164 Ind. Cas. 431 (2) held likewise. This trend of judicial opinion is due to a Privy Council decision in Lasadin v. Gulab Kunwar, 138 Ind. Cas. 779 (3). At a cursory glance it would appear that the Privy Council decision mentioned above had overruled the established practice of a quarter of a century in India. But in 1935 the Madras High Court threw a flood of light on Lasadin's case (3) and held that the Privy Council ruling did not affect suits based on bonds for the payment of money. Such suits were governed by Art. 75 of the First Schedule of the Indian Lim. Act and not by Art. 132. Lasadin's case (3) clearly fell under Art. 132 on account of its being a suit on the foot of a mortgage. The learned Judge of the Madras High Court dissenting from an Allahabad case Lalta Prasad v. Gajadhar Shukul (4) definitely opined that Lasadin's case (3) itself decided that Art. 132 was applicable to suits under mortgage bonds and Art. 75 was applicable to simple money bonds. This argument of the learned Privy Council was based on an English case in which a similar default clause was in issue as would appear from the following quotation :

"According to Indian law the case would not fall under Art. 132 but would be governed by Art. 75 which has been specially worded."

From this view of the case it clearly follows that according to the learned Privy Council's decision in Lasadin's case (3) Art. 75 is applicable to all simple bond suits in which instalments are fixed and the default clause added giving the creditor a right to sue for the whole amount at the failure of any one instalment. A conflict of decisions arose chiefly on account of the interpretations put by various Courts on Lasadin's case (3). The Allahabad High Court did not take long to overrule their previous decisions by a Full Bench decision which laid down that in simple money debts, the question did not arise that the creditor could wait on account of having a sufficient security as was the case in mortgage suits. Later on Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in Shamrao v. Moreshwar, 151 Ind. Cas. 97 (5) followed the same view as was expressed by the Full Bench case of Allahabad. Reference to these rulings of the various High Courts leaves no doubt that in simple money bonds the default clause was not added for the sole benefit of the creditor. If the plaintiff failed to prove that he had in fact waived his right of suing for the whole amount, time would run from the first default. It would not be out of place to point out that Lasadin's case (3) is an authority only in suits arising out of mortgage. The trend of the arguments advanced by the learned Tribunal of the highest authority in India irresistibly leads us to this very conclusion. The default clause in the words of their Lordships is solely for the benefit of the mortgagee who is entitled to enforce his security immediately or to keep quiet if he considers the security to be sufficient. If we are to hold that on every default or breach of contract by the mortgagor, the mortgage money becomes immediately payable, the real intention of the parties to the transaction will be frustrated. They have mutually agreed to give the option to the mortgagee but in practice the right would devolve on the mortgagor, because whenever he chooses he can compel the mortgagee to enforce his security regardless of the time for which mortgage was created. A mortgagor by withholding payment could at his will set the default clause in motion and determine the mortgage. For these reasons their Lordships have not considered it just to allow a mortgagor to take advantage of his own default. It would not be good law to hold that merely on account of the mortgagor's default, the mortgage money became payable within the meaning of Art. 132 of the First Schedule of Indian Lim. Act. Mortgage money becomes due when the mortgagor acquires a right to redeem his mortgage or the mortgagee acquires a right to enforce his security. This argument does not leave a shadow of doubt that the learned Privy Council's judgment in Lasadin's case (3) had any bearing on the principle of waiver in vogue in simple money debts. Under the circumstances the diversity of opinion on this point in British India is merely transitory and may disappear on a reference to a wider Bench in the light of Full Bench rulings of the Allahabad High Court and of other High Courts in British India. Now we may recapitulate Bhopal High Court decisions on this subject as briefly as possible. A Full Bench of this Court in Balkishan v. Harparshad, decided on June 11, 1931, had ruled that in the event of the failure of any instalment the whole amount became due and time began to run from the first failure. This view has been followed in later cases, such as, Nathuram v. Ratanlal, decided on September 11, 1932 and Gulabchand v. Sundarlal, decided on December 19, 1932, and reported in Bhopal High Court Reports, 1932, pp. 231 and 304. Therefore considering our own Courts practice and in the light of the opinion of the learned High Courts of British India we would answer this reference in the negative. In the suit under appeal the plaintiff has neither pleaded any waiver nor proved the same by any fact. If a creditor keeps quiet and does not prefer any suit to enforce his right of realizing the whole amount, time begins to run against him from the date of first default and on this principle the plaintiff's suit is clearly time-barred.

Therefore, we answer the reference in the negative.

Compromise—Time essence of contract—Compromise between parties that amount due under mortgage decree should be paid by instalments and that mortgagor should furnish additional security within specified time—Time essence of contract—Failure of mortgagor to furnish security within time—Court held could not enlarge time.

The plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree against the defendant and then the parties came to a compromise whereby the defendant agreed to pay the balance under the decree in certain instalments and that in addition to the properties covered by the mortgage decree, he would furnish further security and execute a bond and register it within one month. It was further agreed that time was of the essence of the contract, and that on failure to pay any one of the instalments or on failure to furnish security within the time specified, the plaintiff would be at liberty to proceed with the sale for the amount due against the properties covered by the mortgage decree and the security bond. The security was not furnished by the due date but was shortly furnished and the first instalment was duly paid. The plaintiff applied for the sale of the property:

Held, allowing the application that the Court could not enlarge time specified in the compromise petition for furnishing security.

F. A. against the order of the Assistant District Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Execution No. 7 of 1938.

Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Appellant.

Mr. Anklesaria, for the Respondent.

Mosley, J.—The plaintiff-appellant, the O. R. M. M. S. P. S. V. Chettyar Firm, obtained a final mortgage decree against the defendant-respondent, the O. V. R. A. T. Chettyar Firm. Subsequently, the parties came to a compromise and filed a joint application on January 28, 1939 by which they agreed that the balance due under the decree was Rs. 6,635 which was to carry interest at six annas per cent. per mensem until realization, that the defendant would pay Rs. 500 with interest on the amount outstanding, on or before March 30, 1939, and that he would pay the balance by three subsequent annual instalments of some Rs. 2,000 each on or before March 30, 1940 and subsequent years, and that in addition to the properties covered by the mortgage-decree, he would furnish further security (specified), and execute a bond and register it within one month of the date of the application, i. e., by February 28, 1939. It was further agreed that time was of the essence of the contract, and that on failure to pay any one of the instalments or part thereof, or on failure to pay the interest, or on failure to furnish security within the time specified, the plaintiff would be at liberty to proceed with the sale for the amount due against the properties covered by the mortgage-decree and the security bond. It was also agreed that on payment of any one of the instalments the defendant and the plaintiff would file a joint petition, i. e., certifying the payments to the Court. Security was not furnished by the due date, though the instalment of Rs. 500 and the interest due was deposited by the defendant on March 30, 1939. There was no joint application on certification to the Court.

It would appear that after this the defendant executed a security bond on March 25, in favour of the Judge, which was registered on March 31, and copied by April 1. There is no entry in the suit diary to show when this bond was filed in Court. Immediately after this, on April 3, the decree-holder filed a petition asking that the mortgaged properties be sold as the security bond had not been executed within the stipulated time. It would appear that this application was not entered in the diary until, at all events, April 6. The diary of April 3, purports to have ordered notice to issue to the other side, but that notice was never issued. From the wrong date "April 6," given in the margin before date "April 3," it is obvious that these two diary entries of different dates were written at the same time. Notice was eventually issued to the other side, and the judgment-debtor filed an affidavit in which he said that he was ill and unable to appear before the Court to sign the bond; and that this fact was mentioned to the Judge when he appeared before him to sign the bond. The bond itself is not witnessed by the Judge and does not show that it was signed before the Judge nor does the affidavit say what the duration of the defendant's illness was or what its nature was. This affidavit was never answered; but it would, of course, take a great deal more than this vague assertion of the defendant to make the Court believe that the defendant had been ill, and, what is more, the Judge never relied on that affidavit or referred to it in his judgment, nor, as a matter of fact, was it necessary for the defendant ever to appear in Court in order to have this bond in favour of the Judge executed or registered. These facts are really immaterial and I only refer to them in order to draw attention to the irregularities which appear in this case to have characterized the proceedings of the Judge. Finally the parties were heard, and the Judge passed the following order:

"The first instalment was paid on due date. The bond was executed before the payment of the first instalment, and the decree-holder's position has already been secured. The decree-holder did not raise objection before the bond was executed and registered (it was executed and registered without his knowledge). The application for execution of the decree by the decree-holder is dismissed."

The Judge actually went on to give costs against the decree-holder. The main ground of appeal is that the Judge had no power or jurisdiction to vary the decree which rests upon the compromise petition. It is, of course, ordinarily the case with a consent decree that it cannot be altered except by consent of the parties. It has been held in an English case Australian

Automatic Weighing Machine Co. v. Walter (1)—and the law on the subject is the same in India—that where the time for doing an act has been fixed by a consent order, it cannot be enlarged except by consent. It is otherwise, of course, where the period has been granted by the Court, and time can be enlarged by the Court (s. 148, Civil P. C.). This was not a case at all of a stipulated penalty (s. 74, Contract Act) where the Court can give relief to a party, as the plaintiff did not ask for sale of the fresh security. The law on the subject is contained in s. 55, Contract Act, which says:

"When a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before a specified time... and fails to do any such thing at or before the specified time, the contract, or so much of it as has not been performed, becomes voidable at the option of the promisee, if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract."

For the respondent Akkach Mondal v. Aminuddi Mollick (2), was cited. This was a case where more time was given for payment of a final mortgage decree; no reasons were given, and it appears that the other side did not object to the time being enlarged. The matter is discussed in Nand Rani Kuer v. Durga Das Narain (3), but that was a case where the time was not of the essence of the contract. Here the parties agreed that time was of the essence of the contract. Even though, as the Judge said, the plaintiff was eventually no worse off pecuniarily as regards the decretal amount than he would have been if the compromise had been strictly adhered to, there is of course always the extra expense and trouble to the plaintiff to be considered. Various rulings have been quoted on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant to show that the Court has no power except in the case of preliminary mortgage-decrees (where power is specifically given by the Code) to interfere with the terms of a consent order, at all events one where time is of the essence of the contract. These rulings are: Sajjadi Begam v. Dilawar Hussain (4), which was followed in Kandhaiya Singh v. Musammât Kundan (5), Hari Singh v. Bulaqi Mal & Sons (6), Chandanbala Debi v. Prabodh Chandra (1) (1891) W N 170 (Eng).

Ray (7) and Harakh Singh v. Saheb Singh (8).

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to express an opinion whether, in a case between creditor and debtor, where there has been a short unavoidable delay in making a payment or doing anything necessary under the consent decree the Court has not an inherent power to treat the short unavoidable delay as no delay or no breach of the contract. But this is really merely another form of the legal maxim de minimis non curat lex. Certainly in the present case the delay was not negligible and was a breach of the contract. For these reasons this appeal will be allowed and the order of the trial Court dismissing the plaintiff-appellant's application will be set aside with costs. Advocate's fee five gold mohurs.

Note.—I desire to express an opinion at the same time that in all probability the plaintiff-appellant, once he has had his application restored, and the order for costs against him (which should under no circumstances ever have been made) set aside, and has received the costs of this appeal, will have suffered no substantial damage or loss, and that it would be only equitable for him to forgo his strict rights under the contract and to allow the defendant-respondent to make payment of the decretal amount by instalments in the way and at the time specified by the consent decree. I am given to understand by the Advocate for the plaintiff-appellant that there is a reasonable prospect of this being done.

Sharpe, J.—I agree that this appeal must be allowed, and I share my brother's hopes for the future.

Where in a suit based on hundi the defendant has admitted its execution, the burden of proving that it was without consideration lies heavily on him.

A hundi or a bill of exchange being a negotiable document is drawn by one person who is called a drawer, on another person who is called a drawee, who is ordered to pay the amount thereof to a third person who is the holder. Thus three persons are parties to a bill of exchange. A document which is not of this nature is not legally a hundi or bill of exchange. A document which is only bilateral cannot be called a bill of exchange. 145 Ind. Cas. 662 (1), relied on.

Where therefore a hundi is drawn by A on his own firm ordering the amount thereof to be paid to B after certain days, the transaction virtually is that A borrowed money and passed a hundi drawn on himself as security for the debt to B. It is thus a clear case of the execution of a promissory note pure and simple. Such a document if not properly stamped as required under Arts. 39 and 12 (b), Bhopal Stamp Act is inadmissible in evidence under s. 33 of the Stamp Act, even on payment of proper duty and penalty.

An acknowledgment does not contain any promise to pay.

Judgment.—This is an appeal of Ram Narain and Ballabdas minor, through Ram Narain as next friend, plaintiffs, from the judgment of the Court of Munsif, Bhopal dismissing plaintiffs' claim for Rs. 278 principle and interest against Nemichand owner of firm Lakhmichand Nemichand, defendant, based on a hundi executed by the defendant. The plaintiffs' suit was that on Miti Phagun Sudi 10, Sammat, 1992, corresponding to March 2, 1936, the defendant passed a hundi for Rs. 245 payable after 121 days drawn on his own firm in favour of the plaintiffs. After the stipulated time when the plaintiffs presented the hundi, the defendant refused payment. Thus the plaintiffs claim against the defendant the amount of hundi plus the interest on it at the rate of Re. 0-12-0 per cent. per month in accordance with the mercantile usage. Along with the plaint the plaintiffs have filed the hundi as basis of the suit. This document is in Marwari Hindi language and appears to have been drawn by Lakhmichand Nemichand on his own firm and the amount thereof was payable to Ram Narain and Ballabdas after 121 days. It was stamped with only three annas adhesive stamp. The defendant in his pleading raised objections about the hundi that it was not duly stamped and hence was inadmissible in evidence and that it could not be admitted in evidence even on payment of the requisite stamp and penalty, besides the hundi in suit was without consideration. The defendant did not deny its execution, but he stated that he had executed the hundi in favour of another person named Ratanlal from whom too he had not borrowed any money. About the execution of hundi his statement deserves no credit. He could not clearly deny its execution, but merely stated that it was executed in favour of Ratanlal although the hundi itself clearly shows that it was executed in favour of the plaintiffs. It being admitted that the hundi was executed by the defendant, the burden of proof that it was got without consideration heavily lay on the defendant, who excepting his own solitary statement could not adduce any evidence to discharge it. Therefore not agreeing with the finding of the lower Court I hold that the hundi was executed by the defendant and it was not without consideration. The way in which the lower Court has decided this case shows that the real contention with regard to the burden of proof was not approached in strict accordance with law. In this case the most important point was the documentary nature of the hundi and its admissibility in evidence. If it was held inadmissible in evidence for want of proper stamp, transaction could not legally be proved by any oral evidence, with the result that the plaintiffs could not succeed. Although it has been termed a hundi yet in legal phraseology a bill of exchange being a negotiable document is drawn by one person who is called a drawer, on another person who is called a drawee, who is ordered to pay the amount thereof to a third person who is the holder. Thus three persons are parties to a bill of exchange and due to its this very nature it is negotiable. A document which is not of this nature is not legally a hundi or bill of exchange as has been held in Mohamad Hafiz Umarkhaz Khan v. Mohammad Akbar Khan (1), by the learned Judicial Commissioner, who laid down that a document which was only bilateral could not be called a bill of exchange. In my opinion this principle is sound. The hundi in suit was drawn by Lakhmichand Nemichand on his own firm ordering the amount thereof to be paid to the plaintiffs after 121 days. The transaction virtually was that one person borrowed money and passed a hundi drawn on himself as security for the debt to the creditor. It was thus a clear case of the execution of a promissory note pure and simple. Under Art. 39 and Art. 12, cl. (b) of Bhopal Stamp Act such a document ought to have been stamped with Re. 0-4-0 stamp. As it bears only a Re. 0-3-0 stamp, therefore under s. 33 of Bhopal Stamp Act it is inadmissible in evidence even on payment of proper duty and penalty. Therefore the plaintiffs' suit has no ground to stand upon. In this appeal it is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the document was an acknowledgment of debt. But in law an acknowledgment does not contain any promise to pay. The document in question clearly contains a promise to pay, therefore the plaintiffs' contention fails. With the sole exception of the objection regarding burden of proof of consideration all other grounds are merely futile and deserve no consideration. They have not been even pressed in argument by the plaintiffs. The suit was based on the hundi, which is inadmissible in evidence, therefore I reject the plaintiffs' appeal with costs.

—DEFENDANTS.

Pleadings—Amendment—Plaint amended as a result of counter-claim—Amendment of written statement, whether plaintiff's duty—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Counter-claim—Abatement of.

When the plaintiff has amended the plaint as a result of the counter-claim it is not his duty to amend the title of the written statement itself. The plaintiff can amend his own pleadings and if the defendant wants to amend the title of the counter-claim it is his duty to obtain the order for the purpose.

A counter-claim stands in the same category as a cross-suit for the purposes of the Civil P.O. The counter-claim abates by reason of the omission to bring the heirs of the deceased defendant to the counter-claim on record in the counter-claim.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, Advocate-General, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. C. K. Daphtary, for the Defendants.

Judgment.—The first contention raised in this summons is that the counter-claim has not abated because (a) it is not necessary to insert a separate title as no other party than the parties to the original suit was impleaded in the counter-claim; and (b) there being no other defendant to the counter-claim, the provisions of O. XXII, r. 4, do not in terms apply. I do not agree with these contentions. Rule 130 of the High Court Rules, which permits the filing of a counter-claim, states that counter-claim shall have the same effect as a cross-suit. There are provisions in the rules for service of the counter-claim, for making persons other than the original parties defendants to the counter-claim, filing of a reply to the counter-claim by the plaintiff or by the additional defendants, and a provision that in default of such a reply the defendant to the suit will be entitled to have the suit put on board for an ex parte decree on the counter-claim. Whether a separate title is made or not is not important. It is important to note, however, that it is permissible to frame a counter-claim against persons other than the plaintiff. It is common knowledge that applications for affidavits of documents, motions, and such interlocutory proceedings are taken in respect of the counter-claim alone, which are not directly related to the suit. Having regard to this it appears to me clear that a counter-claim stands in the same category as a cross-suit for the purposes of the Civil P. C. The contention of the applicants that the counter-claim has not abated by reason of the omission to bring the heirs of the deceased defendant to the counter-claim on record in the counter-claim must fail. It is next urged that the plaintiffs had amended the plaint by bringing the heirs on record and they took an order for amendment of the plaint and also the third party proceedings which were taken by the plaintiffs as a result of the counter-claim. It is urged that it was therefore the duty of the plaintiffs to amend the title of the written statement itself. In my opinion, that contention is wrong. The plaintiffs can amend their own pleadings and if the defendants wanted to amend the title of the counter-claim it was their duty to obtain the order for the purpose. It is next urged that as the plaintiffs had obtained the order to amend the plaint and the third party notice which arose out of the counter-claim defendants thought that the written statement would also be accordingly amended. In the affidavits the blame is sought to be put on the plaintiffs for not doing so. Counsel on behalf of the applicants has urged that in light of the rules framed by the Court and the interpretation put on them by the legal advisers of the applicants, the applicants did not think that they were bound to come to Court and they have taken out this summons as a matter of precaution. If their contention as to the construction of the rules is incorrect, the applicants should not suffer for the advice tendered to them by the legal advisers and their claim should not be prejudiced. I think this argument cannot be disregarded. There is thus a sufficient cause under the circumstances of this case and the abatement is therefore set aside. The summons is made absolute. The applicants to pay the costs of the summons and bear the costs of the amendment of the title of the written statement and the consequential amendments. Leave granted to the plaintiffs to amend the title of their reply to the counter-claim. The time to amend the third party proceedings extended up to July 10, 1939. Counsel certified.

Second Appeals Nos. 20 and 21 of 1937

FAKIR DOST MAHOMED—APPELLANT

RESPONDENTS

Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Proof of—Dedication, if must be proved—Whether can be proved by evidence of user—Private ownership of plot—Inference—Record of Rights—Notice by Deputy Collector referring certain plot as waqf—If instrument of title—Second appeal—Question of fact—Whether instances of burial proved are adequate to infer dedication is question of fact.

Waqf implies dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for charity, or for religious objects or purposes, or for an object of public utility. Waqf property, is subject to certain rare exceptions, inalienable and a suit for a declaration that property belongs to a waqf can be brought by Muhammadans interested in the waqf. In order to establish a waqf the necessary dedication must always be proved. Lapse of time frequently renders it difficult or impossible to establish dedications by direct evidence, but waqf may be established by evidence of user. 17 Ind. Cas. 714 (2), relied on. [p. 230, col. 2.]

Private ownership of a plot is incompatible with dedication of it under a waqf as a graveyard for Muhammadans in general. [p. 233, col. 1.]

Notices by Deputy Collector referring certain plot as waqf are not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundation of rights. 122 Ind. Cas. 316 (3), relied on. [p. 231, col. 1.]

Whether instances of burial proved in any particular cases are "adequate in character, number and extent" to justify an inference of dedication is a question of pure fact. [p. 231, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

S. As. against the decree of the First Class, Sub-Judge, Sukkur, dated January 5, 1937.

Syed M. Aslam, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Lulla & Co. and Dipchand & Co. for the Respondents (Shikarpur Municipality and Chainrai, respectively).

O'Sullivan, J.—These are appeals from a judgment of the First Class, Sub-Judge, Sukkur, dated January 5, 1937, reversing the decision of the Sub-Judge, Shikarpur. The appellant, one Fakir Dost Mahomed, brought a suit against the Shikarpur panchayat and the Shikarpur Municipality, the respective respondents in these appeals, to establish that plot of land bearing City Survey No. 109 in the town of Shikarpur was once a Muhammadan graveyard. The plaint filed on April 13, 1928, alleged that the plot was waqf property comprising a graveyard in which "there were graves of several Syeds," and that the Shikarpur Municipality had unauthorizedly sold the plot to the Shikarpur Panchayat. A declaration as to the waqf and a mandatory injunction to restrain interference by the said bodies were claimed. The suit was not a representative suit under O. I. r. 8, Civil P. C. On May 1, 2, 3 and 6, 1928, the learned Subordinate Judge, in whose Court the suit was filed, caused certain excavations to be made on the disputed land at the request of the appellant. These took place in the presence of the parties and the result was set down in notes which have been exhibited in the record of the case as Exs. 42, 43 and 143. An area of approximately six by seven feet in the north-west corner of the plot was first excavated, and portions of a human skelton were found. Subsequently at another spot what appeared to be a grave of bricks containing an almost complete human skelton was discovered lying north and south. Excavations were made at three other places side by side and in two of these there were found pieces of bones. Digging was then abandoned. It is to be noted that neither party at any stage of the case applied to the Court for the appointment of a commission for a local investigation. The respondents in their respective written statements denied that the property was waqf or that it was a graveyard and contended that the land had belonged to Govt. that Govt. had sold it to the Shikarpur Municipality, who in turn sold it to the Shikarpur panchayat. They also raised several legal pleas. The following issues were framed ;

"1. Is the plot No. 11/109 in suit the waqf property as alleged in the plaint ? 2. Has the plaintiff right to bring this suit. Is the point res judicata on account of order dated June 25, 1928 ? 3. Is the suit as brought open to the objection under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, if so, what order should be made. Is the point res judicata on account of order dated June 25, 1928 ? 4. Is the joinder of the Secretary of State necessary in the suit ; if so, what is the consequence of his non-joinder and what order should be made ? 5. Should the Collector of Sukkur be joined in the case and is s. 92, Civil P. C., bar to the suit ? Whether this point is res judicata on account of order dated June 25, 1928 ? 6. Is the suit within time ? 7. Is the suit insufficiently stamped ? 8. Is the suit not maintainable without permission being obtained under O. I. r. 8, whether the point is res judicata on account of the order of June 25, 1928 ? 9. Is the suit against defendant No 1 not maintainable without the joinder of all the members of the panchayat ? 10. Is the plaintiff not entitled to bring this suit on account of delay and acquiescence as urged by defendant No. 1 ? 11. What should the decree be ?"

The suit ultimately came up for hearing in 1934 and a number of witnesses were examined on each side. The appellant did not produce any direct evidence of dedication of the property as waqf, or as to the origin of the alleged waqf, but relied upon evidence of user to establish dedication. His evidence may briefly be summarized as follows : (a) The result of the excavations at the sight. (b) Documentary comprising notices Exs. 202 (a) to 202 (c) issued in September 1898, by the then Deputy Collector to three persons Gamboshah, son of Lalshah, Lalshah, son of Hydershah, and Ganishah, son of Lalshah, to the following effect :

"The mukam (graveyard) that is outside Lakhi Gate Shikarpur on which Masand Hiranand lays claim on behalf of the heirs of Diwan Mushtakram, but you also lay claim over that mukam as your property, this is to require you to appear before me on September 21, 1898, for enquiry.

(Sd.) Deputy Collector, Sukkur Division."

It was appellant's contention that the land in dispute is identifiable as the mukam or graveyard mentioned in the notices and that the use of the expression mukam shows that the plot was a Muhammadan graveyard. The notices were relied upon as admissions by Govt. that the plot was a graveyard. (c) The oral testimony of ten Muhammadan witnesses who claim to have seen graves on the plot a number of years ago. One of these witnesses has stated that he participated in one or two burials on the plot between 50 and 60 years ago. (d) The circumstances that no attempt had been made to build upon the plot until shortly before the suit although it was valuable land in the middle of Shikarpur. The respondents' evidence consisted of: (a) The testimony of about thirty-six old Hindu residents of Shikarpur directed to show that no graves had within living memory been observed on the plot, but that since they could remember the plot had been a flat open space used by boys as a playground or for fairs and festivities. (b) Documentary and oral evidence as to the history of the plot from 1862 to date of suit. This was relied upon as showing that since 1862 the plot had been treated as ordinary Govt. land until a survey of Shikarpur city in 1925 when the plot was transferred by Govt. to the Municipality. The Municipality decided in 1926 to auction the property and this was subsequently done, the Shikarpur panchayat being the purchasers. The Govt. and Municipal Records did not show that the property had ever been referred to as a graveyard. On April 16, 1934, the Sub-Judge of Shikarpur decreed appellant's suit with costs. He found on all the issues in his favour except Issue No. 9 which he held did not arise. The opponents filed appeals and on January 5, 1937, the First Class Sub-Judge, Sukkur reversed the judgment and decree of the lower Court, and allowed the appeals with costs.

On the main issue in the case, as to whether the plot in suit was a Muhammadan graveyard, the subject of waqf, the learned Judge after a very full discussion of the facts and the legal aspect came to the conclusion that the appellant had failed to establish his case. He also came to the conclusion that it was not even proved that the plot was a private graveyard. The learned Judge also considered that certain of the legal defences should prevail. We have heard sustained arguments from appellant's Counsel on various aspects of the case but we consider that we can dispose of the appeal on the aforesaid main issue and that it is unnecessary to embark upon a consideration of the other defences set up.

In holding against the appellant the following are in brief the main findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court: (a) That the oral evidence produced by the appellant failed to establish that within living memory there had been any graves to be seen on the plot. In arriving at this conclusion the learned Judge emphasized that the plaintiff's witnesses were men of no substance and that it was significant that no Muhammadan of importance had come forward to support plaintiff's case. (b) That the respondents' witnesses were persons of position, to be relied upon, and had established that within living memory no graves had been seen on the disputed land, and that it had never been regarded as a graveyard. (c) That the history of the plot controverted the plaintiff's case. This aspect of the matter is referred to by the learned Judge at lines 372 to 428 of the judgment:

"Now I shall show that from 1862 the plot in suit had been considered to be a Govt. plot. Dandumal, Ex. 307, who served the Shikarpur Municipality in various capacities from 1884 to 1929, says that the Shikarpur Municipality came into existence in 1855. He states that he had seen the map of Shikarpur prepared in 1862-63 (which had been burnt on account of fire of 1925) and the plot in suit was not shown as graveyard. By the Act VI of 1873 all the land vested in the Municipality. This was amended in 1856 by which all building sites were declared to be property of the Govt. The Municipality laid claim by Resolution No. 17 dated July 28, 1886 (copy Ex. 308), but the Govt. by the G. R. No. 7609 dated October 17, 1886, did not agree (copy Ex. 309). Thereafter the Govt. deputed two supervising Tapedars who prepared sketches of all the open spaces in the Municipal limits. List of plots is Ex. 310 and serial No. 2 in it is the plot in suit. This was a finding of the committee consisting of mukhtiar and two Hindus and two Mussalmans. Exhibits 310 and 218 are part of the list. Exhibit 339 is the full list. Exhibit 339 is part of the report dated August 12, 1910 and it was resolved that serial No. 2 (the plot in suit) should be kept open for the public convenience and use and should not be sold. Exhibit 339 mentions over 250 open sites and the committee saw each one of them and passed resolutions with respect to them. Some of them were shown as mukams or masjids. Obviously therefore in 1910 even the two Mussalmans and two Hindus as members of the local Municipality saw no graves on the plot in suit. Exhibit 310, sketch of the plot in suit prepared on May 25, 1899, shows it to be an open plot. No mention is made either of graves on it or its being waqf. Note on Ex. 310 is that this plot was seen again in 1906 and there was no construction of any kind. This plot was held to be of the Govt. Exhibit 312 is the City Survey map of Tak No. 11 in which the plot in dispute is shown as 109 and 88. After 1914, i. e., after the City Survey of Shikarpur Municipal limits, by G. R. No. 5494 dated August 29, 1925, the plot became the Municipal plot. One Hiranand deceased made application (Ex. 224) that the plot be sold to him; managing committee by resolution dated October 2, 1926 (copy Ex. 226) resolved (Ex. 227) that it should be auctioned. The General Board (Ex. 228) also decided likewise. None objected to the sale. Auction was held and even some Mussalmans gave bids. The sale was confirmed with votes of the Muslim members of the Shikarpur Municipality, vide Ex. 237. All this points out that such a plot never had a visible grave within the living memory of the generation of men now living or those who had to deal with it in 1890 or so. It is for this reason that I am of opinion that the record of Govt. the conduct of the Mussalman members of the public in general, and evidence of so many Hindu witnesses all belie the plaintiff's witnesses who are most probably drawing on their imagination about having seen graves 20 or 30 years back."

(d) That the notices Exs. 202-a to 202-c

did not appertain to the plot in suit, but to a graveyard outside the town. The learned Judge pointed out that the notices mentioned a mukam "outside the Lakhi Gate" whereas the plot in dispute is inside the Lakhi Gate. He also found that, assuming the notices were in the nature of admissions by Govt. and referred to the plot in suit, there was no evidence to support the conclusion that there had been an ultimate decision by Govt. that the mukam was the property of the recipients of the notices or the property of the Muhammadan community. A full discussion regarding Exs. 202-a to 202-c is to be found at lines 512 to 590 of the judgment.

(c) That the graves and bones discovered in consequence of the excavations was not sufficient evidence of user to prove the waqf. The question of the results of the excavation has been discussed at lines 440 to 510 and 599 to 620. The learned Judge's conclusions on this matter are summed up as follows:

"The plaintiff had to prove by evidence of user that there was a public burial ground. What the evidence of user should be is held by the Lahore High Court in Raushan Din v. Mahomed Sharif (1) 'user from which dedication can be implied must be clearly established and must be of such nature as to be only consistent with dedication..... user or dedication was required to be public user or public dedication.' The plaintiff has failed to prove evidence of user or dedication as required by the Lahore High Court which also held that where the evidence showed no more than that certain persons were many years ago buried in the place, it did not amount to evidence of public user. It seems to me that the present case is indistinguishable from one reported in Raushan Din v. Mahomed Sharif (1), if it be presumed that bones and grave found were of some Mussalmans."

The learned Judge's final conclusions on the main issue in the case are set out thus:

"Considering therefore all the evidence I am of the opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that the plot was Sayads' kabristan or a public graveyard."

These are the findings of fact by the lower Appellate Court and this is a second appeal. The question for us is whether the appellant has made out grounds under s. 100, Civil P. C., for reversing the judgment and decree. The learned Advocate for the appellant was at the outset inclined to proceed though this were a first appeal and to initiate a discussion at large on points which he was later constrained to concede were purely questions of fact. On being reminded more than once of the limitation imposed by s. 100, Civil P. C. as to the grounds upon which a second appeal lies, the learned Advocate eventually confined his observations to the question of the inference to be drawn from the result of the excavations. His contention was that the learned Judge has made an error of law in not holding that the graves and human remains which had been discovered constituted sufficient evidence of user to establish by inference that the disputed ground was waqf property.

We have carefully considered the whole judgment of the lower Appellate Court on the main issue and it does not appear to us that the decision thereon is in any manner "contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law." That there was any error or defect in procedure has not been suggested. Waqf implies dedication by a person professing the Mussalman faith of any property for charity, or for religious objects or purposes, or for an object of public utility. This definition is not exhaustive but sufficient for the purposes of this case. Waqf property is, subject to certain rare exceptions, inalienable and a suit for a declaration that property belongs to a waqf can be brought by Muhammadans interested in the waqf. As indicated above it is unnecessary for the purpose of this appeal to go into the question of the maintainability of the suit in the present form by the present plaintiff. In order to establish a waqf the necessary dedication must always be proved. Lapse of time frequently renders it difficult or impossible to establish dedications by direct evidence, but waqf may be established by evidence of user. This principle of Muhammadan Law in its application to graveyards was recognized by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Court of Ward v. Ilahi Bakhsh (2) and in a number of decisions of Indian High Courts, reference to some of which will hereafter be made. Not unnaturally no attempt was made in this case to establish dedication by direct evidence. A summary of the material relied upon by the appellants has already been given and the learned Judge's conclusions therein stated.

The conclusions as to the truth or otherwise of the oral evidence are so manifestly pure questions of fact as to require no further comment. Likewise no point arises in the case as to the interpretation of or legal inference to be drawn from any document, nor is it suggested that the first Appellate Court made any error as to the meaning of any document. The only documents relied upon by the appellants were the notices Exs. 202 (a) to (c). These are certainly not "instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundation of rights" within the meaning of that phrase in the judgment of Sir Binode Mitter in Wali Mahomed v. Mahomed Bakhsh (3). The question of the construction or meaning of these notices were not, in any event, in issue. It had been sought to establish from them the fact that the disputed land had once been referred to as a mukam or graveyard. The learned Judge found as a fact that they did not relate to the disputed land and no further question regarding these documents arises. Unlike many other cases of a similar nature, the appellants in this case had not been in a position to produce any Record of Rights or other instrument of title in which the disputed land has been shown as a graveyard.

The remaining question resolves itself into one of small compass and that is as to whether from the graves and human remains discovered an inference of dedication was justified. As to this the learned first Appellate Judge placed reliance on the observations of Monroe, J., in the Lahore case in Raushan Din v. Mahomed Sharif (1) referred to above, and we agree with him that that decision is in point. The judgment of the Privy Council in Ballabh Das v. Nur Mahomed (4) has also considerable bearing on this aspect. Proceedings had been instituted to establish that a particular plot of land was an ancient Muhammadan graveyard. A number of witnesses were called but the oral evidence was found to be of little assistance. The principal items of evidence relied upon by the plaintiffs were a survey khasra of 1868 together with a map in which the plot was shown as a qabristan or graveyard and the finding of a "very few pucca graves." The khasra and map were held to be instruments of title in favour of plaintiffs and it was the opinion of their Lordships that the word qabristan in the khasra meant, prima facie, that the land was a graveyard in the sense known to Muhammadans. Their Lordships however considered that the plaintiffs' case would have stood on a different footing had it rested solely on the evidence as to the finding of the graves. Sir George Rankin in delivering the judgment of the Board said:

"If the plaintiffs had to make out dedication entirely by direct evidence of burials being made in the ground and without any record such as the khasra of 1868 to help them, they would undoubtedly have to prove a number of instances adequate in character, number and extent to justify the inference that the plot of land in suit was a cemetery. The plaintiffs however are not in this position. The entry qabristan in the khasra of 1868 has to be taken together with the map which shows the whole of the plot No. 108 to be a graveyard."

Whether instances of burial proved in any particular cases are "adequate in character, number and extent" to justify an inference of dedication is undoubtedly a question of pure fact. It was observed by Sir Binode Mitter in Wali Mahomed v. Mahomed Bakhsh (3) at p. 207*, referring to the decision in Nafar Chandra Pal v. Shukar (5):

"The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law, but the question whether a fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact."

No question arises here as to the legal effect of proved facts. The question for decision is merely as to whether the evidence available is sufficient to make out dedication. This Court has on more than one occasion of late had reason to draw attention to the limited scope of second appeals. We would refer to the case in Gulabrai v. Indian Equitable Insurance Co., Ltd. (6) in which Davis, J. O. said:

"This is a second appeal, and we must therefore decline the invitation so constantly made to us by the learned Advocate for the appellant to deal with the facts of the case."

The learned Judicial Commissioner then proceeded to refer to a series of decisions by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as to the powers of the Appellate Court in second appeals. Special reference might be made to one of these, Durga Chowdurani v. Jawahir Singh Chowdhari (7) at p. 30, in which Lord Macnaghten observed:

"It is enough in the present case to say that an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect of procedure and that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be."

Assuming however that the inference to be drawn as to dedication from the proved facts is a question of law, the learned Judge of the first Appellate Court has at considerable length discussed the law applicable and we think he has fully and correctly comprehended the legal aspect and made no error. Reliance was placed by learned Counsel for the appellant on the cases in Ballabh Das v. Nur Mahomed (4) Court of Wards v. Ilahi Bakhsh (2), Sajjad Ali Khan v. Jagmohan Das (8), Mehraj Din v. Ghulam Mahomed (9) and Mahomed Isaq v. Balmukund Lal (10). The first mentioned case in Ballabh Das v. Nur Mahomed (4) already mentioned above in some detail, is of no assistance to the appellant. The case in Court of Wards v. Ilahi Bakhsh (2) also does not help the appellants as the facts are entirely dissimilar. In that case the Record of Rights appertaining to the disputed area described it as a "qabristan or chair mumkin kabristan" (graveyard or unculturable land forming part of a graveyard). There were clusters or graves dotted all over the disputed area, and it was admitted that it had been used as a Muhammadan graveyard from time immemorial. The legal point decided was that waqf may be established by user. In Sajjad Ali v. Jagmohan Das (8) the property in dispute was a house and this house held to be waqf property and a graveyard had been described in the pleadings and evidence of both sides as imambara. The following passage in the judgment of the Appellate Court describes it:

"The evidence further establishes that the house has borne this description for over 50 years. In the rooms and in the opening spaces of the house there are graves, 23 of which have been definitely traced. Indeed the whole place, in so far as its physical appearance is concerned, as shown by the Commissioner's report, is dotted with graves. The inscriptions on some of the graves show that they were more than 80 years old, and on the evidence accepted by the Courts below it is further established that the graves are not only of the relations of original owner of the house but also of friends. The further fact proved is that the building is not only an imambara in name but that it has all along been used as such by the celebration of majlises; that a Quran Khawan has generally lived there and had occasionally been reciting the holy book and that lastly it has never been used as a residential house."

Quite clearly no parallel can be drawn between that case and this. The facts in Mehraj Din v. Ghulam Mahomed (9) also bear no resemblance to those in the present case. The property in that case consisted of the mausoleum of a devout saint who died two or three hundred years previously. The Muhammadans of the locality were in the habit of burning lamps in the mausoleum and praying there. The defendant in the suit who claimed the property as his own was the son of a man who had been appointed caretaker. It is of importance to note however that Lahore High Court, there held that the finding of the lower Appellate Court on an appreciation of the evidence that the property was waqf was one of fact and could not be disputed in second appeal. Mahomed Isaq v. Balmukund Lal (10), related to the effect of a local examination. The Appellate Court was, inter alia, of opinion that a decision based entirely on a local inspection by a Judge is bound to be unsatisfactory. We are not in the present case concerned with the points of law under consideration in that case.

It has already been observed above that the finding of the first Appellate Court in this case was that it had not been established that the disputed land was either a private graveyard belonging to a family of Syeds or a public Muhammadan graveyard. This double finding of fact on the main issue was presumably necessitated by the self-contradictory nature of the appellant's case. In the plaint it was averred that the graveyard contained the "graves of several Syeds." In his evidence the appellant stated that the plot was known as Syed Gumboshah's graveyard and that only Syeds were buried there. The notices Exs. 202 (a) to 202 (c) relied on by the appellant were addressed to three Syeds and the terms thereof indicate that these Syeds were claiming the graveyard as their own property. It was clearly suggested by the appellant that the graveyard was the personal property of a family of Syeds. It was also however appellant's case that the rights of Mussalmans generally were involved. The relevant issue as framed by the trial Court was merely "is the plot No. 11-109 in suit waqf property as alleged in the plaint?" The learned trial Judge realized that the plaintiff's allegation could be taken as implying that the graveyard was the private property of certain Syeds, for he discussed this aspect of the matter in the following terms and came to the conclusion that the graveyard was a public one :

"According to the plaintiff and his witnesses dead bodies of Syeds are buried in the graveyard which is known as Syeds' graveyard. If it had been a private cemetery, it would have surely been walled around by Syeds or any one else taking care of the same. But because it was a public graveyard, none seems to have taken care of it because of apathy of the Muhammadan community. The word mukam in the notices also refer to it as being a public graveyard. The contention of the Syeds that it was their own property as recited in the notices appears to have been overruled, for surely it would have been declared as their own property if the enquiry had resulted in their favour."

The learned first appellate Judge formulated the questions arising under issue No. 1 as follows, "was the plot in suit a public or private graveyard of Mussalmans" so as presumably to cover both aspects of the appellant's case. His findings on these are set out above, and as we have indicated are findings of fact which we cannot disturb. The learned first Appellate Judge did not overlook the apparent inconsistency of appellant's case as appears from the following remarks :

"It has been rightly contended that in para. 4 of the plaint the plaintiff stated that the plot in suit was Syeds' qabristan and that the lower Court was not justified even if it believed every one of the plaintiff's witnesses to make out a case that the plot was a public graveyard. It is settled law that the Courts are not entitled to set up a case for the plaintiff which he did not set up : vide Jnanendra Mohan Sen v. Hari Ram, 40 Ind. Cas. 467 (11), Anant Ram v. Bharat National Bank Ltd. Delhi, 56 Ind. Cas. 638 (12) and 31 Ind. Cas. 286 (sic) and several others."

We consider that there is force in these observations. Clearly private ownership of the plot is incompatible with dedication of it under a waqf as a graveyard for Muhammadans in general. In Ballabh Das v. Nur Mahomed (4), Sir George Rankin indicated the distinction by saying :

"The purpose of the suit is to establish that this plot of land is a graveyard in the sense of Muhammadan Law, that is to say extra commercium and dedicated to the benefit of Muhammadans in general in such sense that private ownership does not exist."

The appellant was not a Syed and did not purport to sue on behalf of any Syed. We consider that the appellants have made out no grounds for interference with the decision of the first Appellate Court. We dismiss the appeal with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Lahore High Court

February 22, 1940

VISCOUNT MAUGHAM, LORD PORTER AND SIR GEORGE RANKIN

RAMA SHAH—APPELLANT

LAL CHAND—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Interpretation.—Interest bearing debt—Payment of part amount on open account in handwriting of debtor—Appropriation by creditor—Amount not paid as interest "as such"—Whether should be regarded as part payment of principal—Appropriation by creditor should be before expiry of limitation—Practice—Evidence.—Party calling opponent's clerk as his witness—Practice condemned.

Section 20, Lim. Act must be construed carefully according to its terms, and effect must be given to the consideration that in order to give a fresh period of limitation interest must be paid as such though there is no similar requirement in the case of a part payment of principal. It is not reasonable as a matter of construction of a statute to suggest that the words "as such" can be ignored; or that their meaning has changed; or that they can be given their meaning but only as regards payments made before January 1, 1928. [p. 236, col. 1.]

By the amendment of s. 20 the intention of the debtor is not made the sole test whether a payment was made towards the principal of the debt. Appropriation by the creditor can have effect under the section as it now stands and the character of the payment need not necessarily be determined at the time when the payment is made. [p. 237, col. 1.]

The section cannot be read as governed by any such principle as that it must be read as proceeding upon an acknowledgment by the debtor of his liability familiar though it be in the law of England. There is no sufficient reason for the assumption that the section is an expression of any single principle. In the Lim. Act, s. 19, which deals with acknowledgments, is not to be read as based upon the theory of implied promise; and it is difficult to see why s. 20, which deals with payments, should be regarded as based upon a theory of acknowledgment. The words in s. 20 by which the matter must be judged are "where part of the principal of a debt is paid." As it is not prescribed by the section that the payment should be intended by the debtor to go towards the principal debt at all, the words "as such" having no place in this part of the section, it is not correct to require that the payment should have been made of part as part. Observations of Sulaiman, C. J., in 159 Ind. Cas. 387 (1) and 157 Ind. Cas. 259 (13), not approved, 165 Ind. Cas. 723 (12), approved. [p. 237, col. 2.]

It cannot be maintained that a payment on general account is either a payment of interest as such or a part payment of principal. The disjunction is incomplete; there are additional possibilities as well. There are indeed four possibilities as to the debtor's intention—(1) intention that the sum paid should go against interest, (2) that it should go against principal, (3) that it should go against both interest and principal, (4) no intention of appropriation as between interest and principal. This is a common enough frame of mind when a payment is made generally on account of a debt—an "open payment" as it is called. 35 Ind. Cas. 638 (14), not approved, 159 Ind. Cas. 387 (1), approved. [p. 238, col. 1.]

In the case of "open" payment the creditor's act of appropriation of the payment to the principal debt is a very different matter. It cannot have been intended by the Legislature that at the end of the prescribed period the right to sue should be barred and yet that the creditor might thereafter remove the bar at his own choice by making an appropriation. Though it need not be shown that the creditor's appropriation has within the time limited been communicated to the debtor, the language of the section cannot be regarded as satisfied unless within the prescribed period the creditor has in exercise of his right done something which treats the payment as made on account of principal. To evidence a definite appropriation to the principal debt made by the creditor within the period prescribed the manner in which the payment has been dealt with by the creditor in his own books of account will ordinarily be sufficient. But if it be true until after the expiry of the prescribed period the creditor has treated the sum as paid on account of interest or has not done anything to treat it as paid on account of principal, then under the amended s. 20 part payment of principal has not been established. The result may be regarded as unfortunate since the fresh period begins or does not begin according as the creditor has or has not taken some step in consequence of the debtor's act, whereas the essential matter is really the debtor's act, but unless either a part payment of principal is required to be made as such in order to stop the running of the statute or a payment on account of an interest bearing debt, though made generally on account, is made sufficient for that purpose there is no escape from this conclusion.

Held, on evidence that the debtor paid Rs. 100 in his own handwriting and the creditor appropriated it towards principal straightaway. This payment must be held to be part payment of principal. 172 Ind. Cas. 455; reversed. [p. 240, col. 1.]
The practice of calling as his own witness by a party the clerk of his opponent condemned. [p. 240, col. 1.]

Messrs. J. P. Eddy, K. C. and R. Ritson, for the Respondent.

Sir George Rankin.—This appeal raises questions as to the true construction and effect of s. 20 of the Indian Lim. Act (IX of 1908) as amended by the Indian Lim. Amendment Act (I of 1927). Conflicting decisions in India have made it desirable that their Lordships should construe the section, and as in the present case the High Court has differed from the trial Court on the facts, the evidence must be examined.

The plaintiff-appellant, Rama Shah is described as a banker and carries on a business at Jhelum which includes the lending of money. The defendant Lal Chand is a timber merchant of the same town who on various occasions between October 17, 1929, and July 17, 1931, took a loan from the plaintiff, giving to him a promissory note for the amount of the loan with interest at twelve per cent. per annum. Two small loans not covered by promissory notes were alleged by the plaintiff to have been made and were disputed by the defendant, but five promissory notes are admitted by the defendant and a number of substantial payments are admitted by the plaintiff to have been received in respect of them. There has, however, been considerable dispute between the parties as to the proper allocation of the payments to promissory notes. In the result, when the plaintiff on January 24, 1936, brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jhelum the suit out of which this appeal arises, he brought it as a suit for the balance due upon a promissory note for Rs. 18,500 dated February 4, 1930. He claimed that the amount outstanding for principal and interest was Rs. 11,463. The learned Subordinate Judge was satisfied as to the correctness of this figure but the High Court having reduced it to Rs. 10,334-9-3 the plaintiff by his Counsel has accepted the lower figure as the sum to be decreed if it be held that his suit succeeds.

The promissory note of February 4, 1930, being expressed to be payable on demand the period of limitation for a suit on the note was three years from its date (Art. 73) so that the plaintiff's suit of January 24, 1936, was prima facie barred. There was an endorsement, however, on the note in the writing of the defendant dated January 24, 1933, signed by him: "Paid Rs. 100 to-day in this pro-note (Sgd.) Lal Chand, Bahri, January 24, 1933." This date was within the period of three years from the date of the note but only by a few days, and the probable object of the endorsement is reasonably plain. The defendant admitted that he had made the endorsement on January 24, 1933, but denied that any money passed. Both Courts in India have disbelieved him on this point and it is not now disputed that the sum of Rs. 100 was paid as the endorsement states.

The proviso at the end of the first sub-section of s. 20 of the Lim. Act of 1908 was the subject of amendment made by Act I of 1927 and the amended sub-section stands as follows:

"20.—(1) Where interest on a debt or legacy is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy, or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, or where part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent duly authorised in this behalf, a fresh period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the payment was made.

Provided that, save in the case of a payment of interest made before January 1, 1928, an acknowledgment of the payment appears in the handwriting of, or in a writing signed by, the person making the payment."

Before 1927 the proviso read:

"Provided that in the case of part payment of the principal of a debt, the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making the same."

There is no room for the contention that the sum of Rs. 100 exceeded the amount of principal or of interest outstanding in respect of the note at the date of the payment so that part of it at least must of necessity have been intended to go towards interest or towards principal.

Applying the amended sub-section to the present case, the learned Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that the payment of Rs. 100 on January 24, 1933, was immediately appropriated by the plaintiff towards the principal of the debt, and was a part payment of principal from which a fresh period of limitation began to run. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiff (June 9, 1936). On appeal, the High Court at Lahore (Dalip Singh and Skemp, JJ.) held that the sum of Rs. 100 was never appropriated by the debtor or by the creditor either to interest or to part-payment of principal until the date of suit (January 24, 1936), or at earliest until December 18, 1935—that is, until long after three years had elapsed from the date of the note. On this view of the facts the High Court, by the decree* (April 14, 1937) now under appeal, dismissed the suit as time-barred, being of opinion that a payment made generally on account of an interest-bearing debt becomes a payment towards the principal only by appropriation thereto and must (in order to have the effect of preventing limitation) be appropriated before the period of limitation has expired. In so holding the learned Judges followed a decision of the High Court at Allahabad in Udaypal Singh v. Lakshmi Chand (1)—a Full Bench case in which two of the five members of the Full Bench had dissented. It appears that some dissent has since been expressed in the High Court at Patna (Liquidator, Bagha Co-operative Society v. Debi Mangal Prasad Sinha (2) and Bankanidhi Tantra v. Godipatna Co-operative Society (3). Khan Sahib v. Uchal Lebbay (4) is also inconsistent with the Full Bench decision.

A recent case Kesar Singh v. Wasir Singh (Civil Revision No. 559 of 1938) before the Lahore High Court in revision under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) was referred by Tek Chand, J. to a Division Bench by an order dated June 9, 1939, which has been laid before the Board. In this order the different views taken by High Courts in India as to the correctness of Udaypal's case (1) have been usefully set out, and it would appear that in some respects that decision is not consistent with certain previous decisions, and that the decision of the Lahore High Court now under appeal has not since been uniformly followed in that Court.

It will be convenient that their Lordships should state their opinion as to the effect of s. 20 in a case where the debtor has made a payment on account of an interest bearing debt without appropriating the sum paid either towards interest or principal, and where the creditor has made no appropriation until after the expiry of the period of limitation. The view taken by the dissenting Judges in Udaypal's case (1) is that as the debtor in making the payment must have meant it to go either towards interest or principal a fresh period of limitation must always begin to run if the requirement as to writing is satisfied. This view has in one or other of the cases upon the subject been defended both by regarding the words "as such" retained in the amending section, as nugatory; and also by contending that if the payment was not intended by the debtor as a payment, of interest he must have intended it as a payment on account of principal and that in any case it was a part-payment of principal, even if not of principal as such. On the other hand the view taken by Sulaiman, O. J. in Udaypal's case (1) was that where no appropriation is made by the debtor the creditor may appropriate; if he appropriates the payment towards interest it becomes a payment of interest though not paid by the debtor as such; if he appropriates it towards principal it becomes a part-payment of principal and saves limitation notwithstanding that it was not paid as such. The learned Chief Justice rejected the doctrine that the debtor's payment must be either a payment of interest as such or a part payment of principal.

So far, their Lordships are of opinion that the learned Chief Justice was in the right. When the amendment of 1927 extended the requirement of writing to the case in which interest had been paid, this amendment was carried out by altering the language of the proviso at the end of the sub-section leaving the language of its main provision to stand as before. The words "as such" had long been given a settled meaning importing the intention of the debtor that his payment should go towards interest as distinct from principal. Though the amendment raised in a pointed manner the question whether the words "as such" should be retained, it is clear that the Legislature decided to retain them; and it is not reasonable as a matter of construction of a statute to suggest that they can be ignored; or that their meaning has changed; or that they can be given their meaning but only as regards payments made before January 1, 1928. Though interest and principal are under the section on a different footing as regards the person making the payment, it is not very clear why the legislature should have hesitated to drop the words "as such" and it may well be that the difficulty could best be resolved by their omission. But the section must be construed carefully according to its terms, and effect must be given to the consideration that in order to give a fresh period of limitation interest must be paid as such though there is no similar requirement in the case of a part-payment of principal.

In Firm Rai Bahadur Het Ram Bcdh Raj v. Firm Seth Aya Ram-Tola Ram (5) the Board had to consider a case in which a judgment debt was by certain terms of compromise payable by instalments. The first instalment was to have been paid on January 27, 1929, and was to be Rs. 13,000 with a year's interest to that date—that is from January 27, 1928, to January 26, 1929. It was stated by Lord Russell of Killowen delivering the judgment of the Board:

"The last payment made in respect of the first instalment and interest was a sum of Rs. 825 paid as admitted by the parties on February 15, 1929. The payment was made, and necessarily made, in respect of principal and interest; it was therefore a payment of interest on a debt as such by the person liable to pay the debt. Further, in a letter addressed to the decree-holders, and signed by Both Raj, he says, referring to the Rs. 825, 'Deduct from this the amount that is due to you for my first instalment according to accounts and keep the rest in my name Send me a formal receipt of the amount of the first instalment together with interest by registered post.' These facts are sufficient to show that a 20 has come into play, and that accordingly the period of limitation must be computed from February 15, 1929."

This was a decision under the amended section and it shows that the words "as such" have lost nothing of their previous meaning which involves that the intention of the debtor must be shown to have been that the payment should go towards interest. The case also shows, however, that the intention of the debtor may be proved not only by statements made by him at the time of payment but in any other manner and may clearly appear from the circumstances of the case. This doctrine had been settled law in India under the un-amended section—see Gopinath Singh v. Hardeo Singh (6), Charu Chandra Bhat-tacharjee v. Karam Bux Sikdar (7). Even when the requirement as to writing is satisfied it is still insufficient to give rise to a fresh period of limitation that the debtor has made the payment generally on account and that the creditor has appropriated it to interest. Nor in the absence of an intention on the part of the debtor does a payment amount to a payment of interest as such by reason of the rule that it is the right of a creditor to have payments treated in account as liquidating the interest before the principal—the "old rule" recognised by the Board in Venkatadri Appa Row v. Parthasarathi Appa Row (8), citing Rigby, L. J., in Parr's Banking

Co. v. Yates (9). The rule was stated with precision by Lord Macmillan Income-tax Commissioner v. Maharajadhiraja of Dharmabanga (10); in the following terms :

"Where interest is outstanding on a principal sum due and the creditor receives an open payment from the debtor without any appropriation of the payment as between capital and interest by either debtor or creditor, the presumption is that the payment is attributable in the first instance towards the outstanding interest."

On the other hand, it remains true that the section when dealing with part payment of principal contains no similar stipulation as to the debtor's intention. The words "as such" are not repeated and the contrast between the two classes of payments is too marked to be mistaken or overlooked. Of course a payment may be shown to have been intended by the debtor to go—in part at least—towards the reduction of the principal debt by direct proof or e. g., by the fact that the amount of the payment exceeded the interest then due. But the intention of the debtor is not made the sole test whether a payment was made towards the principal of the debt. In re Ambrose Summers (11), was a case where the debtor had sent to his bank a cheque for Rs. 600 to be placed to the credit of his loan account, and the bank had thereafter charged interest on the principal sum less Rs. 600. Sale, J., held that this operated in fact as a part payment of the principal debt. In numerous cases it has been held that a payment made without appropriation by the debtor will if it be appropriated by the creditor towards the principal debt be sufficient to give rise to a fresh period of limitation.

Their Lordships cannot accept the contention of learned Counsel for the respondent that appropriation by the creditor can have no effect under the section as it now stands or that the character of the payment must necessarily be determined at the time when the payment is made. Stress was laid on the change in the proviso from "the fact of the payment appears" to "an acknowledgement of the payment appears," but neither expression affords in their Lordships' opinion any ground for holding that the character of the payment as intended to go towards interest or towards principal, must appear by the writing, still less that it must be ascertainable or ascertained at the date of the payment.

In Udaypal's case (1) Sulaiman, C. J., lent the weight of his authority to the view that the section must be read as proceeding upon an acknowledgment by the debtor of his liability though the learned Chief Justice agreed that the section is not professedly based upon any such principle. Accordingly he put the case of a payment insufficient to discharge the debt in full but made upon the footing that no more was due, and he expressed the opinion that such a payment would not be within the section. Their Lordships cannot agree that the section is to be read as governed by any such principle as is suggested familiar though it be in the law of England. They can discover no sufficient reason for the assumption that the section is an expression of any single principle. In English Law effect was first given to acknowledgments and payments by reason of general principles of exception applied by the Courts to the Statute of Limitation (1623) which did not contain express exceptions in these respects, and though the exceptions were in the end made statutory they retained much of their original character. In the Indian Lim. Act, s. 19, which deals with acknowledgments, is not to be read as based upon the theory of implied promise; and it is difficult to see why s. 20, which deals with payments, should be regarded as based upon a theory of acknowledgment. The Indian Legislature may well have thought that a payment if made on account of the debt and evidenced by writing gave the creditor some excuse for further delay in suing, or was sufficient new proof of the original debt to make it safe to entertain an action upon it at a later date than would otherwise have been desirable. The words in s. 20 by which the matter must be judged are "where part of the principal of a debt is paid." As it is not prescribed by the section that the payment should be intended by the debtor to go towards the principal debt at all, the words "as such" having no place in this part of the section, it is not in their Lordships' view correct to require that the payment should have been made of part as part. On this point the view taken in Municipal Committee, Amrit- sar v. Ralia Ram (12), is, to be preferred to the view taken in N. A. M. Appasami Pillai v. Morangam Muthirian (13), which applied the English decisions.

The main contention of the learned Judges who were in the minority in Udaypal's case (1) and of others who dissent from that decision is that if a payment be made by a debtor without allocating it to principal or to interest it can correctly be regarded as a part payment of principal by reason of the mere fact that it was not made on account of interest as such. In cases decided before 1927 there is some trace of the opinion that where the requirement of writing was satisfied it mattered nothing whether the payment was for interest as such, since if not it was a part payment of principal. This appears to have been the view of Fletcher, J., in Hem Chandra Biswas v. Purna Chandra Mukherji (14). Their Lordships agree with the majority of the Full Bench in Udaypal's case (1), in rejecting the attempt to maintain that a payment on general account is either a payment of interest as such or a part-payment of principal. The disjunction is incomplete: as Sulaiman, O. J., put it "there are additional possibilities as well" (p. 273*). There are indeed four possibilities as to the debtor's intention—(1) intention that the sum paid should go against interest, (2) that it should go against principal, (3) that it should go against both interest and principal, (4) no intention of appropriation as between interest and principal. This is a common enough frame of mind when a payment is made generally on account of a debt—an "open payment" as it was called by Lord Macmillan in a passage already cited in this judgment.

The facts of Udaypal's case (1), were that the payment was made by the debtor without any appropriation as between principal and interest; it was appropriated by the creditor to interest; and the suit was brought to recover the whole of the principal debt with certain further interest. In these circumstances it appears to their Lordships that it was rightly held by the Full Bench that the payment was neither a payment of interest as such nor a part-payment of the principal debt. It is no answer to say that the part-payment of principal need not be made as such: on these facts there was no payment of principal at all.

The subject of "appropriation of payments" is dealt with in the Indian Contract Act by ss. 59 to 61 inclusive. Section 60 provides that when the debtor has omitted to intimate and there are no other circumstances indicating to which debt the payment is to be applied the creditor may apply it at his discretion to any lawful debt actually due and payable to him from the debtor. This is the same rule as that laid down as English Law by the House of Lords in Cory Brothers & Co. v. Owners of Turkish Steamship "Mecca" (15), and under it the creditor has a right to appropriate a payment by the debtor to the principal or to the interest of the same debt. There is no obligation upon the creditor to make the appropriation at once (Income-tax Commissioner v. Maharajahdiraja of Dharbhanga (10), (supra), 146, 162*, Kunjamohan Shaha Poddar v. Karunakanta Sen Chaudhuri (16), though when once he has made an appropriation and communicated it to the debtor he would have no right to appropriate it otherwise (cf. per Lord Herschell, in Cory's case (15) supra at p. 292†). Lord Macnaghten's language in that case is equally applicable under ss. 60 and 61 of the Indian Contract Act—"Where the election is with the creditor it is always his intention expressed or implied or presumed, and not any rigid rule of law that governs the application of the money" (p. 294†).

What then in the case of an "open" payment is required in order that it may be said in the words of s. 20 that before the expiration of the prescribed period part of the principal of the debt has been paid by the debtor? Learned Counsel for the appellant pointed to the decisions whereby it has been held that the writing in which appears an acknowledgment of the payment (before 1928, the fact of the payment) need not have come into existence within the prescribed period though the payment itself has to be made within the period and the fresh period of limitation begins to run from the date of the payment. He contended that a similar principle should be applied to the creditor's act of appropriation and that so long as the payment was made within time the appropriation towards the principal debt might be made at any subsequent time and would give rise to a fresh period computed from the date of payment. Learned Counsel conceded that in no case had this yet been held and it was forcefully maintained for the respondent that it is impossible, after the prescribed period has run out, to regard anything done by the creditor without even the debtor's consent as effective to extend the time. Their Lordships, while not throwing doubt on the principle that the writing evidencing the payment may come into existence at any time, are of opinion that the creditor's act of appropriation of the payment to the principal debt is a very different matter. It cannot, they think, have been intended by the Legislature that at the end of the prescribed period the right to sue should be barred and yet that the creditor might thereafter remove the bar at his own choice by making an appropriation. While not of opinion that it need be shown that the creditor's appropriation has within the time limited been communicated to the debtor, they are unable to regard the language of the section as satisfied unless within the prescribed period the creditor has in exercise of his right done something which treats the payment as made on account of principal. To evidence a definite appropriation to the principal debt made by the creditor within the period prescribed the manner in which the payment has been dealt with by the creditor in his own books of account will ordinarily be sufficient. But if it be true that until after the expiry of the prescribed period the creditor has treated the sum as paid on account of interest or has not done anything to treat it as paid on account of principal, then under the amended s. 20 part-payment of principal has not been established. The result may be regarded as unfortunate since the fresh period begins or does not begin according as the creditor has or has not taken some step in consequence of the debtor's act, whereas the essential matter is really the debtor's act, but unless either a part-payment of principal is required to be made as such in order to stop the running of the statute or a payment on account of an interest-bearing debt, though made generally on account, is made sufficient for that purpose there is no escape from this conclusion.

It remains to consider what happened in the present case when the defendant on January 24, 1933, paid Rs. 100 to the plaintiff in respect of the promissory note of February 4, 1930. The main contest at the trial was upon the question whether any money was paid. The defendant's denial in the witness-box has been held by both Courts in India to be untrue. He did not produce his ledger at all. The plaintiff at the first hearing (O. XIII, r. 1, Civil P. C.) produced an account sent by him to the defendant on December 18, 1935, shortly before suit. He also produced his books of account from 1929 to 1936 containing the account of the defendant in the ledger as well as a rough cash book and cash book (kachi and pukki rokar). That the defendant had full opportunity to inspect and examine these appears from the cross-examination on behalf of the defendant. That the trial Judge closely examined them appears from his judgment. In one passage he says "the plaintiff's kachi rokar is silent as to this payment but pukki rokar and ledger have got the entry" and at the end he says "I am not satisfied with plaintiff's method of keeping his kachi rokar in which admittedly there are blank spaces here and there... But inasmuch as the plaintiff's case is proved otherwise as also by production of pukki rokar and the ledger where (whose) entries are further strengthened by defendant's withholding of his books I would allow plaintiff a decree. But as a matter of punishment to plaintiff for keeping a perfunctory kachi rokar I would allow him only half costs." At the trial each party followed the practice (still common in certain parts of India notwithstanding repeated condemnation by the Courts and by this Board) of calling as his own witness the clerk of his opponent. The defendant's clerk was called by the plaintiff to prove receipt of a certain sum of Rs. 200, but in cross-examination on behalf of his master he produced his cash book which contained no entry of the payment of Rs. 100 on January 24, 1933, and stated (falsely as it must now be taken) that the promissory note was endorsed in his presence without any payment having been made. The plaintiff's Munib Godar Mall, called by the defendant said that the account dated December 18, 1935, was copied by him correctly from the plaintiff's ledger, that

"our kachi and pukki rokars, are regular." The plaintiff also deposed that "our bahis are regularly kept" and spoke to the payment of Rs. 100 and to a number of other matters of account. He explained that in his books there was only one ledger account of the defendant. The account dated December 18, 1935 (Ex. D-1 is the Hindi original) is made out on what is called the katauti principle—that is to say, interest is calculated on both sides of the account at the same rate so that to any sum paid by the defendant is added interest thereon before deduction is made from the total sum shown to be due for the principal and interest upon each loan. In the plaint it was incidentally alleged that "deduction of interest at katauti rate" entered into the account in respect of this promissory note. At the trial specific questions addressed to the appropriation of the sum of Rs. 100 do not appear to have been asked of any witness, the contest being upon the fact of payment; but when the evidence was closed much argument was expended upon the question whether the writing was an acknowledgment of part-payment of principal. The learned Subordinate Judge rightly directed himself that the plaintiff had to prove that he appropriated the sum towards the principal debt before the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit on the promissory note. He held that the account of December 18, 1935, sent to the defendant showed that the plaintiff had given credit for the sum as against the principal sum and that had the defendant not intended this to happen he would have protested at once. "In the present case the defendant pays Rs. 100 in his own handwriting and the plaintiff appropriates it towards principal straightaway. This payment in my opinion, must be held to be part-payment of principal." The learned Judges of the High Court have reversed this finding of fact mainly on the ground that they were not prepared to hold that the account dated December 18, 1935, and the evidence of the plaintiff's munib proved that in the plaintiff's ledger the sum of Rs. 100 had been treated as a part-payment of principal. They appear to agree that the account was drawn up from items entered in the ledger but not that it was a copy of the defendant's account, holding that it was merely prepared for the purposes of the suit. They considered that this view was fortified by the last entry in the account which was out of its proper order according to date. The plaintiff's books, notwithstanding that he produced them, deposed to their regularity, and was cross-examined on their details, were in the High Court treated as though they could only be guessed at on the basis of the account of December 18, 1935, and the plaint of January 1934. The High Court might have been saved from taking this course had the trial Judge been careful to mark the plaintiff's books and all the entries referred to at the trial either as exhibits or for identification. But with all respect to the learned Judges, their Lordships think that the course adopted in the High Court was unduly hard upon the plaintiff, more particularly as the trial Judge had gone very fully into the plaintiff's books and the question was not merely a question as to one item but as to the character of the account of the defendant in the books of the plaintiff—whether it was kept on the katauti method. Upon this, the refusal of the defendant to produce any relevant book of account kept by himself, save and except an untrue cash book, and the High Court's finding that the Rs. 100 were paid, made the burden on the plaintiff light and their Lordships are unable to hold that there was sufficient reason for reversing the finding of the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and the decree of the High Court at Lahore dated April 14, 1937, set aside; that the decree of the Subordinate Judge at Jhelum dated June 9, 1934, be restored with the variation that instead of the sum of Rs. 11,463-8-0 therein mentioned the sum of Rs. 10,334-9-3 be substituted. The respondent must likewise pay the plaintiff's costs in the High Court and of this appeal.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 68—Sale conducted by Official Receiver—Insolvent, if can appeal under s. 68 to set it aside.

On the wording of s. 68 of the Prov. Insol. Act, the insolvent has clearly a right to appeal to the Insolvency Judge against the act of the Receiver to set aside the sale by him of property. 136 Ind. Cas. 267 (2), relied on:

[Case-law distinguished].

O. R. from an order of the Additional District Judge, Ferozepore, dated August 2, 1938.

Mr. Charan Singh, for the Petitioner.

Mr. R. P. Khosla, for the Respondents (Insolvent).

Order.—On October 29, 1936, Nidhan Singh, respondent No. 2, was adjudicated insolvent on his own application. The Official Receiver duly took possession of his property and on June 9, 1937, he sold by public auction three parcels of agricultural land to Kunda Singh (petitioner) Sada Ram and Ram Lal, respectively. Within 21 days from this date the insolvent "appealed" to the Insolvency Court under s. 68, Prov. Insol. Act, alleging that the sales had not been properly proclaimed or conducted and that the price realized was much below their real value. The auction-purchasers opposed these "appeals" on two grounds, firstly, that the insolvent was not competent to apply to the Court under s. 68 for reversal of the sales conducted by the Official Receiver. Secondly, they urged that the sales had been properly and fairly conducted and the price realized was much above the insolvent's own estimate as given in his petition for insolvency. The Insolvency Judge sustained the first objection and held that the insolvent had no locus standi to "appeal" under s. 68 to set aside the sales. He then proceeded to examine the insolvent's objections on the merits and, after reviewing the evidence, found that the sales had not been properly conducted. In view of his finding on the first point however he dismissed the "appeal". From this order the insolvent, Nidhan Singh, appealed to the Additional District Judge, who affirmed the finding of the Insolvency Judge that the sales had not been properly and fairly conducted. He however held that the insolvent was competent to "appeal" to the Insolvency Court under s. 68 of the Act. In the result, the learned Judge accepted the insolvent's appeal and set aside the sales in question. One of the auction-purchasers, Kunda Singh, has come in revision and it has been urged on his behalf that the decision of the learned District Judge is incorrect on both points.

Before considering the provisions of s. 68 and the rulings cited by Counsel for the parties, I think it necessary to say that the Single Bench ruling of this Court, Ramchand v. Mohra Shah Attarchand (1), relied upon by the learned District Judge has no bearing on the point involved in this case. In that case no question of the interpretation of s. 68, Prov. Insol. Act, arose, nor was any reference made to that section in the judgment. The sale had not been conducted by the Receiver but under the direct orders of the District Judge himself. Objections to the sale had been filed before the District Judge and were rejected by him. From this order of the District Judge, the insolvent had appealed under s. 75 to the High Court and the question was whether he was competent to appeal to this Court and this question was answered in the affirmative. In that case, certain decisions under s. 46 of Act III of 1907 and s. 8 (2), Presidency Towns Act, were distinguished, as their wording was different from that of s. 75 of Act V of 1920. That ruling therefore has no bearing on the point involved in this case. I consider however that the final order of the learned District Judge on this point is otherwise correct. Section 68, Prov. Insol. Act of 1920, which provides for "appeals" to the Court against the acts or decisions of the Receiver, reads as follows:

"If the insolvent or any of the creditors or any other person is aggrieved by any act or decision of the Receiver, he may apply to the Court and the Court may confirm, reverse or modify the act or decision complained of and make such order as it thinks just.

Provided that no application under this section shall be entertained after the expiration of twenty-one days from the date of the act or decision complained of."

It will be seen that the insolvent is one of the persons specifically mentioned in the section as entitled to "appeal" to the Court, if he is "aggrieved" by the act or decision of the Receiver complained of. The only decision of this Court which is directly in point is Shakar Khan v. Sanmukh Singh (2). In that case, Broadway, J. pointed out that the Receiver is an officer of the Court, whose acts are subject to the control of the Insolvency Court. He then held that s. 68 empowered the insolvent, when aggrieved by any act of the Receiver, to move the Court, and on being so moved, the Court was bound to examine the proceedings and decide whether the act of the Receiver should be upheld or not; the insolvent must however take action within the period prescribed by the section which lays down that no application under this section shall be entertained after the expiry of 21 days from the date of the act or decision complained of.

The learned Counsel for the petitioner cited three Single Bench decisions of this Court, Bhagwandas v. Amritsar National Bank (3), Muni Lal v. Bari Doab Bank Ltd., Hoshiarpore (4), and Asa Nand v. Jugal Kishore (5). None of these cases however has any bearing on the point. In the first two, it was held that when a judgment-debtor had been adjudicated an insolvent during the pendency of the execution proceedings, he had no right to appeal against the order of the executing Court confirming the sale of the property sold in execution of the decree. In neither case was the act or decision of the Receiver questioned and no question of "appeal" under s. 68, Insol. Act, arose. The third case, also, was on a different point altogether. There, property, which had been mortgaged before adjudication, was sold by the Receiver without reservation of the mortgagee rights. It was held that the proper person to object to the sale was not the insolvent but the mortgagee, who was the only person affected by the sale. Counsel also referred to Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan (6), and Hari Rao v. Official Assignee, Madras (7), which had been relied upon by the Insolvency Judge. In the Madras case the objection by the insolvent against the sale of his property by the Official Assignee had been entertained by the Insolvency Judge, but rejected by him on the merits. From this order of the Insolvency Judge the insolvent appealed under s. 8 (2), Presi. Towns Insol. Act, and it was held that he (insolvent) was not competent to do so. The wording of that section is materially different from that of s. 68, Prov. Insol. Act. In the latter Act, it is specifically provided that if the insolvent, any of the creditors, or other person is aggrieved by an act or decision of the Receiver, he may "appeal" to the Court. In s. 8 (2), Presi. Towns Insol. Act, however no such right is given to the insolvent. The case is therefore distinguishable. In Sakhawat Ali v. Radha Mohan (6), also, the real question was whether an appeal by the insolvent lay to the High Court under s. 46 of Act III of 1907 from the order of the Insolvency Judge rejecting an application by the insolvent against a sale by the Receiver, and the question was answered in the negative. In s. 46 of Act III of 1907, too, no right of appeal from the order of the Insolvency Judge was expressly given to the insolvent, as it has been given in s. 75 of Act V of 1920. That section was worded exactly like s. 8 (2), Presi. Towns Insol. Act. This case also is therefore distinguishable. There are, no doubt, certain observations by the learned Judges with regard to the meaning of the expression "person aggrieved," which are really in the nature of obiter dictum, based on reasons in certain English cases. I do not consider it necessary to discuss here those dicta, though I may say with great respect, that there are remarks to the contrary in other English cases, which do not appear to have been considered: see e. g. Ex parte Official Receiver; In re Reed Bowen & Co. (8), and In re Lamb (9). It is however not necessary to pursue the matter further as, in my opinion, on the wording of s. 68 of Act V of 1920, the insolvent had clearly a right to appeal to the Insolvency Judge against the act of the Receiver, in this case. I hold that the decision of the learned District Judge on the first point is correct.

Counsel for the petitioner next attacked the finding that the sale had not been properly conducted. On this point however both the Courts below have concurrently found against the petitioner, and I do not find any adequate ground for going behind Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (e)—Final mortgage decree, assignment of, if compulsorily registrable—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 100, 59—Charge, how created.

When a final mortgage decree has been passed the document declaring the mortgagee's rights in the mortgaged property is the decree, itself and not the mortgage deed. The decree gives the mortgagee something more than the deed. It finally establishes the mortgagee's right to have the property sold and directs that it be sold. A mortgage-decree must therefore be regarded as immovable property and its assignment falls under s. 17 (1) (e), Reg. Act, and must be regarded as compulsorily registrable on the footing, that such a decree represents an interest in immovable property. [p. 244, cols. 1 & 2; p. 247, col. 1.]

[Case-law reviewed.]

The words "so far as may be" in s. 100, T. P. Act, have not the effect of taking s. 59 out of the purview of s. 100. Unless given by statute, a charge on immovable property can only be created by a registered instrument, executed by the person creating the charge and attested by at least two witnesses. The mere fact that the parties regarded the properties mentioned in the deed as being subject to a charge would not, by reason of the provisions of ss. 59 and 100 operate to create a charge in law. 183 Ind. Cas 639 (8), relied on. [p. 244, col. 2.]

A. from the judgment and order of Mr. Justice Gentle, dated September 9, 1938.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao and K. Vittal Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. Thyagarajan for Mr. S. V. Shenoi and Mr. K. R. Sheoni, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The appellants appeal against an order refusing to recognize them as secured creditors of the Lakshmi Forest Co. Ltd., which is now under liquidation under an order for compulsory winding up. On September 3, 1932, by a registered deed the appellants conveyed to the Company certain lands in the village of Shedimane, South Kanara District and assigned the benefit of a mortgage-decree which they had obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara. The consideration was Rs. 80,000, payable in instalments. The deed purported to charge both the immovable property and the mortgage-decree for the due payment of the balance of the consideration. It was also provided that the vendors should remit a sum of Rs. 10,000 if the Company should pay the balance falling due before April 1, 1933, with interest from June 30, 1932. The right to rank as secured creditors was challenged by the liquidator, and the appellants took out a Judge's summons for a declaration that under the general law and also under the provisions of the deed they were secured creditors in respect of the moneys remaining due to them under the deed. The deed had not been registered in accordance with the provisions of s. 109, Companies Act, 1913, and was therefore clearly void against the liquidator and any creditor of the Company if put forward as embodying a charge. The appellants however claimed that they were entitled to rank as secured creditors by reason of the lien given to an unpaid vendor by s. 55 (4), T. P. Act. This claim was disallowed by Gentle, J. The learned Judge held that they were not entitled to the statutory lien because the deed of conveyance contained a contract contrary to the provisions of s. 55 (4) in that it created without any allocation a charge on both movable and immovable property and under the section the appellants could only claim a lien in respect of immovable property. The appellants challenge the decision of the learned Judge on three grounds. In the first place it is said that the mortgage-decree is not movable property, but immovable property. Secondly it is said that the conveyance did not in law effect any charge. In the third place it is said that even if the decree be regarded as movable property the appellants are entitled to a lien as equity had extended the principle of the vendor's lien to movable property of this description.

Before the amendment of s. 17, Reg. Act, there was a conflict of opinion whether a mortgage-decree could be regarded as movable or immovable property. In Gopal Narain v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1), the Bombay High Court held that the assignment of a mortgage-decree required registration. The Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts expressed opinions to the contrary:

(1) 1 B 267.

see Gous. Mohāmmad v. Khawas Ali Khan (2), Baijnath Lohea v. Vinoyendra Nath Palit (3), Ram Ratan v. Jogesh Chandra (4), Abdul Majid v. Mohammad Faizullah (5), Ahmad Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (6) and Mumtaz Ahmad v. Sri Ram (7). This controversy has been decided in favour of the Bombay view by the addition made to the provisions of s. 17, Reg. Act, by s. 10, T. P. (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, which came into force on April 1, 1930. That Act added cl. (e) to sub-s. (1) of s. 17, Reg. Act. The clause reads as follows:

"Non-testimentary instruments transferring or assigning any decree, order of a Court or any award when such decree or order or award purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immovable property."

The wording here follows that used in cl. (b). It has been argued by Mr. Thyagarajan on behalf of respondent No. 2 that the Court is not justified in regarding a mortgage-decree as immovable property by reason of the addition of cl. (e) to the section. He says that there has been no amendment of the definition of immovable property to be found in s. 3 (25), General Clauses Act, and in s. 2 (6), Reg. Act, and the considerations which weighed with the Calcutta and the Allahabad High Courts still apply. As I have already indicated, I am unable to accept the argument. By virtue of the amendment of s. 17, Reg. Act, an assignment of a mortgage-decree is placed in the same category as instruments falling within cl. (b), and admittedly such instruments must be regarded as immovable property. When a final mortgage-decree has been passed the document declaring the mortgagee's rights in the mortgaged property is the decree itself and not the mortgage-deed. The decree gives the mortgagee something more than the deed. It finally establishes the mortgagee's right to have the property sold and directs that it be sold. The Civil P. O., contains a form for the drawing up of a final mortgage-decree and unless the Legislature regarded the decree to be drawn up in accordance with such form as operating to declare the mortgagee's rights in the mortgaged property the amendment of the section would be idle. For the reasons indicated I hold that a mortgage-decree must be regarded as immovable property.

I am also unable to share the opinion of the learned Judge that the conveyance of September 3, 1932 created a charge, either as regards the lands or as regards the mortgage-decree. Section 59, T. P. Act, requires a mortgage-deed to be signed by the mortgagor, attested by at least two witnesses, and registered. Section 100 provides that where immovable property of one person is by act of parties or operation of law made security for the payment of money to another and the transaction does not amount to a mortgage the latter person is said to have a charge on the property and all the provisions "hereinbefore contained which apply to a simple mortgage shall, so far as may be apply to such charge." In Viswanadhan v. M. S. Menon (8), a Bench of which I was a member, held that the words "so far as may be" had not the effect of taking s. 59 out of the purview of s. 100. Unless given by statute a charge on immovable property can only be created by a registered instrument, executed by the person creating the charge and attested by at least two witnesses. In the present case the Company was not a party to the deed of conveyance and as it has not created a charge by another instrument there is in law no charge at all. The mere fact that the parties regarded the properties mentioned in the deed as being subject to a charge would not, by reason of the provisions of ss. 59 and 100 operate to create a charge in law. In these circumstances it cannot, in my opinion, be said that the parties had entered into a contract which deprived the appellants of the lien under s. 55 (4), T. P. Act.

The appellants' contention that equity has extended the principle of the vendor's lien to movable property of certain descriptions is based on the judgments in Mycock v. Beaton (9), Collins v. Collins (10), In re Albert Life Assurance Co; Ex parte Western Life Assurance Co. Society (11), Davies v. Thomas (12) and In re Stucley;

Stucley v. Kekewich (13), but holding, as I do, that a mortgage decree drawn up in the ordinary form must now be regarded as immovable property and that the deed of September 3, 1932 did not operate to deprive the appellants of their statutory lien under s. 55 (4), T. P. Act, it is not necessary to consider whether this argument is well-founded, and if well-founded the principle could be applied in India having regard to the provisions of the Sale of Goods Act. The appeal succeeds on the first two points and consequently there will be a declaration in favour of the appellants that they are entitled to a charge on the property conveyed for the balance of the purchase money. The appellants are also entitled to their costs, which will be paid out of the assets of the Company. The Court has been informed that in other proceedings a creditor is claiming priority over the appellants, but this matter is not now before us and therefore cannot be inquired into. To avoid any misunderstanding, I will however add that our decision is entirely without prejudice to any claim to priority.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—The main question argued in this appeal is whether a final decree for sale obtained in a suit brought to enforce a simple mortgage of immovable property is to be regarded as immovable property for the purposes of Chap. III, T. P. Act, relating to sale of immovable property. The facts giving rise to the question have been fully set out in the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them here. The T. P. Act, does not define the term 'immovable property' except negatively by excluding standing timber, growing crops and grass. The General Clauses Act (X of 1897) contains a definition in s. 3 (25) which is applicable to the T. P. Act. There is also a definition in s. 2 (6), Reg. Act, for the purposes of that Act. According to both these definitions so far as they are material to the present discussion, immovable property includes lands and benefits to arise out of land. We then have the definition of 'mortgage' in s. 58, T. P. Act, as the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property for the purpose of securing payment of money advanced, etc. This interest in the case of a simple mortgage consists of course in the right to bring the mortgaged property to sale for the realization of the debt. A simple mortgage has thus a dual character. It is a debt with a right to be recouped from the sale proceeds of specific immovable property.

Now, it has been held in this Court, having regard to these definitions that a debt secured by hypothecation of land is immovable property for the purposes of ss. 54, 55 (2) and 123, T. P. Act. See Official Receiver, Trichinopoly v. Lakshman Iyer (14), Balagurumurthi Chetti v. Ramakrishna Chetti (15) and Perumal Ammal v. Perumal Naicker (16) and this position appears to have been accepted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent decision in Fanny Skinner v. Bank of Upper India Ltd., (17), where it was held that an assignment of a simple mortgage was of no effect as a transfer of the security by reason of non-registration. But the question in what category a final decree for sale obtained on a simple mortgage has to be placed has not been the subject of decision in this Court, though there are conflicting decisions on the point in some of the other High Courts in India. Before referring to these decisions which are not however binding on this Court though, of course, they are entitled to great weight, it is desirable, in my opinion, to consider the question on principle. Prima facie, if a simple mortgage is to be treated as an interest in land or as a benefit arising out of land and thus coming within the definition of immovable property, there seems to be no valid reason why a decree directing the enforcement of such mortgage should be regarded anytheless as immovable property. Before the decree, the mortgagee had the right to bring the mortgaged property to sale through Court for the payment of his debt, or he could give up the security and sue for mere recovery of the debt. After the decree however he can no longer seek to recover the debt apart from realizing the security and, unless the security proves insufficient on actual realization, his only right having regard to the provisions of the Civil P. C. in that behalf, is to bring the mortgaged property to sale in execution of the decree. Thus, the decree does not in any way affect the mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property which still remains in him in full force, and indeed his remedy is now confined to a realization of that interest, the mortgage debt being, to that extent, deprived of its dual character. It is thus clear that the decree only marks a stage in the process of realizing the security and the only change effected by it in the position of the mortgagee is to effectuate the benefit arising to him out of the land, the subject of the mortgage, by bringing it one step—and that an important step—nearer realization. It is therefore difficult to see on principle why a final decree for sale should be relegated to a different category of property from the mortgage itself on which it is based.

Turning now to the decided cases, we find that the High Courts at Bombay, Allahabad and Calcutta have had occasion to consider this point. The earliest case in Bombay is Harigovind Joshi v Ramachandra Pandurang (18), where speaking of a Court sale of a mortgage decree, the learned Judges observed that what was purchased "was not a mere paper on which the decree was written but the interest in immovable property which was recoverable under that decree and such interest must be regarded as immovable property within the meaning of s. 259, Civil P. C.

In a later case in Gopal Narain v. Trimbak Sadashiv (1), the same view was taken and it was held that an assignment of a mortgage decree was compulsorily registrable. The Calcutta High Court in the earlier case Kooblal Chowdhury v. Nittyanand Singh (19), held that an unregistered deed of assignment of a mortgage decree was defective so far as it related to the mortgage lien on the property. In a later case, Gous Mohammad v. Khawas Ali Khan (2), however that Court adopted the view that s. 17 (b), Reg. Act, does not apply to a deed of assignment of a mortgage decree as it could not be said to be immovable property within the definition contained in that Act. There is no reference to the earlier decision of the same Court and the learned Judges do not refer to the definition of a mortgage in s. 58, T. P. Act, as involving the transfer of an interest in specific immovable property. In a still later decision reported in Bajinath Lohea v. Binoyendra Nath Palit (3), the question arose whether a mortgage decree was immovable property for the purpose of O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C., when a Court sale of such a decree was sought to be set aside under that provision.

In this case, the definition of immovable property in the General Clauses Act was referred to, and it was held that a mortgage decree did not come within that definition. Here again the earlier decision of the same Court in Kooblal Chowdhury v. Nittyanand Singh (19), was not referred to. In the Allahabad High Court the treatment of the subject followed more or less the same course. In the earliest case in Bhawani Koer v. Gulab Rai (20) the question arose whether the sale of a mortgage decree was a sale of movable property within the meaning of s. 252, Civil P. C., which provided that no irregularity in the sale of movable property under an execution shall vitiate the sale and it was held to be a sale of an interest in immovable property. In Abdul Majid v. Mohammad Faizullah (5), however the Court held that a deed of assignment of a mortgage decree did not come within the mischief of s. 49, Reg. Act, as it could not be regarded as immovable property. In the two later cases in Ahmad Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (6), and Mumtaz Ahmad v. Sri Ram (7), the decision in Abdul Majid v. Mohammad Faizullah (5) was followed. In none of these cases was any reference made to the earlier decision of the same Court in Bhawani Koer v. Gulab Rai (20).

In this state of the authorities, the Legislature added cl. (e) to s. 17 (1), Reg. Act, by s. 10, T. P. (Amendment) Supplementary Act, 1929, thereby making compulsorily registrable instruments transferring or assigning any decree or order of Court when such decree or order purports or operates to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish any right, title or interest of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards to or in immovable property. It is clear to my mind that the object of this amendment was to affirm the Bombay view and supersede the Calcutta and Allahabad decisions referred to above holding the contrary. It is however urged that this newly added clause would not apply to mortgage decrees as the words, "purports or operates to create, declare etc." must, in view of the Privy Council decision in Bhageshwari Charan Singh v. Jagarnath Kueri, (21) be construed to mean, "in itself purports or operates to create, declare etc." whereas a mortgage decree merely declares a pre-existing right, i. e., the mortgage right of the decree-holder. I think that this argument proceeds on a misapprehension of their Lordships' decision in the case referred to above. The distinction which their Lordships had in mind is the one between a mere recital of title as a fact and some thing which in itself creates a title. A reference to the passage from the judgment of West, J. in Sakharam Krishnaji v. Madan Krishnaji, (22) which their Lordships quote with approval would make their meaning still more clear. The learned Judge there says:

"There (i. e., in s. 17) 'declare' is placed along with 'create, assign, limit or extinguish a right, title or interest' and these words imply a definite change of legal relation to the property by an expression of will embodied in the document referred to. I think this is equally the case with the word 'declare'. It implies a declaration of will; not a mere statement of fact."

A mortgage decree does not merely recite the pre-existing mortgage right. By its own force, it declares, even if it does not create, the decree-holder's right to have the property sold through the machinery of the Court for the realization of his debt without any further impediment. It embodies the expression of the Court's will that a definite change of the legal relation of the mortgagor to the property should forthwith be brought about by the property being sold in satisfaction of the decree. It seems to me, therefore, idle to contend that a decree stands on the same footing as a document containing merely a recital of an existing right. In one sense, no doubt, a decree or order of Court does not ordinarily bring into existence any right which did not already vest in one of the parties litigant; and to insist that it should do so in order to come within cl. (e) of s. 17 would be to render that provision almost nugatory. The assignment of a mortgage decree thus falls within s. 17 (1) (e), and must now be regarded as compulsorily registrable on the footing, clearly, that such a decree represents an interest in immovable property. It follows that much of the reasoning underlying the decisions of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts holding that a mortgage decree cannot be regarded as immovable property falls to the ground and I cannot, therefore, regard them useful precedents on the question now under consideration.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that a final decree for sale on a simple mortgage must be regarded as immovable property for the purposes of Chap. III, T. P. Act. On the other questions argued at the Bar, I agree in the conclusions of my Lord and have nothing material to add.

C. P. Tenancy Act (IX of 1898), s. 89—Surrender—Surrender by person of his tenant-right though not in possession of holding—Validity.

The surrender of a holding properly understood signifies the relinquishment of the tenant-right in favour of the landlord as affecting the parcel of land which is the subject-matter of the contract of tenancy. Surrender signifies the merger of the tenant-right in the proprietary right so as to convert the tenancy holding into the landlord's khudkasht. The tenant-right which means the right to cultivate the land is distinct from actual cultivation just as title is from possession. Delivery of possession is not a necessary ingredient of a validity of a transfer of title or any kind of right recognised by law. A fortiori, a relinquishment of a right to be valid need not be accompanied by delivery of possession. There is nothing in law to preclude the tenant from relinquishing his tenant-right because he is out of possession. So long as he has the tenant-right, the holding is his and the relinquishment of the tenant-right must mean relinquishment of the holding. The land may be in possession of a trespasser but the "holding" remains with the rightful tenant. Ramdayal v. Gulabai (4), referred to 122 Ind. Cas. 259 (1), held overruled in 186 Ind. Cas. 731 (2).

A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Fourth Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated March 31, 1937.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellant.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from the concurring judgment of the 4th Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 104-A of 1936, decided on March 31, 1937.

The suit relates to occupancy fields Nos. 15, 18 and 51/3 situate at Mauza Fetri, Tahsil and District Nagpur. They were originally held by one Sonba who died in 1922. On his death they devolved on his two widows Mst. Bhivra and Mst. Saloo. Bhivra died in 1923 and Mst. Saloo became the sole tenant of these fields. She died in March 1935 survived by Mahadeo the son of her deceased daughter Gahani. After her death, Mahadeo, on July 9, 1935 surrendered the fields to the malguzar Raghunath Rao, the predecessor-in-title of the respondents by a registered instrument. When the malguzar went to take possession the defendant (appellant) Dattu asserted that he was the tenant and resisted the taking of possession. Dattu claimed the holdings as being the adopted son of Sonba, the original tenant, and that he had been recognised as tenant by the landlord. Both these pleas were negatived in the two Courts below. Dattu had raised one more contention which was that as Mahadeo was not in actual possession of the holdings he could not validly surrender the tenancy-right. This plea also failed in the Courts below.

Before commencing the discussion of the point of law put forward on behalf of the appellant it is pertinent to note that the defendant Dattu was, like his father, managing the cultivation on behalf of Mst. Saloo. His jural relation to Saloo was that of an agent. His possession therefore became adverse on Saloo's death in March 1935.

The question is whether Mahadeo, not being in actual possession of the holdings on July 9, 1935 was not competent to surrender the holdings. It is contended that the surrender of tenancy-rights to be effective, the tenant must have entered upon the holding and have held an estate in possession. Reference is made to Goura v. Shriram (1) in which on the authority of the law enunciated in para. 767, Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XVIII (1st Edition) it was held that acceptance of the tenancy by the heir on whom the same devolves by descent is essential for the relation of landlord and tenant. The view taken in Goura v. Shriram (1) did not commend itself to a Full Bench of this Court in Punjab Jagoba Teli v. Ramu Chintoo Gond (2) for the reason that the doctrine of interesse termini had been abolished in England by s. 149 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, and it could not be made the basis for the decision in 1929 of the case reported in Goura v. Shriram (1): see Razia Begam v. Muhammad Daud (3).

(3) 6 Pat 94; 96 Ind. Cas. 558; A I R 1926 Pat 508.

It is contended that inasmuch as s. 89 of the C. P. Tenancy Act speaks of a surrender of a holding, it must follow that there can be no surrender unless the tenant is in actual possession of the land. This is but another form of the same argument as has been considered above. A holding does not mean merely land but also includes the contractual rights of the tenant. A holding is a parcel of land which is held under one lease or one set of conditions (s. 2 of the C. P. Tenancy Act.) It denotes an extent of land which is the subject-matter of the contract of lease. The jural relation between the landlord and the tenant is primarily governed by the contract of lease and that contract is personal, although it gives rise to an interest in the land. This relation originates in contract which is terminable by the relinquishment of such rights as the tenant acquires under the contract. The surrender of a holding properly understood signifies the relinquishment of the tenant right in favour of the landlord as affecting the parcel of land which is the subject-matter of the contract of tenancy. As explained in Ramdayal v. Gulabai Bai (4) surrender signifies the merger of the tenant-right in the proprietary right so as to convert the tenancy holding into the landlord's khudkasht. The tenant-right which means the right to cultivate the land is distinct from actual cultivation just as title is from possession. Delivery of possession is not a necessary ingredient of a validity of a transfer of title or any kind of right recognised by law. A fortiori, a relinquishment of a right to be valid need not be accompanied by delivery of possession. Similarly a right may devolve on an heir notwithstanding that the subject-matter of the right is in the possession of a trespasser. Section 11 of the C. P. Tenancy Act says that the interest of an occupancy tenant shall on his death pass by inheritance in accordance with her personal law. The interest of the tenant signifies the holding, that is to say that the parcel of land which is held under one lease. The interest will devolve on the heir even though the propositus is not in actual possession at his death, provided of course that the interest is not extinguished by adverse possession. If an interest in property can devolve on the heir even though unaccompanied by possession, there is no reason why it cannot be transferred or relinquished unaccompanied by possession.

(4) 4 N L R 120.

As between an excluded or dispossessed tenant and the trespasser the former has the tenant-right which means an interest in the holding. The surrender, like transfer, operates on this right or interest irrespective of possession. The tenant-right, viz., the right to cultivate reverts to the landlord who thereby becomes entitled to eject the trespasser. There is nothing in law to preclude the tenant from relinquishing his tenant-right because he is out of possession. So long as he has the tenant-right, the holding is his and the relinquishment of the tenant-right must mean relinquishment of the holding. The land may be in possession of a trespasser but the "holding" remains with the rightful tenant.

Reference is made to s. 26 of the Ben. Ten. Act and to s. 35 of the Agra Ten. Act. It is unnecessary to discuss those enactments as they are not helpful in the construction of the Tenancy Law in force in this Province.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 2, Proviso, ss. 3, 30—Joint Hindu family—Each member, if can apply for relief under s. 30—Father and son executing mortgage—Father alone entered in revenue papers as proprietor—Suit on mortgage—Father if entitled to relief under ss. 30 and 3—Benefit, if can be extended to son.

Explanation 2, sub-s. 2, s. 2 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act, makes it clear that each member of a joint Hindu family cannot claim the benefits conferred by s. 5 of the Act, or by s. 30 which is one of the sections in Chap. IV. For the purposes of applications under s. 30 the person recorded as owner or the person paying revenue, etc. is the only person who can apply. Normally such a person in a joint-Hindu family would be the karta. 172 Ind. Cas. 951 (1), relied on.

Father and son who were members of a joint-Hindu family executed a mortgage. The family possessed ancestral property, the revenue of which did not exceed Rs. 1,000. In the revenue papers the father alone was recorded as proprietor. It was contended by both the father and the son, in a suit against them on the mortgage that they were entitled to instalments and reduction of interest:

Held, that the Proviso applied only to those cases where an agriculturist joins a non-agriculturist in any transaction of loan. The son could not be regarded as non-agriculturist so as to invite the application of the proviso. Consequently the father in joining the son in executing the mortgage could not be said to have forfeited his right to claim relief under ss. 3 and 30.

Held, also that the benefits under ss. 3 and 30 could also be extended to the son.

S. A. from the decision of the Additional Sub-Judge, Agra, dated January 14, 1936.

Messrs. Baleshwari Prasad and Gopal Behari, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Munir Ahmad, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This is a plaintiff's appeal and arises out of a suit for sale on a mortgage dated August 23, 1929. The mortgage was executed by Bansidhar and his son Cheddi Lal who are members of a joint Hindu family. Bansidhar and Cheddi Lal contested the suit inter alia on the allegation that both of them were agriculturists and were entitled to the benefit of the provisions of ss. 3 and 30, U. P. Agri. Relief Act (Act XXVII of 1934). They prayed that the rate of interest be reduced and the decretal amount be made payable by instalments. This prayer of the defendants was accepted by the trial Court and that Court reduced the interest and also granted certain instalments. On appeal by the plaintiff, the lower Appellate Court affirmed the decision of the trial Court. The plaintiff has come up in appeal to this Court and it is argued on his behalf that in view of the provisions of Expl. 2 to sub-s. (2), s. 2 of the Act the Courts below were wrong in granting instalments and in reducing the rate of interest. In support of this contention reliance is further placed on one of the provisions to s. 2 which runs as follows:

"Provided further that if a non-agriculturist joins with an agriculturist in any transaction of loan, save for the purpose of adding his name as security, the agriculturist shall not be considered as such for the purpose of that transaction."

Explanation 2 provides that "in the case of members of a joint Hindu family . . . each member . . . shall be considered to be an agriculturist for the purposes of Chaps. II (except ss. 3, 4, 5 and 8), 3 and 6, whose share or interest in revenue, local rate or rent . . . as the case may be, does not respectively exceed the aforesaid limits."

In the present case it has been found by both the Courts below that the joint family of the defendants is possessed of ancestral zamindari property, the revenue of which does not exceed Rs. 1,000. But the name of Bansidhar alone, who is the karta of the family, is recorded in the revenue papers and Cheddi Lal's name is not recorded as a proprietor in those papers. In view of the provisions of Expl. 2, it is contended that Oheddi Lal could not be considered to be an agriculturist for the purposes of ss. 3 and 30 of the Act, and it is therefore urged that he must be deemed to be a non-agriculturist and as Bansidhar joined with Oheddi Lal in the execution of the mortgage the Proviso quoted above applied to this case. In our judgment, there is no force in this contention. The Proviso applies only to those cases where an agriculturist joins a non-agriculturist in any transaction of loan. Oheddi Lal could not, in view of Expl. 2, be regarded as a non-agriculturist for all purposes. He could not therefore be held to be a non-agriculturist so as to invite the application of the proviso referred to above. That being so, Bansidhar by joining Oheddi Lal in the execution of the mortgage did not forfeit the right to the relief to which he was entitled by the provisions of the Act. The learned Counsel for the appellant relied on the decision in Allahabad Bank, Ltd., Meerut v. Prakash Nath (1), in support of the contention referred to above. In that case it was held that if a person is recorded as holding certain property or if the revenue papers show that a certain person actually pays land revenue, etc., then he is the person who is prima facie an "agriculturist" within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of s. 2 of the Act. It was further held in that case that Expl. 2, sub-s. 2, s. 2 of the Act makes it clear that each member of a joint Hindu family cannot claim the benefits conferred by s. 5 of the Act, or by s. 30 which is one of the sections in Chap. IV, because s. 5 and Chap. IV, are expressly excluded in this Explanation. The learned Judges after making these observations ruled that "for the purposes of applications under s. 5 or applications under Chap. IV, the person recorded as owner or the person paying revenue, etc., is the only person who can apply. Normally such a person in a joint Hindu family would be the karta."

It is clear from the observations just quoted that a karta of a joint Hindu family is entitled to apply for the benefit conferred by s. 3 and s. 30 of the Act. In the case before us, Bansidhar had applied for relief under those sections in his written statement. The Courts below were therefore right in granting instalments and in reducing the rate of interest. It was argued that as Oheddi Lal could not be deemed to be an agriculturist for the purposes of ss. 3 and 30, the decree for the full amount claimed should have been passed against him. We are unable to agree with this contention. On an application being made by Bansidhar the Court was competent to extend the benefit of ss. 3 and 30 to both the defendants who are members of a joint Hindu family. In our judgment, there is no force in this appeal. It is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 3—"Lawful agreement", scope—Agreement void on face of it, if excluded—Enquiry, whether necessary.

The term "lawful agreement" as used in O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. O., excludes not only unlawful agreements i. e., the object or consideration for which is unlawful as defined in the Contract Act, but all agreements which on the face of them are void and therefore will not be enforced by the Court. For this purpose, no inquiry is necessary because the terms of the agreement themselves will show the defect. The Court therefore has to consider whether on the face of the agreement it is lawful or not. Word "lawful" is not wide enough to include an inquiry whether the agreement is voidable at the instance of one party. 110 Ind. Cas. 573 (1) and 154 Ind. Cas. 746 (2), commented upon.

Judgment.—This is a motion for recording a compromise. The terms of the compromise, which are reduced to writing, are not disputed. They are found in two letters which are annexed to the affidavit filed in support of the motion. On behalf of the plaintiffs, who oppose this application, it is urged that their consent was obtained on a representation that the Northern India Development Corporation Ltd., who were to pass a writing under the agreed terms promising to pay Rs. 6,500 to the plaintiffs by monthly instalments of Rs. 200 and Rs. 300, was in a sound financial condition. It is alleged that representation was false to the knowledge of the agent of the defendants who came to effect the compromise. It is alleged that the Corporation held a meeting in the middle of April 1939 and passed a resolution to go into voluntary liquidation. The company later on has been ordered to be wound up subject to the supervision of the Court. Having regard to the short period within which the company went into liquidation it is contended that the representation was false to the knowledge of the agent and therefore the compromise is voidable at the instance of the plaintiffs. The alleged representation is denied. The dispute is whether on this application the plaintiffs should be allowed to go into that question at all.

The notice of motion to record the compromise is taken out under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil P. C., which (omitting the words which are inapplicable) states that where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, the Court shall order such agreement or compromise to be recorded and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit. The words of that rule show that the Court has to be satisfied on two points; first, that there was an agreement between the parties, and, secondly, that it was lawful. The document put forward in the present case is not disputed and the agreement is thus proved. The other question is whether it is lawful. On behalf of the defendants it is urged that "lawful" means "according to law." The learned Advocate-General for the defendants in the course of the argument drew my attention to Qadri Jahan Begam v. Fazal Ahmad (1) and Husain Yar Beg v. Radha Kishan (2). In those cases proceedings were adopted under O. XXIII, r. 3 and the contention of the opponents was that the agreements were voidable by reason of facts extraneous to the terms of the agreements themselves. The observations of the learned Judges in those cases show that an inquiry showing that the agreements were voidable is not within the purview of O. XXIII, r. 3. In the former case it was observed as follows (pp 751-52*):

"... the words 'lawful' in O. XXIII, r. 3, does not merely mean binding or enforceable.....the word 'lawful'...refers to agreements which in their very terms or nature are not 'unlawful,' and may therefore include agreements which are voidable at the option of one of the parties thereto because they have been brought about by undue influence, coercion or fraud."

With respect I am unable to accept the full meaning of the words used there. If an agreement put before the Court as a compromise on the face of it was a wagering agreement and therefore void under s. 30, Contract Act, in my opinion, it will not be a lawful agreement because on the face of it it is an agreement which the Court will not enforce. The provisions of O. XXIII, r. 3, require the Court to record a lawful agreement and it has no option but to pass a decree in accordance with it. A compromise which is so put forward stands on the same footing as a contract between the parties. If at the ex parte hearing of a suit filed to enforce an agreement which on the face of it appeared to the Court to be void, I think the Court would refuse to pass a decree, to enforce that contract (sic). In the same way, if a wagering agreement was put forward as a compromise to the suit, I see no reason why the Court should not hold that it is not a lawful agreement and thus refrain from recording it or passing a decree in accordance with it. Therefore the term "lawful agreement" as used in O. XXIII, r. 3, excludes not only unlawful agreements, i.e. the object or consideration for which is unlawful as defined in the Contract Act, but all agreements which on the face of them are void and therefore will not be enforced by the Court. For this purpose, no inquiry is necessary because the terms of the agreement themselves will show the defect. The Court therefore has to consider whether on the face of the agreement it is lawful or not as stated above. With that reservation I respectfully agree with the two Allahabad decisions mentioned above.

An application under O. XXIII, r. 3, is in the nature of an interlocutory proceeding, and normally, it will certainly be inconvenient to treat it as if it were a suit where all evidence which will make the agreement voidable by reason of the provisions of the Contract Act will be led. But that will not be a sufficient answer to refuse to take into consideration the plea whether an agreement is voidable or not. That contention must stand or fall by reason of the wording of O. XXIII, r. 3. I am unable to construe the word "lawful" as wide enough to include an inquiry whether the agreement is voidable at the instance of one party. In my opinion, it includes only two classes of agreements: those which are unlawful and those which on their face are void and therefore not capable of being enforced. Under the circumstances the opposition fails. If the plaintiffs have any grievance in respect of the agreement their remedy is to file a suit to set aside the agreement and the decree. They are not prevented from doing so by this judgment. The agreement which is contained in the letters of March 10 and 12, 1939, which are put in and marked No. 1 is recorded, and a decree is passed in accordance therewith. Plaintiffs to pay the costs of this motion and decree.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 36—"Net income"; meaning of— Calcutta High Court (Original Side) Rules, Chap XXVI—Registrar in making report regarding payment of alimony making suggestion as to amount of maintenance payable for children—No reference to him on this point—Such part cannot be confirmed.

Net income merely means income after allowing for the cost of collection, income-tax and similar deductions. It does not mean any sum which is left over after the husband has spent all that he considers necessary for his maintenance.

Where the Registrar has, in making his report regarding the payment of alimony pendente lite, made certain suggestions regarding the amount of maintenance which should be paid for the children, the latter part of his report cannot be confirmed when there was no reference to him upon that point.

Mr. R. C. Bonnerjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sekhar Bose, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—There are two reports by the Registrar in the matrimonial suit instituted by the wife against her husband. One report deals with the amount payable as alimony pendente lite and the other deals with the amount payable as costs. Both these enquiries were referred to the Registrar and he made his report on February 22, 1939. Both the reports were filed on March 8, 1939. When the reports came up for further directions the husband appeared in person and objected to the reports. This was on April 18, 1939. Before this date the husband took no steps. The objections of the husband are twofold. As regards the amount fixed for alimony pendente lite the husband says that the Registrar took into account his gross income, not his net income. By net income the husband means income left after meeting all what he terms his necessary expenses. The next objection is that the wife is not entitled either to alimony pendente lite or to her costs because she has private means of her own. As the husband appeared in person and as I wanted to be advised on the matter I asked Mr. Sekhar Bose to appear for the husband, and he has very kindly done so. I express my thanks to Mr. Bose for the assistance he has given to me.

Learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the wife points out that these objections of the husband cannot be entertained inasmuch as the report has become confirmed by efflux of time. He draws my attention to r. 89 of Chap. XXVI, of the Rules of the Original Side of this Court. Rule 89 lays down that "an application to discharge or vary a report shall be made by motion upon notice to be given within 14 days of the filing thereof." In the present case there has been no motion filed against the report and the objections were taken over a month after the report had been filed. Learned Counsel on behalf of the husband seeks to invoke the aid of rr. 91 and 92 of Chap. XXVI. He says that the fact that the Registrar has not taken into account the expenses of the husband is an error of law and that therefore the provisions of r. 91 come into operation. He also says that r. 92 comes into operation because the failure of the Registrar to take this element into consideration amounts to a mistake within the meaning of r. 92. I am of opinion that the husband cannot avail himself of the provision of r. 92 as there is a procedure laid down under the Rule which has not been followed by the husband. The Rule says that

"a report after it has become binding will not be re-opened except on the ground of fraud, surprise or mistake or such other ground as may be allowed by the Court on an application to the Court by motion which may be granted on such terms and conditions as to costs and otherwise as to the Court shall seem fit."

Now there is no motion before me at all to vary the report. As regards the application of r. 91 I am of opinion that there has been no error of law on the part of the Registrar. It is true that alimony pendente lite should be calculated on the net income of the husband. This is provided in s. 36, Divorce Act. The interpretation put upon the word "net" by the learned Counsel for the husband is, in my opinion, incorrect. Net income merely means income after allowing for the cost of collection, income-tax and similar deductions. Net income does not mean any sum which is left over after the husband has spent all that he considers necessary for his maintenance. In my opinion the contention for the learned Counsel for the wife is correct. The reports cannot be challenged at this stage. I accordingly confirm both the reports. The learned Registrar has, in making his report regarding the payment of alimony pendente lite, made certain suggestions regarding the amount of maintenance which should be paid for the children. As there was no reference to the learned Registrar upon this point that part of the report cannot be confirmed. The result is that the husband is directed to pay alimony pendente lite of Rs. 17 to the petitioner, his wife. He will also pay into Court the sum of Rs. 1,800 as costs or furnish security for that sum to the satisfaction of the Registrar within a month. The alimony pendente lite will be paid from the date of the application for such alimony. The petitioner will get the costs of this application. Certified for Counsel. These orders are made without prejudice to the right, if any, of the husband to apply to sue or defend in forma pauperis.

Letters Patent (Nagpur), cl. 10, 27—Judge refusing leave to appeal under cl. 10—If can subsequently re-call his own order and declare case fit for appeal.

Rule 10 of the rules made by the Nagpur High Court under the powers conferred by cl. 27 of the Letters Patent read with sub-s. (1) of s. 106 of the Govt. of India Act, precludes any possibility of an applicant approaching a Judge a second time when his application for a declaration under cl. 10, Letters Patent that the case is a fit one for appeal has been refused. Hence when once a Judge has refused to declare that a case is fit one for appeal under cl. 10, Letters Patent he cannot subsequently revise or review his own order and re-call it and declare that the case is fit one for appeal under cl. 10.

L. P. A. from the appellate decree of Mr. Justice V. Bose, dated November 24, 1936.

Mr. J. R. Mudholkar, for the Appellant.
Messrs. R. N. Padhye, A. R. Kulkarni and Rai Bahadur M. B. Kinkhede, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—On November 17, 1936, a Judge of this Court heard an appeal out of which this Letters Patent Appeal arises. He delivered judgment on November 24, 1936, and the appellant whose appeal was dismissed asked on the following day for leave to appeal under the Letters Patent. He was heard on November 26, 1936 and in a considered order, which appears on p. 45 of the Paper Book, the Judge refused leave to appeal. On February 20, 1937, the appellant put in a petition of review of the judgment and on the same day put in a petition filed on a two-rupee stamp to the effect that the Court had possibly followed a rule not in a consonance with the practice of the other High Courts in refusing leave to appeal, and praying that if his application for review of the judgment was rejected, at least leave to appeal should be granted. Subsequently on August 3, a further application was put in, asking that the review application on the original judgment should be heard by a Bench or that leave should be granted to the plaintiff to file a Letters Patent Appeal. The application concluded with the prayer that the order refusing leave be reviewed and reconsidered and that the leave should be granted. This was treated as a review application of the order rejecting the application for Letters Patent Appeal (vide the Court's order of April 7, 1937). In that order the Judge considered that, as after the passing of his previous order rejecting the application a convention had been arrived at among the Judges of the Court with respect to such applications, he felt justified in granting leave to appeal. But our learned brother had some doubt whether he had power to review his own order. He stated that as at present advised he considered that he had power under the inherent powers of the Court, and in the circumstances granted leave, but with this proviso; that the question whether he had the power to review his own order was to be decided by the Divisional Bench which was to hear the Letters Patent Appeal. The appeal which was prima facie considerably beyond time was admitted by a Divisional Bench of this Court as within time subject to objection by the other side.

A preliminary point is raised in objection on behalf of the respondent that no appeal can lie, and it is urged that when once a Judge has refused permission, he is functus officio and cannot revise or review his own order, and that as such an order is not one passed under the provisions of the Civil P. O., no provision of that Code, even including s. 151, can be held applicable. The appellant contends that all that the Court was concerned with was under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent to declare that the case was a fit one for appeal, and that it was immaterial whether it had previously refused to make such a declaration.

In our opinion, the contention of the respondent that no appeal lies must succeed on the very short point that the case is governed by the rules made by this Court under the powers conferred by cl. 27 of the Letters Patent read with sub-s. (1) of s. 106 of the Govt. of India Act. Rule 10 of those rules published in Notification No. 2022-II-21-8-34, dated March 9, 1936, runs as follows:—

"An application for leave to appeal under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent against an appellate judgment of a single Judge of the High Court shall be made in writing or orally to the Judge deciding the appeal immediately after the judgment is delivered. No other application for such leave to appeal shall be entertained."

That rule precludes any possibility of an applicant approaching a Judge a second time when his application for a declaration that the case is a fit one for appeal has been refused. One application had been entertained and refused in a fully considered order which was set out in the ordersheet. No subsequent application under the rules was entertainable. The respondent, when the appellant's petition to have the case declared as one fit for a Letters Patent Appeal was rejected, was in the position that the litigation had concluded in his favour (subject always to the right of review that he had under the Civil P. C. in respect of the judgment itself) and he would be deprived of a valuable right were there any provision, which in our opinion, there is not, for an approach being made to the Court a second time asking that the decision should be reversed. The learned Counsel for the appellant concedes that it would not be possible for a Judge, having declared that the case was one fit for appeal, to re-call that decision and declare that it was not one so fit. We are unable to see that the converse proposition holds and that a Judge having once declared a case not to be a fit one for appeal should be able to re-call that decision. The detriment to the party in whose favour the original decision was given is as great in the one case as it is in the other.

The question of limitation which would naturally arise if the question of the admissibility of the appeal had terminated in the appellant's favour, need not now be considered. The preliminary objection, then, succeeds and the appeal must be dismissed as untenable. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Decree against person in representative capacity—His objection in his own capacity regarding property against which decree is being executed, if can be raised by separate suit—Second appeal—New point.

Where a decree is passed against a person in his representative capacity and proceedings are taken under it to obtain execution in his representative character, he is a party to the suit in respect to any question which may arise between him and the other parties relating to the execution of the decree. Hence when a decree has been passed against a person in his representative capacity, he should, in execution proceedings, in his own capacity, raise any objection with regard to the property against which the decree is being executed. Where he has failed to do so, he is debarred by s. 47, Civil P. C., from bringing, subsequently a suit for declaration that his share in the property is not affected by the decree.

[Case-law discussed.]

A point of law which depends entirely upon admitted facts can be raised for the first time in second appeal.

S. A. against the decree of the District Court, Pyapon, in Civil Appeal No. 4 of 1939.

Mr. Hay, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Ba Maung, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—In 1928 Daw Mon and her son Maung Sein purchased the property in connection with which the suit arises. Maung Sein's wife was Ma Ohn Myaing. In 1931 this property was mortgaged by Daw Mon, Maung Sein, Ma E Khaing and Ma Shin to R. M. S. V. Chettyar Firm. In 1936 the Chettyar Firm brought a suit on the mortgage (Civil Regular Suit No. 10 of 1936 of the Assistant District Court of Pyapon) against Daw Mon in her personal capacity and as the legal representative of the deceased Ma Shin, against Ma E Khaing in her personal capacity, and against Ma Ohn Myaing as the legal representative of Maung Sein, deceased. A decree was obtained and in September 1938 the property was brought to sale and was purchased by the decree-holder Chettyar. At no time, either during the suit, or during the execution proceedings, did Ma Ohn Myaing put forward any claim in respect of this property. In October 1938 Ma Ohn Myaing filed the suit out of which this appeal arises, against R. M. S. V. Chettyar Firm and others, seeking a declaration that she was entitled to a quarter share in this property and that her share was not affected by the mortgage decree. The defence was taken that the suit was barred by res judicata by reason of Civil Regular No. 10 of 1936, but the learned Judge of the Sub-Divisional Court held that the suit was not so barred and the learned District Judge on first appeal came to the same decision.

The sole point taken before me on behalf of the appellant is that this suit is barred by reason of s. 47, Civil P. C. It is suggested that this is a new point which was not taken in the Courts below. I am not certain that this is so in view of the terms of para. 10 of the written statement; but, even if it is a new point, it is a point of law which depends entirely upon admitted facts and there is no objection to it being raised for the first time, if indeed it is being raised for the first time, in this Court. The relevant portion of s. 47, Civil P. C., reads as follows:

"All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit".

Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chowdry Wahed Ali v. Jumae (1) have held that where a decree is against a person in a representative capacity and proceedings have been taken under it to obtain execution against the party in his representative character, he is a party to the suit with respect to any question which may arise between him and the other parties relating to the execution of the decree. In Kali Charan v. Jewat Dube (2) it was held that when a judgment-debtor dies after the passing of the decree and his legal representatives are brought on the record, any questions which they may raise as to the property, which they say does not belong to the assets in their hands, and as such is not being capable of being taken in execution, are questions which must be decided under s. 244, Civil P. C., (now s. 47) and must be determined in the execution case, and not in a separate suit. It is clear therefore that Ma Ohn Myaing, although she was only joined to the suit as the legal representative of Maung Sein, was a party to the suit within the meaning of s. 47, Civil P. C.

It has been suggested on behalf of the respondent that entirely different considerations arise in a mortgage suit. It is argued that it would not have been open to Ma Ohn Myaing to put forward her own title to contest a decree being passed on the mortgage because it was a title paramount to that of the mortgagor, and my attention has been directed to the case in Viswathan Chettyar v. Ma Aye (3). It was held in that case that in a suit to enforce a mortgage, persons claiming under a title adverse to that of both the mortgagor and mortgagee are not proper parties and the claims of such persons cannot be adjudicated upon in the mortgage suit. This ruling is therefore an authority for U Ba Maung's contention that it was not open to Ma Ohn Myaing to raise this point in the suit; but it does not lend any support to the second part of his contention, that such a claim could not have been raised after the decree had been passed and in execution proceedings under s. 47, Civil P. C. In Kurivali v. Mayan (4), which was a mortgage suit, it was held:

"The question whether the property mentioned in the decree was available for execution is such a question, and it arose between the decree-holders and this plaintiff, who had been made a party to the decree as the judgment-debtor's representative".

On such grounds it was held that a separate suit was not maintainable in view of s. 244, Civil P. C., which is now equivalent to s. 47. The case which I have just referred to was approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (5). In that case it was held that a question of this kind must be determined in the execution proceedings and not by a separate suit. Learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent has drawn my attention to various authorities, which he says, lend support to his contention that s. 47, Civil P. C., has no application in this case and that what his client is really seeking to attack is the decree, and that the matter is not one relating to the discharge and execution of the mortgage decree which has been passed. The first case is Muthappa Chetty v. Pallathappa Chetty (6). In that case it was held that it was not necessary for the holder of a mortgage decree to apply for the attachment and sale of the mortgaged property and if he unnecessarily applied for attachment, which was granted, a claim to the property could not be brought under s. 278, Civil P. O. It is suggested that this ruling tends to show that the ordinary rules of execution, including s. 47, do not apply where a mortgage decree is being executed, but I do not think that this particular ruling is authority for anything beyond the single point that it is unnecessary, and in fact improper, to attach property which is being sold in pursuance of a preliminary mortgage decree. Tripathi Prakash Nandy v. Biseswar Lal (7), is another case cited on behalf of the respondent. In that case, which was a mortgage case, it was held that while the decree stood the judgment-debtors, who were parties to the decree, could not challenge its validity in execution proceedings, either on the question as to the security that was to be sold or on the question of the saleability of that security. The decision in this case appears to have turned on the principle that the person, against whom a decree has been passed, is not entitled to question the correctness of that decree in execution proceedings. That is an entirely different point from the one which arises before me. The point with which I am concerned is whether, when a decree has been passed against a person in his representative capacity, he should, in execution proceedings, in his own capacity, raise any objection with regard to the property against which the decree is being executed.

Various other cases were cited before me with regard to removal of attachment, but I think that all these cases can be easily distinguished from the case with which I am now dealing where no question of attachment arises at all. For the reasons which I have given, I am of the opinion that Ma Ohn Myaing, the plaintiff, was bound to raise her claim with regard to this property in the execution proceedings in view of s. 47, Civil P. O., and that, as she has failed to do so, she is debarred by that section from bringing the present case. I therefore allow this appeal, set aside the judgments and decrees of both the lower Courts, and in place thereof direct that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed with costs throughout. Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 471—Date of decree in certified copy of decree altered with erroneous belief that decree being time-barred would thus be executable—Execution of such decree sought—Original decree not in fact time-barred—Offence of forgery, if committed—"Fraudulently or dishonestly", meaning of.

It is necessary for the prosecution, when the charge is under s. 471, I. P. O., to show that the accused knew or had reason to believe the document to be forged and used it fraudulently or dishonestly. [p. 257, col. 2]

Meaning of the expression "fraudulently or dishonestly" discussed.

Where the execution is sought on the basis of a copy of the decree in which the dates were altered under the impression that the decree was time-barred, a sufficient intent to defraud is involved in the advantage directly aimed at by the petitioner on the basis of the altered dates, and it is immaterial that the alterations were brought about under an erroneous impression that the decree was time-barred. A fraud, it is clear, is attempted upon the Court and in such a case it is not necessary for the prosecution to go further and establish an intent to cause loss or risk of loss. But even if the contrary were to be held, the definition of injury in s. 44 of I. P. O., is very wide, and the threat of a decree that could not be executed by any competent authority is a threat of harm or injury within the meaning of the Code. [p. 259, col. 2; p. 262, col. 1.]

Or. R. against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Araria, dated July 12, 1939.

Mr. P. C. Manuk and Mrs. Dharmashilla Lall, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner has been convicted of the offence of fraudulently or dishonestly using as genuine a certified copy of a decree which he knew or had reason to believe to be a forged document. In 1935 he brought a money suit on a hand-note for Rs. 250. The suit was decreed on July 4, 1935, and the decree was signed on the 8th of that month. On July 21, 1938, a petition for execution of the decree was filed in the Court of the Munsif by Babu Satnarain Bhagat, Pleader and brother of the petitioner. This petition was accompanied by a certified copy of the decree in which the date of the judgment was palpably altered in two places from July 4 to 24, 1935, and the date of the decree was similarly altered from the 8th to the 28th of that month. On the following day Shamsuddin

Ahmad, the Civil Court mohurrir who had received the execution petition, compared the copy of the decree, with the money suit register and discovered that the dates looked suspicious both in the copy and in the money suit register. After consulting his colleagues he brought the matter to the notice of the Munsif, who also examined the entries, and pending the receipt of the original record of the suit from the district headquarters, held an enquiry. It was thus that on July 26, 1938, he questioned the petitioner and was told by him that he had obtained the certified copy of the decree, that in the certified copy the date of disposal of the money suit was copied as July 24, 1935, and that "it was all along as it is now". The Munsif also examined his mohurrirs, the Pleader, the Pleader's clerk Ajab Lal and the writer of the execution petition, Baleshwar Prasad, who happened to be the clerk of another brother of the petitioner, who had also been a member of the Bar but was then a paralytic. As a result of the Munsif's enquiry the petitioner was placed on his trial.

There is no dispute now that the execution petition with the dates as we find them was filed by the petitioner's Pleader on July 21, 1938. There is also no dispute that the dates in the original decree were July 4 and 8, 1935. The copyist who prepared the certified copy filed on behalf of the petitioner was examined as a Court witness and swore that he had copied the dates correctly, and denied that the figure "2" in three places in the dates given in the certified copy (twice before the 4th and once before July 8), was his writing. The evidence of the copyist was supported by the circumstances, for the copy was prepared in August, 1935, when there was no reason whatsoever to tamper with the dates, and towards the end of the month the copy was amended by order of the Court in respect of two items (besides the total) in the statement of costs given, as usual, at the end of the decree.

It seems to have been suggested in the trial Court that Shamsuddin, the Court mohurrir, may have altered the dates. The suggestion was repelled by the Magistrate and was, quite rightly, not repeated before the Sessions Judge.

The principal defence was that long before the filing of the execution petition the petitioner had made over the copy of the decree to Ajab Lal in order to put the decree into execution, and that Ajab Lal had allowed the decree to become barred by limitation and then tried to save it by altering the dates. This was put by way of suggestion only to Ajab Lal in cross-examination, and denied by him. The lower Courts have both accepted Ajab Lal's denial, rejecting the evidence of Baleshwar, who happens to be a cousin of the petitioner and who wrote the execution petition although he was not the mohurrir of the Pleader working for the petitioner in the execution proceedings, that he had written the petition at the instance of Ajab Lal. No evidence was produced on behalf of the petitioner, nor anything of importance elicited from such friendly prosecution witnesses as the petitioners' brother and cousin in support of the suggestion put to Ajab Lal.

It was also urged that the petitioner could not possibly have had any motive for altering the dates in the certified copy as the three years' limitation for execution ran from the date of amendment and had therefore not yet expired. But the dates were in fact altered, and altered so palpably that, as the learned Sessions Judge had remarked, "no man with any common sense can fail to realise that there is suspicion in the dates." It is also obvious that whoever brought about the alterations did not realise how limitation was saved by the amendments of August 30, 1935.

Learned Counsel for the petitioner has contended that the fraudulent user of the forged copy of the decree has not been conclusively brought home to the petitioner, that the lower Appellate Court has acted on inadmissible evidence, and that the decree not being really time-barred, the alterations were immaterial and did not constitute forgery as they did not make the document "more efficacious".

Now, it is necessary for the prosecution when the charge is under s. 471 to show that the accused knew or had reason to believe the document to be forged and used it fraudulently or dishonestly. The execution petition of July 21, 1938, was signed by the petitioner himself in the three usual places. It gave July 24, 1935 as the date of the decree, and the Courts below had before them the palpably altered dates in the copy of the decree filed with it besides the statement, Ex. 12 made by the petitioner to the Munsif on July 26, 1938. The petitioner did not on that occasion suggest anything about Ajab Lal having received the copy of the decree long before and having allowed the decree to become time-barred; but said, on the contrary, that the date "July 24, 1935" in the copy "was all along as it is now." Learned Counsel has endeavoured to meet the comment of the lower Appellate Court on this failure of the petitioner to state such an important fact on the earliest occasion by urging that the petitioner was not then on his defence. I am not impressed by this, because if the story about Ajab Lal had been true, there was no reason why the petitioner should not only have kept it back at the time—unlike Baleshwar, Ajab Lal is not even related to the petitioner—but should also have stated that he himself had obtained the certified copy and that the date of disposal of the money suit shown in it had all along been July 24, 1935. Mr. Manuk has also referred to a suggestion made by the prosecution in the cross-examination of Baleshwar after the witness had gone the length of saying that he did not recognise the handwriting of the petitioner's signatures on the execution petition. This suggestion was that the petitioner had given the decree to Baleshwar, that Baleshwar found that it was time-barred after showing it to the Pleader Satnarain Bhagat, that Baleshwar then asked Ajab Lal to write the execution petition, that Ajab Lal refused and that Baleshwar then wrote the petition, asking Ajab Lal only to sign as scribe. The contention is that this completely exonerate the petitioner. But it is nobody's case that that is what actually took place, and the prosecution seems merely to have thrown out a not very fully thought out suggestion to make out that the witness was telling very much less than he knew about the affair. Baleshwar himself denied the suggestion. It has also been suggested by learned Counsel that the petitioner may not have noticed the alterations in the dates in the certified copy, but this suggestion is entirely irreconcilable with the petitioner's statement to the Munsif, the whole of which is in evidence.

As to inadmissible evidence, the contention on behalf of the petitioner is that what Satnarain Bhagat told Shamsuddin on the evening of July 23, in the absence of the petitioner is no evidence against the petitioner. According to Shamsuddin, Satnarain told him that the decree (that is to say, the certified copy) had been shown to him by the petitioner, that Satnarain had pointed out that it was time-barred, and that Baleshwar had taken it away. The trial Court, as a matter of fact, was not inclined to believe this incident as given by Shamsuddin. The lower Appellate Court, on the other hand, found nothing improbable in it and preferred to believe the mohurrir rather than the Pleader. The matter was reported to the Munsif on the next working day, namely, July 25, and if the mohurrir did not go up to the Munsif at once, the learned Sessions Judge thinks it not unnatural for Shamsuddin to have displayed a slight amount of sympathy to the Pleader who had been at school with him. The learned Sessions Judge certainly considers the incident as an important piece of evidence, but it is by no means clear that he uses it as evidence against the petitioner. It was certainly evidence against the Pleader who, when cross-examined by the prosecution with the leave of the Court, went so far as to say that he did not remember if he filed the execution petition on the instructions of the petitioner, adding that he had authorised him to file it. The Pleader, who occupied a dual position in the matter because he was the petitioner's brother as well, has made himself thoroughly unreliable as a witness, and the conclusion that the petitioner knew the certified copy to be forged was arrived at by the trial Court irrespective of this incident between Shamsuddin and the Pleader. Indeed, in my opinion, the petitioner's statement to the Munsif on the earliest occasion makes it impossible not only to entertain seriously his later suggestion in cross-examination that Ajab Lal had allowed the decree to be time-barred and may, therefore, have made the alterations, but also to doubt that the petitioner was aware of the alterations in the dates.

Coming now to the last argument on behalf of the petitioner, learned Counsel has cited Apari Charan Ray v. Emperor, 126 Ind. Cas. 862 (1) and contended that as by reason of the amendment the decree was not in fact time-barred, this was not a case of forgery since the offence requires a possibility of some person being defrauded by it, that is to say, being not only deceived but injured by the forgery. The case cited was one in which a plaint was filed on behalf of a lady by her husband, and what he described as the thumb-impression of his wife was shown not to be her thumb-impression at all. It was a suit for rent, and the defendant was liable for it and no damage was caused to him. As to the lady, she had given a general permission to her husband to file papers in Court on her behalf, and had given him authority to sign on her behalf and file papers in Court. The plaint being filed in her interest, and as she said, under her authority, there was no fraud on her. It is true that the plaint was not really signed by her, but this was found to be only a defect in procedure which was curable. Ross, J. who decided Aparti's case (1) referred to the similar cases of Ramsarup v. Emperor, 43 Ind. Cas. 828 (2) and Reg. v. Bhavani Shankar (3); in the latter of which reference was made to the view of Oresswell, J. in Reg. v. Marcus (4) about the possibility of some person being defrauded—that is to say, not only deceived but injured—by the forgery being essential in point of law to constitute an intent to defraud. But, as Oresswell, J. himself pointed out in Reg. v. Nash (5) the case of Reg. v. Marcus (4) was decided before 14 and 15 Vict. C 100, which made it unnecessary to allege the intent of the defendant to defraud any particular person, while the three counts in the indictment of Marcus mentioned the intent to defraud the London and Croydon Railway Company and two specific individuals. Maule, J. in Nash's case (5) pointed out that in order to convict a person of an intent to defraud, it is not necessary that any person should be in a situation to be defrauded. As the learned Judge had observed during the arguments, a man may have an intent to defraud and yet there may not be any person who could be defrauded by his act;

"Where a person has no account at his Banker's but a man supposes that he has, and on that supposition forges his name, there would be an intent to defraud in that case although no person could be defrauded."

It would thus seem somewhat doubtful whether in England it is still regarded as essential indictments for forgery that there should be a possibility of some person being injured in consequence of the forgery (see foot-note (o) at p. 587 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume 9; Second Edition). One well-known writer deduces the English Law from Marcus's and other cases to be that "if the person whose signature has been forged as the drawer of a cheque has ceased to have any account at the particular bank, this will not deprive the forgery of its full criminality. But the fraudulent intent necessary will not exist unless the offender had reasonable grounds for supposing (however wrongly) that someone or other might possibly be defrauded."

(Kenny's Outlines of Criminal, 11th Edition, p. 262). Be that as it may, it would seem to be clear under the English Law that a forgery is nonetheless so because it was committed in order to support a title which was good without it, for it is settled that a man may be fully guilty of forgery although the money which he aimed at getting by the forgery was only a sum that was legally due to him. Coming to Indian Law, Aparti Charan Ray's was a case in which a claim was made which only suffered from an informality curable under our Civil P. O., while in the present case execution was sought on the basis of a copy of the decree in which the dates were altered under the impression that the decree was time-barred. Section 471, I. P. O. contains the expressions "fraudulently or dishonestly" terms which are defined in ss. 24 and 25, the latter being equivalent to "with intent to defraud"—and "a forged document". Our definition of forgery is to be gathered from ss. 463 and 464, and may, for present purposes, be taken to be that a person commits forgery who, with intent to support any claim or title, alters a document in any material part without lawful authority, dishonestly or fraudulently. In construing the expression "dishonestly or fraudulently," which thus occurs in the definition, it is important to bear in mind one of the illustrations under s. 464 which has a bearing on the question how far loss or risk of loss is an element in fraud as contemplated in the Code. This illustration is

"(k) A without B's authority writes a letter and signs it in B's name certifying to A's character, intending thereby to obtain employment under Z. A has committed forgery inasmuch as he intended to deceive Z by the forged certificate, and thereby to induce Z to enter into an express or implied contract for service."

Reference was made to this illustration in Queen-Empress v. Vithal Narayan (6) where Le Blanc, J.'s description of fraud in Haycraft v. Creasy (7), was adopted:

"By fraud I understand an intention to deceive; whether it be from any expectation of advantage to the party himself, or from ill-will towards the other is immaterial."

The meaning of the word 'fraudulently' in our Code has been the subject of many decisions, which are not all easy to reconcile, especially in connection with the cognate offence of falsification of accounts under s. 477-A, created in 1895 and embodying as an essential ingredient "willfully and with intent to defraud". In Queen-Empress v. Abbas Ali (8) a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that deprivation, actual or intended, is not a necessary ingredient of the intent to defraud referentially imported into s. 464 and s. 471. Maclean, O. J. who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench added "though we are in no way bound by the decisions of the English Courts, still we are fortified in the view we take of the expression" 'intent to defraud' by the decision in Reg. v. Toshack (9), the forgery in the case before the Full Bench relating to a certificate qualifying for admission to a certain professional examination. In Koimiraaju Venkatarayadu v. Emperor (10) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court followed the decision in Abbas Ali's case; (8) and White, C. J. after referring to Sir James Fitz-James Stephen's well-known observations about 'fraud' or 'intent to defraud' or 'fraudulently' in his history of the Criminal Law of England (Vol. 2, p. 121), pointed out that under s. 24 of the Code it is not necessary for a thing to be done 'dishonestly' that there should be an intention to cause both wrongful gain and wrongful loss. The learned Chief Justice was apparently inclined to the view, on the analogy of that section, that :

"either an intention to secure a benefit or advantage on the one hand, or to cause loss or detriment on the other, by means of deceit is an intent to defraud."

though he did not consider it necessary to decide whether an intention to secure a benefit or advantage by means of the deceit by itself constitutes an intention to defraud, because the accused who had submitted to the University a certificate qualifying for admission to an examination with the intention that the University should admit him to the examination, was taken to have done so with the intention of causing loss or detriment to the University. This was in fact the point on which two of the learned Judges differed from the majority of the Full Bench, and Subrahmaniam Ayyar, J. distinguished Reg. v. Toshack (9) and illustration (K) to s. 464. In Robinson v. Emperor, 63 Ind. Cas. 617 (11) a chemist had been induced to supply twelve tubes of morphia on the basis of three prescriptions which were for one tube each, but in which the words

'one tube' had been altered to 'four tubes'. Shadi Lal, O. J. and Moti Sagar, J. held that the alterations were fraudulent. They referred to Sir James Fitz-James Stephen's observation :

"A practically conclusive test as to the fraudulent character of a deception for criminal purpose is this:— Did the author of the deceit derive any advantage from it which he could not have had, if the truth had been known? If so, it is hardly possible that that advantage should not have had an equivalent in loss, or risk of loss, to someone else, and if so there was fraud."

The deception practised upon the chemist was taken by the learned Judges to have deprived him of his right to refuse to sell morphia in quantities exceeding those specified in the genuine prescriptions and thus to have supplied the element of loss or the risk of loss essential to a forgery. The loss to the chemist is comparable to the loss to Z in illustration (K) or to the loss to the Munsif in having to deal with the execution petition of July 21, 1938 in this case. It was also urged in Robinson's case (11) that fraud was unnecessary. The learned Judges overruled this contention and referred to Norris, J.'s observation in Empress v. Dhunum Kazez (12):

"Let a person's title to property be ever so good, yet if in the course of an action brought against him to gain possession of the property he uses by way of supporting his title, though there may be no necessity for the use of it, a forged document..... I am clearly of opinion that he uses it fraudulently."

In our own Court the meaning of "intent to defraud" was considered in Sukhamoy Maitra v. Emperor (13) a case under s. 477-A where Rowland, J. said that he did not find that any of the later cases had gone so far as Norris, J. in Dhunum Kazez's case (12). The attention of the learned Judge does not seem to have been drawn to Robinson's case (11) nor to the decision in In re Shivananda Mudali, 96 Ind. Cas. 850 (14), in which the question arose whether the alteration of a plot number in a partition deed could amount to forgery if the accused had an independent title to the new plot. Devadoss, J. said

"If a person in order to resist a false claim for money makes a false receipt, does he or does he not commit forgery? Even if the Court holds that the claim is false, that would not make the false receipt any the less a forgery. Whether a document is a false document or not does not depend upon the adjudication of the Court on the claim or title which is intended to be propped up by the false document."

Norris, J.'s observation was quoted. The alteration was held to be a forgery on the ground (to quote Waller, J.) that "if a man intends to gain an unfair advantage by deceitful means and uses a false document for that purpose, his conduct is fraudulent", the intention being taken to be as Devadoss, J. put it—to defraud the Court or the party against whom the document is used. In the Bombay High Court the point was considered in Emperor v. Balkrishna Waman (15) where Batchelor, J. considered Haycraft v. Creasy (7) and the observations of Sir James Fitz-James Stephen as applied in India, and came to the conclusion that the word 'fraud' is used in our Penal Code in its ordinary and popular acceptance. In a recent Allahabad decision, Emperor v. Raghu Ram (16) a case under s. 477-A, much the same view was taken, the learned Judges observing that where there is an intention to obtain an advantage by deceit, there is fraud, and if a document is fabricated with such intent, it is forgery. Page, J. in Emperor v. Mohit Kumar Mukherjee (17) reviewed previous decisions on the questions of fraud under the I. P. C. and referred not only to Haycraft v. Creasy (7) and other old English cases but also to Rex v. Newton and Bannet (18) in which the Court of Criminal Appeal followed Buckley, J.'s definition in In re London and Globe Finance Corporation Ltd. (19):

"To defraud is to deprive by deceit; it is, by deceit to induce a man to act to his injury. (More tersely it may be put, that to deceive is by falsehood to induce a state of mind; to defraud is by deceit to induce a course of action)."

The learned Judge's conclusion was:

"That an offence is committed under s. 471 whenever a document known or believed by the accused to have been forged is used as genuine with the intention that some person thereby should be deceived, and by means of such deception that either an advantage should accrue to the person so using the document, or injury should befall some other person or persons."

as a master mariner, alleged an intent "to deceive, injure, prejudice and defraud" the four examiners and the Corporation of Trinity House which used to issue certificates to act as masters upon such examination; and when the point was referred to the Court of Criminal Appeal, the counts in question were held to be good and the conviction right. In such cases as those from Queen-Empress v. Abbas Ali (8) and Katamaraju Venkatarayadu v. Emperor (10) (already referred to), where the question was whether an intent to defraud within our Penal Code was brought home to the accused who had submitted a false certificate in order to obtain admission to an examination, there was a clear primary intention of deceiving and by deceit of inducing a course of action on the part of the person deceived and obtaining an advantage from him. Except so far as loss or detriment is almost necessarily involved when an advantage is thus obtained, any intention of causing loss was a matter of remote inference. Illustration (K) to s. 164 seems to contemplate not the loss that may possibly result to Z from the contract of service which he may be induced by the forgery and deceit to offer to A but rather the advantage of employment primarily aimed at by A. In Robinson's case (11) the chemist must have been paid whatever he would have charged any ordinary customer for the morphia supplied on the forged prescriptions. He had of course a right to refuse to sell except on a genuine prescription, but he was perhaps not bound to sell even on such prescriptions. The loss or risk of loss from the violation of his right to refuse to sell is far less clear and much more indirect than the advantage that Robinson obtained by the forgery and deceit. The petitioner before me had the forged copy of the decree filed in order to obtain execution as upon a decree of July 24, 1935. There was no such decree in existence, and the fact that he sought to gain this advantage is not in the least affected by the circumstance that if he had been correctly advised, he would have known that the decree of July 4, 1935, was saved from the time bar by the amendment of August 1935. In my opinion a sufficient intent to defraud is involved in the advantage directly aimed at by the petitioner on the basis of the altered dates; and it is immaterial that the alterations were brought about under an erroneous impression that the decree was time-barred.

A fraud, it is clear, was attempted upon the Court. I am not prepared to hold that in such a case it is necessary for the prosecution to go further and establish an intent to cause loss or risk of loss. But even if the contrary were to be held, the definition of injury in s. 44 of our Penal Code is very wide, and Priyanath Gupta v. Lal Jhi Chowkidar (20) shows how the threat of a decree that could not be executed by any competent authority in this case, the decree of July 24, 1935—is a threat of harm or injury within the meaning of the Code. Mr. Manuk also referred to the observation of Bramwell, B. in Reg. v. John Smith (21):

"Forgery supposes the possibility of a genuine document, and that the false document is not as good as the genuine document and that the one is not as efficacious for all purposes as the other".

That observation referred to some printed wrappers which were found to be as good for describing the powers for which they were to be used as other wrappers which they imitated were for describing their own contents. The mere printing of the wrappers was held not to constitute forgery, but this seems to have no application at all to the facts of the present case. A genuine copy of the decree would, it is true, have entitled the petitioner to execution of a decree passed on July 4, 1935, and amended on August 30, 1935, but the copy filed by the petitioner sought execution of a decree passed on July 24, 1935. The unauthorized alterations in the dates actually made the copy of the decree "more efficacious" than the genuine decree in the sense that the petitioner took the real decree to be time-barred and attempted to bring into existence a decree of a later date, not that this is essential to a forgery. In my opinion, the fact that the petitioner held a decree which was capable of execution on July 21, 1935, does not prevent the alterations in the certified copy filed on behalf of the petitioner from being forgeries, or the petitioner's user of it from being fraudulent.

The petitioner has been rightly convicted. The application in revision is dismissed.

Arbitration—Term in agreement that after certain period one party may nominate arbitrator on behalf of other party—Such period, when commences—Letter of appointment written before expiry of such period to be sent afterwards—Whether amounts to appointment—Appointment of arbitrator by one party on behalf of other party according to agreement—Communication to arbitrator but not to other party—Appointment, if incomplete—No disagreement between arbitrators—Omission to appoint umpire, whether legal misconduct vitiating award—Umpire, meaning of.

The period of days after which one party in accordance with the terms of the agreement may nominate an arbitrator on behalf of the other must be so many clear days commencing from the midnight after the receipt of the letter or notice requiring the other party to nominate his arbitrator. 6 Ind. Cas. 886 (1), relied on. [p. 263, col. 1.]

Where in anticipation of nomination of such an arbitrator a party has written letter of appointment before the expiry of the period stated in the agreement, to be sent when the necessity arose, the appointment cannot be said to be complete when the letter was written provided the formal communication to the arbitrator or to other party is not made before the expiry of the period. [p. 264, col. 1.]

Where a clause in the agreement states that if any party shall refuse or neglect to appoint an arbitrator within seven days after the one party shall have appointed an arbitrator and served a written notice upon the other party requiring him to appoint an arbitrator, then, upon such failure, the party making the request may appoint another arbitrator to act on behalf of the party so failing to appoint and the arbitrator so appointed may proceed and act in all respects as if he had been appointed by the person failing to make such appointment, and where such appointment is made and communicated to the arbitrator, it cannot be said to be inoperative or incomplete until other party has received notice of it. [p. 264, col. 2.]

In a case where the arbitrators disagreed on the matters referred to them, and the necessity for umpire became established it may well be that the omission of the arbitrators to appoint an umpire before they entered upon the submission would be fatal to the whole proceedings. But when, no disagreement between the arbitrators occurred, the omission of the arbitrators to provide for a contingency, does not vitiate their proceedings. The omission to make the appointment is not a defect amounting to legal misconduct on the part of the arbitrators and sufficient to vitiate the award made. 1 Ind. Cas. 391 (4), not followed. 16 Ind. Cas. 153 (5), relied on. Bright v. Durnell (2), referred to. Bates v. Townley (3), distinguished [p. 265, col. 2.]

Mr. Hakumatrai M. Eidnani, for Respondent—No. 1.

Mr. Kewalram Jethanand, for Respondent No. 2.

Order.—These are objections to an award. The objector, respondent No. 2, was the guarantee broker of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., and had entered into a guarantee agreement with that firm on February 4, 1939. The agreement covered contracts by buyers of sugar in Karachi from Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. and one of these buyers was a firm, Messrs. Dwarkadas Assandas of Karachi who entered into a number of contracts bearing Nos. 3, 7, 9, 23 and 29 between the dates February 4 and May 19, 1939. Respondent No. 2 had signed all these contracts as guarantor and there is no dispute that these contracts were within the terms of the guarantee bond executed by him on the date of the first of these five contracts. Some time before August 14, 1939, Messrs. Dwarkadas Assandas were adjudicated insolvents and although in the objections filed it was stated that Messrs. Dwarkadas Assandas have applied to set aside the order of adjudication, it is now admitted by the learned Advocate for respondent No. 2 that they have withdrawn any such application. On August 14, 1939, Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., sent a letter to respondent No. 2 stating that as Messrs. Dwarkadas Assandas have been adjudicated insolvents they have, as respondent No. 2 is aware, cancelled their contracts outstanding with him for July, August and September shipments and that in respect of those contracts a sum of Rs. 10,750 has become due. In addition, they state that a sum of Rs. 10,000 odd is due in respect of 275 tons of sugar stored on behalf of Messrs. Dwarkadas Assandas under an agreement dated July 25, 1939 and also a sum of Rs. 1,160 on a demand promissory note. They therefore call upon respondent No. 2 under cl. 5 of the guarantee brokerage agreement of February 4, to pay the sum of Rs. 21,991-8-3 being loss sustained by them in accordance with the bill enclosed. The letter goes on to state that should respondent No. 2 dispute the right of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. to claim the sum stated from respondent No. 2 he should note that they will refer the matter to arbitration and they state that they hereby appoint as their arbitrator Mr. J. Humphrey and they call upon respondent No. 2 to nominate his arbitrator within seven days in accordance with the arbitration clause in the guarantee brokerage agreement. The postal acknowledgment of this letter which has been produced shews that it was received by respondent No. 2 on August 16, 1939 and this fact has not been disputed. It is also not disputed that respondent No. 2 gave no reply to this letter and did not nominate an arbitrator on his behalf, as called upon by the letter to do and in accordance with the arbitration clause, cl. 12 of the guarantee agreement.

On August 23, the manager of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. signed a letter addressed to respondent No. 2 stating that as he has neither paid the sum demanded nor appointed his arbitrator they, in accordance with cl. 12 of the agreement, nominate Mr. Fairclough as arbitrator on behalf of respondent No. 2. On August 24, according to the evidence of the manager of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. this letter was despatched and on the same day the reference was communicated to the two arbitrators Messrs. Humphrey and Fairclough. The arbitrators on August 24, issued notices to both respondents and the postal acknowledgment shews that the notice to respondent No. 2 was received by him on August 25. The date fixed in the notice for hearing was August 31, and on that day the arbitrators made their award. Respondent 2 did not appear before them. By the award the arbitrators awarded a sum of Rs. 21,991-8-3 to be paid by respondent No. 2 to Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., and this sum is identical with that claimed by Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. in their letter of August 14.

Respondent No. 2 has raised a number of objections. The first is that the appointment by Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. of Mr. Fairclough as arbitrator on behalf of respondent No. 2 was bad as it was made before the expiry of seven days from the receipt of the notice in the letter of August 14, demanding arbitration. Reliance is placed upon Louis Dreyfus & Co. v. Meharchand Patehchand (1) where it was held that the period of days after which one party in accordance with the terms of the agreement may nominate an arbitrator on behalf of the other must be so many clear days commencing from the midnight after the receipt of the letter or notice requiring the other party to nominate his arbitrator. The letter of August 14, as has already been stated was received by respondent No. 2 on August 16, and, following the ruling above quoted, the nomination by Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. of an arbitrator on behalf of respondent No. 2 could not be made until August 24, as the period in cl. 12 of the guarantee agreement is seven days. But we have the sworn statement of the manager of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. that the letter to respondent No. 2 informing him of the appointment of Mr. Fairclough although written on the 23rd was not despatched until the 24th and also that the appointment of Mr. Fairclough was not communicated to him until the 24th. Although the learned Advocate for respondent No. 2 has admitted that he is in possession of the covers under which communications to his client were sent, respondent No. 2 has not gone into the witness-box to produce the cover of the letter said to have been despatched on August 24. I can see no reason why the statements of Mr. Winther, Manager of Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., should not be accepted.

It is suggested that the appointment was complete on the writing of the letter and therefore should be taken to have been made on August 23. I do not think that this is the correct view. It was open to Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., in anticipation of the failure by respondent No. 2 to appoint an arbitrator, to consider what steps they should take in this contingency and to prepare for this contingency. And provided the former appointment by communication to Mr. Fairclough or to respondent No. 2 was not made before August 24, I can see no reason to hold that the appointment must be deemed to come into effect when Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co., anticipating the necessity of such an appointment wrote letters to be sent when the necessity actually arose. I hold that the appointment was made not on the 23rd but on August 24, and the objection that it was made within the period of seven days from receipt of the letter of August 14, therefore is without substance.

The next objection is that the two arbitrators assumed jurisdiction before the completion of the appointment of Mr. Fairclough and in support of this objection the learned Advocate for respondent No. 2 adopts the position that the appointment of Mr. Fairclough did not come into effect until August 25, when his client received the letter informing him of this appointment. Reliance is placed upon almost identical passages in Russel on Arbitration and Redman on Arbitration in which referring to the case of two arbitrators, one appointed by each party, it is said that the appointment by a party of his own arbitrator does not become effective until it is communicated to the other party. I do not think these remarks have any bearing upon the position where the party has already appointed his own arbitrator and is making the appointment of an arbitrator on behalf of the other side in accordance with the terms in the submission. Paragraph 12 of the guarantee agreement states that if any party shall refuse or neglect to appoint an arbitrator within seven days after the one party shall have appointed an arbitrator and served a written notice upon the other party requiring him to appoint an arbitrator, then, upon such failure, the party making the request may appoint another arbitrator to act on behalf of the party so failing to appoint and the arbitrator so appointed may proceed and act in all respects as if he had been appointed by the person failing to make such appointment. In view of these terms I can see no reason why the appointment of Mr. Fairclough should be deemed to be incomplete or incomplete until respondent No. 2 received notice of it. If once it is conceded that Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. had the right under cl. 12 to appoint Mr. Fairclough then their communication to Mr. Fairclough of his appointment made the appointment effective from the time the communication was made. This objection also is without substance. The next objection relates to the omission by the two arbitrators to appoint an umpire. The portion of cl. 12 of the guarantee agreement dealing with appointment of umpire is as follows:

"The arbitrators shall within three days after their appointment and before entering upon the business of the said reference appoint an umpire in writing to whom the matters in dispute shall be referred. If the arbitrators disagree and if they fail to appoint an umpire within the said period then the Chairman or the acting Chairman for the time being of the Karachi Chamber of Commerce shall appoint the said umpire. The arbitrators and umpire acting under these presents shall have all the powers conferred by the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899 or any statutory modification thereof for the time being in force and these presents shall be deemed to be a submission to arbitration within the provisions of the said Act."

It is plain that the functions of the arbitrators were not solely to appoint an umpire or third arbitrator to whose sole arbitration the matters in dispute should then be referred without the arbitrators having considered them. The words "to whom the matter should then be referred" only mean that the umpire is to be an umpire in the matters which have been referred to the arbitrators. The ordinary meaning of the word "umpire" is a person who is to decide upon disagreement. There is nothing whatever to support the further suggestion made that the umpire was to be a third arbitrator sitting with and having the same powers as the other arbitrators. It is true that the arbitrators omitted to make an appointment of an umpire as they were required to do within three days by the terms of cl. 12 and in fact they made no appointment at all. It is not very easy to understand what is meant by the words "if the arbitrators disagree and if they fail to appoint an umpire within the said period." For respondent No. 2 it is urged that the disagreement contemplated is disagreement as to the person to be appointed as umpire. For Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co, it is urged that the disagreement must be a disagreement on the matters referred for arbitration. The use of the word "and" between the portion dealing with disagreement and that dealing with failure to appoint an umpire does suggest that the two matters are to be considered distinct. If it was only intended to provide for failure to appoint an umpire either by disagreement or by neglect of the arbitrators, then, it would be sufficient to say: "If they fail to appoint an umpire within the said period then, &c," and to omit altogether the words "If the arbitrators disagree, &c."

But even if the contention of respondent No. 2 set out in the above paragraph is accepted, the question remains whether the failure by the arbitrators to appoint an umpire amounts to legal misconduct such as to vitiate the whole award. Reliance has been placed upon two English cases, Bright v. Durnell (2) and Bates v. Townley (3). The second of these cases does not appear to be in point. It was a case where the reference was to three arbitrators, one chosen by each party, and the third to be chosen by the two so appointed. It was held that as the third arbitrator had not been duly appointed the award was bad. In the first case, Bright v. Durnell (2), the two arbitrators did not appoint an umpire as they were required to do by the terms of the submission and the Court held that it had no jurisdiction to compel the arbitrators to make an appointment of an umpire. In a Calcutta case, Chooni Lal v. Madhoram (4), it was held relying upon the both Bright v. Durnell (2) and Bates v. Townley (3) that where the terms of the reference provided for the appointment of an umpire before the arbitrators entered upon the reference then until the umpire is appointed the reference could not proceed. In this case the reference was made under rules relating to arbitration made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, and in a later case, The Bombay Co., Ltd. v. National Jute Mills Co. Ltd. (5) it was held that under the same rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce although they required an umpire to be nominated before the arbitrators entered upon the reference yet the omission to so nominate an umpire would not be a ground for setting aside the award having regard to a rule which provided that no award should be set aside by reason or on account of any informality, omission or delay or error in the proceedings or any misconduct short of collusion or fraud on the part of the arbitrators. In view of this later case the authority in Chooni Lal v. Madhoram (4) must be regarded as considerably weakened.

It is true that the Amending Act of 1934 to the English Arbitration Act lays down that in an arbitration agreement, unless the contrary intention is expressed therein, if reference is to two arbitrators, the two arbitrators shall appoint an umpire immediately after they are themselves appointed. And no doubt a rule requiring the umpire to be appointed before the arbitrators enter upon the reference is a sound rule tending to minimize the possibility of later disagreement as to the person to be appointed as umpire. In a case where the arbitrators disagreed on the matters referred to them, and the necessity for umpire became established it may well be that the omission of the arbitrators to appoint an umpire before they entered upon the submission would be fatal to the whole proceedings. But when, as in the present case, no disagreement between the arbitrators occurred, it is difficult to see why the omission of the arbitrators to provide for a contingency, which in fact did not arise, should vitiate their proceedings. Even on the interpretation urged by respondent No. 2, I think the direction to appoint an umpire should be regarded as directory and not as mandatory. I hold that in the present case the omission to make the appointment is not a defect amounting to legal misconduct on the part of the arbitrators and sufficient to vitiate the award made.

(4) 36 C 388; 1 Ind. Cas. 391; 13 O W N 297.

The next objection raised is that matters referred to arbitration include certain contracts between Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. and Dwarkadas Assandas which were not within the scope of the guarantee agreement. I am referred to the agreement marked by the arbitrators as document No. 7 dated July 25, 1939, referred to in the letter of August 14, by which Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. agreed to store on behalf of Dwarkadas Assandas under certain conditions a part of the sugar of contract No. 3 which had arrived at Karachi. Although this agreement bears the signature of respondent No. 2 as guaranteeing this agreement it is claimed that as the agreement itself contains no submission clause it was outside the scope of the arbitration. But the original contract made on February 4, 1939 (marked 3), to which the agreement marked 7 refers, expressly provides for warehousing the goods by Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. on the buyer's account and risk. The agreement No. 7 therefore is merely an amplification of the terms of the contract No. 3 to which respondent No. 2 is also guarantor and which admittedly is within the scope of the guarantee agreement. Any dispute or claim under agreement No. 7 is really a dispute or claim under the contract No. 3 and is a matter which under the guarantee agreement was to be referred to arbitration.

Lastly, it is urged that after Dwarkadas Assandas were adjudicated insolvents Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. were bound to call upon respondent No. 2 to fulfil all the contracts of Dwarkadas Assandas and that arbitration could not be held until respondent No. 2 failed to take up those contracts. It has not been suggested that respondent No. 2 upon the claim being made from him by Messrs. Louis Dreyfus & Co. took up this position. On the contrary, it is not disputed that he did nothing at all. If respondent No. 2 wished to claim that he was entitled to take up the contracts, goods of which had not yet arrived, on the due dates, and that the matter could not yet be adjudicated upon by the arbitrators, it was open to him to have claimed this before the arbitrators. Respondent No. 1 in their letter to respondent No. 2 of August 14, stated definitely that they had cancelled the contracts with Dwarkadas Assandas by reason of his insolvency. Any question as to the propriety of this course and the liability of respondent No. 2 under the guarantee were questions for the arbitrators to decide. If respondent No. 2 did not choose to put forward his contentions before the arbitrators he cannot now plead that the award is bad because the arbitrators have not accepted a position which was not placed before them.

All the objections raised in my opinion are without substance and I order the objections to be dismissed. Respondent No. 2 must bear costs of respondents No. 1 in these proceedings.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 745

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act (VI of 1908), ss 46, 47—Mortgage in violation of s. 46—Validity—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20 (2)—Receipt of usufruct during possession as trespasser—Whether gives fresh start of limitation—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Plaint—Amendment of at second appeal—Amendment altering nature of suit, cannot be allowed

Where a mortgage has been entered into in violation of s. 46, Chota Nag. Ten. Act it cannot under that section or s. 47 form the basis of a valid decree for sale and the fact that the land subsequent to the mortgage ceases to be raiya will not validate a transaction regarding the land which was previously invalid.

The enjoyment of the usufruct of the property by the plaintiff year by year does not give him a fresh start for limitation for a suit to recover the money. 144 Ind. Cas. 439 (1), distinguished, 57 Ind. Cas. 76 (7), Pichandi v. Kandesami (8) and Venkaji Babaji Naik v. Shidremapa Balapa Desai (9), relied on.

[Case-law referred to.]

The plaintiff cannot be allowed in second appeal to amend his plaint by asking to be treated as a person who has by prescription acquired an absolute title as owner instead of as mortgagee, as originally alleged, with a prayer to be restored to possession of the house, since such an amendment would alter the character of the suit.

A. from a decision of the Additional Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, dated June 1, 1938.

Mr. K. K. Banarji, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. C. Sinha and S. C. Chakravarty, for the Respondents.

Rowland, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff who brought on April 25, 1936, a suit to recover principal Rs. 250 and interest Rs. 225 due on a mortgage bond secured on a house situated in cadastral survey plot No. 1055, in Khata No. 32 in village Lohardaga, district Ranchi. The mortgage bond was executed on December 22, 1911, by Sheotahal Ram, ancestor of the defendants Nos. 1 to 9 in favour of Banshi Sahu, the father of defendants Nos. 10 and 11. The mortgagee was put in possession of the property hypothecated of which he was under the document to remain in possession for three years after which the mortgagor was to be entitled to redeem. It was further stipulated that the mortgagee would continue in possession until redemption and in case of dispossession there was a covenant to repay the money with interest at 15 per cent. per annum. The mortgagee assigned his interest by sale-deed dated February 10, 1916 to Mohan Lal, the father of the plaintiff. Thereafter the plaintiff remained in possession of the house until 1930 when the defendants 1st party dispossessed him. The sons of Banshi Sahu have not contested the suit but the other defendants raised various objections to the claim, one was that by oral agreement the plaintiff was allowed to remain in possession and the usufruct of the property was to be set off against both principal and interest as a result of which the debt has been extinguished. This defence was negatived by the Courts. Another defence taken was that the plaintiff was dispossessed in 1917 or 1918 and that the suit was barred by time whether regarded as a mortgage suit or as a suit for recovery of money on the personal covenant to repay. The Courts have found the facts otherwise holding that dispossession of the plaintiff by the defendants took place in 1930 that is just within the period of six years before the institution of the suit. A third objection was that the mortgage was a transaction contrary to s. 46 of the Chota Nag. Ten. Act and as such was void either at the outset or, at any rate, after five years. Therefore it was said that limitation to recover the money ran from either 1914, the date on which the mortgage money was made repayable by the bond or from 1916 if it be assumed that the possession of the plaintiff as mortgagee was valid for five years. Sections 46 and 47 are a bar to the plaintiff obtaining a mortgage decree for sale of the property and the period of six years' limitation calculated either from 1914 or 1916 bars the relief of the money-decree on the basis of the personal covenant. This defence was accepted by the Courts below who have dismissed the suit, the view taken being that the suit should have been brought within six years from December 22, 1916 and that the plaintiff could not take advantage of his subsequent possession of the property because it was that of a trespasser. The Additional Judicial Commissioner thought that s. 20 (2) of the Lim. Act could not avail the appellant because the receipt by him of the usufruct of the property was not as mortgagee in possession but as a trespasser. It is this finding of the Courts below which is assailed on appeal.

Assuming, it is said, that the plaintiff was a trespasser in possession it is contended that by holding possession for 12 years adversely to the true owner he acquired a title as claimed by him, namely, the status of a lawful mortgagee. In support of the contention reliance is placed on some observations of Macpherson, J. in Abdul Jabbar Khan v. Gulab Khan (1). It was there said that the mortgagee begins to prescribe from the date of the mortgage and if he holds adverse possession as such for the statutory period, the raiyat can only recover possession by redeeming him. That observation was in the nature of an obiter dictum, for in the case before him which was resisted by the defendant on the ground that he had been in possession not as a mortgagee but as a raiyat it was held that in fact the defendant had been in adverse possession of an interest as raiyat. There are decisions of other High Courts in which a person in possession as a mortgagee under a mortgage inviolate by statute has been held to have prescribed and obtained by lapse of time the limited right of a mortgagee. It was so held in Sontayana Gopala Dasu v. Inapatalupula Rami (2) and in Ramchandra Venkaji Naik v. Kallu Deoji Despande (3), in a suit to redeem where the defendant held under an invalid mortgage for over 12 years and set up an absolute title it was held that he could prescribe only for the limited interest of a mortgagee in possession. On the other hand, doubt has been expressed in this Court whether such a limited interest as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee can be created by prescription. In Sheikh Bhukhan Mian v. Srimati Radhika Kumari Debi (4) the question was not expressly decided but both Wort, A. O. J. and Manohar Lal J. inclined to the opinion that this limited interest could not accrue by adverse possession. In Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venka'esh Despande (5) the question arose whether tenants claiming a permanent tenancy in service watan lands on the strength of a lease contrary to the prohibition in Bombay Act III of 1874 against alienation by a watandar had, by adverse possession established a right to a permanent tenancy. Sir John Edge in delivering the judgment of their Lordships said, without expressly deciding the point, that "They are constrained to say that it is somewhat difficult to see how a stranger to a watan can acquire a title by adverse possession for 12 years of lands, the alienation of which was, in the interests of the state, prohibited."

Again in Srinathi Dairasikhamani Ponnambala Desikar v. Periyann Chetti (6) the question was raised but not decided. But the decided cases mainly deal with the position in which the true owner seeks to redeem or to eject a person in possession under an invalid mortgage. In the present case the position is changed because the defendants who are the true owners have succeeded in recovering possession of the mortgaged property. Hence it is not necessary for us to decide what would have been the position had the present plaintiff been in possession and in the situation of a defendant to a suit of that nature. The point which we have to decide is whether limitation for the suit instituted by him which is to recover his mortgage money is to run from 1916 at latest or from 1930, the date on which he lost possession. The position seems analogous to that in Krishnaji Sakharam Despande v. Kashim (7). Here a mortgage of watan lands was by statute permissible so far as it affected the life interest of the grantor but beyond that it was not valid so as to affect the interest of his successor. A suit was brought by the successor to recover possession of the property and he succeeded on the finding that the mortgagee was, since the death of his mortgagor, a trespasser. The latter then sued to recover his money and he sought to date limitation for the suit from the date when he was dispossessed of the land treating the receipt of the rent or produce of the land as a payment within the meaning of s. 20 (2) of the Indian Lim. Act giving a fresh start to limitation. It was held that time ran against him from the date of the death of his mortgagor on which date the mortgage as such came to an end. His possession thereafter "was the possession of a trespasser claiming a limited interest in the property as a mortgagee, but not the possession of a mortgagee". A similar view was taken in Pichandi v. Kandasami (8) and in Venkaji Babaji Naik v. Shidramapa Balapa Desai (9). That being so we are unable to hold that the enjoyment of the usufruct of the property by the plaintiff year by year gave him a fresh start for limitation for a suit to recover the money. On that finding the claim to a money decree fails:

As to the alternative claim for a mortgage decree Mr. K. K. Banarji for the appellant did not feel himself in a position to press it and said he would be content if his client got a money decree but it may be pointed out that the mortgage having been entered into in violation of s. 46 of the Oota Nag. Ten. Act could not, under that section or s. 47, form the basis of a valid decree for sale. It is true that the land (and house) now in suit has ceased to be raiya land and its status is chhaparbandi. But the change took place apparently about 1926 and will not validate a transaction regarding the land which was previously invalid. It was faintly contended that if relief under the bond could not be given to the plaintiff he might be permitted to amend his pleading and asked to be treated as a person who has by prescription acquired an absolute title as owner. For this purpose he might be permitted to amend his plaint by adding a prayer to be restored to possession of the house. I do not think that at this late stage the plaintiff can be allowed to make such an amendment which would alter the character of the suit

KO PA TU—APPELLANT

AZIMULLA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS
Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 23—Contract to transfer property to another in consideration of latter's giving false evidence on behalf of former—Legality—Contract illegal—Illegality not pleaded—If should be enforced.

Courts should not enforce illegal contracts even if the illegality has not been pleaded by the defendant. Alice Mary Hill v. William Clarke (1), Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co. (2) and Gedge v. Royal-Exchange Assurance Corporation (3), relied on.

Where one person enters into agreement with another person to transfer certain property to him on the latter's agreeing to give false evidence on behalf of the former the agreement is void as the consideration for the agreement is illegal and opposed to public policy.

S. A. from the decree of the District Court, Pegu, dated December 7, 1938.

Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Appellant.

Dr. Ba Han, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—Towards the end of 1934, an Indian called Kalu died leaving a considerable amount of property. After his death, litigation arose over his estate between his Burmese wife, Ma Sein Khin, and his Indian heirs. The Indian heirs sought the assistance of the plaintiff, Ko Pa Tu, as they were not well acquainted with the way in which to conduct suits, and they entered into an agreement with him (Ex. A), which is the basis of the suit out of which this appeal arises. In this document the heirs undertook to transfer out right to Ko Pa Tu certain immovable property provided he conducted properly for them everything concerned with the litigation in connection with the inheritance case. Ko Pa Tu brought a suit based on this document for specific performance of the contract or in default for compensation, Rs. 1,500. Various defences were taken, but the Sub-Divisional Judge came to the conclusion that the agreement had been entered into with the object of getting Ko Pa Tu to give evidence on behalf of the heirs, which was opposed to public policy and therefore he held the agreement to be void. The Sub-Divisional Judge considered that the plaintiff was entitled to some compensation in respect of what he had done for Kalu's Indian heirs and so he awarded him Rs. 500 and costs, against them. Ko Pa Tu appealed against the decree dismissing the greater part of his suit and the defendants filed a cross-objection with regard to the decree for Rs. 500. The learned District Judge agreed with the Sub-Divisional Court that the agreement was void as opposed to public policy, but he set aside the decree for Rs. 500 on the ground that no specific claim had been made in the plaint for remuneration for general services rendered.

The plaintiff, Ko Pa Tu, comes to this Court in second appeal. The main ground urged by Mr. P. K. Basu on behalf of the appellant is that the Judges of the lower Courts ought not to have made out a new case for the respondents which was not taken in the written statements. The important paragraph of the written statement of defendants Nos. 1 to 10 is No. 3, which I reproduce:

"That as regards para. 4 of the plaint these defendants admit execution of the agreement, but submit that as the plaintiff, who was a witness in the suit by Daw Nyein May against these defendants in the District Court of Pegu unduly influenced them to execute the said agreement they had to sign it against their will and consent in order to protect their interest in the said suit. Thus as they were unduly influenced to execute the agreement it is not enforceable against them."

Other defences were also taken but they are not material to this point. When evidence was led, the defendants did not strictly conform to this portion of their written statement. The case they put forward was that Ko Pa Tu intimated to them that Ma Nyein May had promised to give him Rs. 1,000 if he gave evidence in her favour, but that if the Indian heirs would give him the land which he worked he would give evidence favourable to them and so they executed the agreement (Ex. A).

It will be noticed that para. 3 of the written statement already referred to is rather vague, but that it does make reference to the fact that they executed it because the plaintiff was a witness in the suit and they wanted to protect their interest in their suit. The plaintiff did not ask for further particulars with reference to this defence. If he had done so, the defendants would have put their defence more clearly. It will be seen that when the plaintiff was cross-examined he was asked whether it was true that Ex. A had been executed by the Indian heirs as a reward to him for giving evidence against Ma Nyein May. From this it is clear that the defendants did put forward this defence before the plaintiff's witnesses were examined and before they themselves gave evidence. I can find nothing in the record tending to show that the plaintiff ever raised any objection to the reception of this evidence which was tendered by the defendants to establish this portion of their defence. In such circumstances, it seems very doubtful whether the plaintiff should not be permitted to say that this defence should be disallowed because it was not originally mentioned with sufficient clarity in the pleadings.

There is another aspect of this matter. It is a general principle that Courts should not enforce illegal contracts even if the illegality has not been pleaded by the defendant. In Alice Mary Hill v. William Clarke (1), it was held that where an agreement was on the face of it a perfectly legal agreement, and although no plea had been raised by the defendant as to the illegality of the consideration, yet no decree should be passed on it when it was established that the consideration of the agreement was illegal. In Scott v. Brown, Doering, McNab & Co. (2), Lindiey, L. J. said:

"Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. This old and well-known legal maxim is founded in good sense, and expresses a clear and well-recognized legal principle, which is not confined to indictable offences. No Court ought to enforce an illegal contract or allow itself to be made the instrument of enforcing obligations alleged to arise out of a contract or transaction which is illegal, if the illegality is duly brought to the notice of the Court, and if the person invoking the aid of the Court is himself implicated in the illegality. It matters not whether the defendant has pleaded the illegality or whether he has not. If the evidence adduced by the plaintiff proves the illegality the Court ought not to assist him."

In Gedge v. Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation (3), Kennedy, J. followed the case which I have just referred to and refused to enforce an agreement which was illegal, although the illegality of it had not been pleaded. In the present case it appears from the plaintiff's own evidence in the former case (Ex. 1), which he admitted, and from the circumstances which he admitted, that the agreement (Ex. A) was entered into with the object of obtaining Ko Pa Tu's evidence in the case which had been brought against the Indian heirs by Ma Nyein May. In the particular circumstances a strong inference arises that the evidence which was to be given would be false evidence. When these facts, were brought to the notice of the Courts, it seems to me that they were amply justified in disallowing plaintiff's claim on the ground that the agreement was void, although this particular plea had not been taken in the written statements. On these two grounds I am not prepared to uphold Mr. Basu's contention that the decisions of the lower Courts should be upset because they did not proceed directly from the pleadings.

It remains to consider whether on the evidence the Courts were justified in coming to the conclusion that the agreement was void owing to the nature of the consideration. (After considering evidence his Lordship concluded.) In view of the evidence and the circumstances, I cannot see any good grounds for coming to the conclusion that both the lower Courts were wrong in holding that the real consideration for the agreement (Ex. A) was the undertaking of Ko Pa Tu to come over to the side of the Indian heirs to give evidence, apparently false evidence, on their behalf. It seems to me that the consideration for the agreement was certainly opposed to public policy and that it was moreover illegal, and I agree that no decree should be passed on the basis of the suit agreement. For the reasons which I have given I dismiss this appeal with costs.

District Board in question are concerned does not justify the dismissal of the suit for the recovery of a certain sum alleged to be due from the defendant as "tax on circumstances and property" for a certain number of years. The provisions laid down in ss. 128 and 131 of the U. P. District Boards Act make it perfectly clear that the Judge is not right in adverting to these considerations and in basing his judgment upon them.

The tax on "circumstances and property" which the District Board imposes is not income-tax. The residence within the rural area is by itself sufficient to bring a person within the purview of this tax. The imposition of such tax upon a person who pays income-tax, does not therefore amount to second assessment.

The mere fact that the Forest Research Institute is a department administered by the Govt. of India does not exclude the land covered by the Forest Research Institute from the territories for the time being administered by the Local Govt. of the United Provinces.

C. R. against the decree of the Small Cause Court, Dehra Dun, dated June 5, 1936.

Mr. Benod Behari Lal, for the Applicant.
Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

Verma, J.—This is a petition in revision by the plaintiff against a decree of the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Dehra Dun. The suit was for the recovery of a total sum of Rs. 547-6-0, alleged to be due from the defendant as "tax on circumstances and property" for a certain number of years. The defendant raised various pleas in defence, but we are concerned with only two of them, namely, (1) that the defendant "did not come within the purview of s. 114, cl. (a), District Boards Amendment Act," and (2) that, at any rate, a portion of the claim was barred by time. The learned Judge has dismissed the entire suit.

The learned Judge has held in favour of the plaintiff that the defendant assessee, residing as he does within the "rural areas" in question, is not entitled to say that he is outside the purview of s. 114 (a), U. P. District Boards Act (X of 1922). He has however, dismissed the suit because, to put it briefly, in his opinion the tax is unjust and would operate harshly, so far, at any rate, as Govt. servants residing only for certain periods within the jurisdiction of the District Board in question are concerned. We are unable to agree with the learned Judge that such consideration can justify the dismissal of the suit. The provisions laid down in ss. 128 and 131 of the Act make it perfectly clear that the learned Judge was not right in adverting to these considerations and in basing his judgment upon them. Another reason given by the learned Judge for holding in favour of the defendant and dismissing the suit is that the defendant pays income-tax and is "therefore free from a second assessment." This view is clearly erroneous. The learned Judge is not right in thinking that the tax on "circumstances and property" which the District Board imposes is income-tax. No question of a second assessment arises.

The previous sanction of the Governor-General, as required by sub-s. 3 of s. 80-A, Govt. of India Act, then in force, was obtained to the passing of the U. P. District Boards Act (X of 1922). That being so, the Local Govt. was entitled to enact the sections which authorize the imposition of taxes by the District Boards. Section 108, U. P. District Boards Act, runs as follows:

"With the previous sanction of the Local Govt. a Board may, by notification, impose and may in like manner abolish or alter the rate of either or both of the following taxes: (a) a local rate under s. 3, U. P. Local Rates Act, 1914, as modified by this Act; (b) a tax on persons assessed according to their circumstances and property (hereinafter referred to as the 'tax on circumstances and property') in accordance with s. 114:

Provided that a Board shall not effect an increase in the amount of the local rate in force at the commencement of this Act unless a tax on circumstances and property has been imposed under cl. (b)."

The relevant portion of s. 114 may also be quoted:

"The power of a Board to impose a tax on circumstances and property shall be subject to the following conditions and restrictions, namely, (a) the tax may be imposed on any person residing or carrying on business in the rural area, provided that such person has so resided or carried on business for a total period of at least six months in the year under assessment."

It is perfectly clear therefore that the District Board was authorized in law to impose a tax on persons residing in the rural area assessed according to their circumstances and property. The argument of Mr. Banerji who appears for the defendant-respondent, is that the area covered by the Forest Research Institute at Dehra Dun, within which area the defendant resides, is not within the rural area and is therefore outside the jurisdiction of the District Board. He refers to s. 1 (2) of the Act which lays down that the Act extends to the territories for the time being administered by the Local Govt. of the United Provinces and urges that the Forest Research Institute is outside such territories. He is unable however to place any materials whatsoever before us which would justify such a conclusion. All that he is in a position to say in support of his argument is that the Forest Research Institute is a department administered by the Govt. of India. That may be so, but it does not follow from that circumstance that the land covered by the Forest Research Institute is excluded from the territories for the time being administered by the Local Govt. of the United Provinces. The areas which are excluded from the operation of the U. P. District Boards Act are mentioned in the Act itself in the definition of the expression "rural" area which is given in s. 3 (10) and is as follows:

"Rural area means the area of a district excluding every Municipality as defined in the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916 and every cantonment as defined in the Cantonments Act, 1910."

This argument of the learned Counsel therefore is without force. The second contention raised by the learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent is that mere residence in the rural area is not sufficient to make a person liable to pay the tax. This contention also is clearly not well-founded as the very words of cl. (a) of s. 114 of the Act clearly show. It may also be pointed out that in the year 1932 Govt. acting under the powers conferred on them by s. 124 (3) of the Act, had issued G. O. No. 2341/X-409 dated November 10, 1932, by which they had exempted from the payment of the tax on circumstances and property all Govt. servants who had resided in their official capacity in the rural area within the jurisdiction of any District Board for a period of less than six months of the year of assessment. That also indicates that residence within the rural area is by itself sufficient to bring a person within the purview of the powers conferred on District Boards to impose the tax. We have therefore come to the conclusion that the decision of the Court below holding that the defendant is not liable to pay the tax is erroneous. The learned Counsel appearing for the plaintiff-applicant has however not been able to show that the decision of the Court below that the claim for all tax due before March 30, 1933 is time-barred, is incorrect. The learned Judge is clearly right in arriving at that conclusion.

For the reasons given above, we allow this application in revision, set aside the decree of the Court of Small Causes and remand the case to that Court for the determination of the amount due to the plaintiff in accordance with the observations made above. In view of the fact that the District Board included in its claim tax for a period which was clearly beyond limitation, we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 14—Decree dissolving marriage passed by District Judge and confirmed by High Court—Application for custody of child—Forum—Practice—Expunging remarks from judgment—Duty of Judge when commenting on conduct of party.

Judges, when commenting on the conduct of parties and others, should be very careful to use sober, restrained language. A passage in the judgment which is not necessary to the conclusion of the Judge, nor necessary to his argument, which militates seriously against party's earning a living in his profession should be expunged.

Where a decree for dissolution of marriage is passed by a District Judge and confirmed by the High Court, the High Court has no jurisdiction to hear an application for the custody of the child or arrears of maintenance. The jurisdiction to entertain such application lies in the District Judge. 31 Ind. Cas. 331 (1), relied on.

Matri. Ref. and C. Misc. for confirmation of decree nisi granted by the District Judge, Delhi, dated May 25, 1938.

Mr. Kartar Singh, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. F. Rahman, for Respondent No. 1.

Order.—On May 25, 1939, the District Judge of Delhi granted a decree dissolving the marriage between Philip and Gladys Hardless. This decree was confirmed by a Full Bench of this Court on July 7, 1939. Mr. Hardless, the petitioner, alleged that his wife had committed adultery with an unknown European and also with Mohammad Habib, a cook. Mrs. Hardless confessed to the adultery with the European and the learned District Judge based his decree on this admission. He found that adultery with Mohammad Habib was not proved. Mr. Hardless has appealed seeking that the High Court should declare that it is proved that his wife committed adultery with Mohammad Habib. He also seeks that sentences in the judgment reflecting on his character should be expunged. He also prays for custody of the child of the marriage, Raymond. Mrs. Hardless has put in a petition for arrears of maintenance for the child.

The parties were married in 1932 and Raymond was born in 1933. In 1934 Mrs. Hardless went to England. Shortly before her return at the beginning of the cold weather, Mohammad Habib was engaged by Mr. Hardless as cook. The parties lived together in Delhi till April 1935, when they went to Waltair in Southern India, Mohammad Habib being dismissed at the time they left Delhi. At the end of the hot weather in 1935, the Hardlesses returned to Delhi, travelling via Calcutta where they stayed with Mrs. Gregory, aunt of Mrs. Hardless. The original intention had been to stay only for a day or so and this is what Mr. Hardless did; but Mrs. Hardless saying that Raymond was tired and peevish did not accompany her husband and stayed on in Calcutta for about three weeks. Mohammad Habib was then employed as cook by Mrs. Gregory. Shortly after Mrs. Hardless left for Delhi, he also came to Delhi and after some time obtained employment with Mr. Davidson, Manager of Messrs. Cooke and Kelvey.

In April 1936 Mrs. Hardless became seriously ill and was admitted to the Hindu Rao Hospital at Delhi. While there she confessed to her husband that she had committed adultery with an European from Rawalpindi, whose name she refused to disclose. On June 26, 1936, Mr. Hardless dined with Mr. Cannham, Manager of Manton & Co., whose premises were next door to those of Cooke and Kelvey. Mr. Davidson had meanwhile been succeeded at Cooke and Kelvey by Mr. Binns who had kept Mohammad Habib as cook. The premises had a common staircase and Mr. Hardless saw Mohammad Habib stumbling down the stairs. Next morning he went to Cooke and Kelvey's godown where he found Mohammad Habib and took from him a bundle of letters. This was resented by Mr. Binns, there was some sort of a scuffle; and the papers were thrown to the ground. Mr. Hardless went outside to explain to Mr. Binns and on his return most of the papers had been burnt. This is the statement of Mr. Hardless supported more or less by Mr. Cannham, Mr. Binns and one Shimbhu Lal. The same morning, according to the petitioner, Mohammad Habib left Delhi for Calcutta, sending a telegram to Mrs. Hardless on the way.

A little later, early in July, Mr. Hardless, at his wife's request, took from the hospital a suit-case which his wife had borrowed from and wished to return to a Mrs. Barrow. In the pocket of the suit-case Mr. Hardless found some other documents which will be noticed later. (After examining evidence regarding alleged adultery with Mohammad Habib, their Lordships proceeded further.)

Obviously, taking all this evidence at its best, it falls very far short of establishing the charge made by the petitioner. We entirely agree with the learned District Judge that the petitioner's charge that his wife had committed adultery with Mohammad Habib is not proved. In his judgment the learned District Judge said:

"Are we then to accept the statement of Mr. Hardless as gospel truth and to condemn his wife forever? The evidence on the record and the behaviour of Mr. Hardless in Court lead me to the irresistible conclusion that he is a person of unbalanced mind; quarrelsome disposition and highly suspicious nature. He magnifies trifling incidents into serious affronts, and it is extremely unwise to accept anything from his lips unless it is fully corroborated by independent evidence."

Mr. Hardless seeks that this passage be expunged. This course is not opposed on behalf of Mrs. Hardless. The passage is not necessary to the conclusion of the learned District Judge; it is not even necessary to his argument. Mr. Hardless is a hand-writing expert and this passage might be cited against him every time he appeared to give evidence in Court. The expression "unbalanced mind" would militate seriously against his earning a living in his profession. For these reasons we direct that the passage be expunged, remarking that Judges, when commenting on the conduct of parties and others, should be very careful to use sober, restrained language. Mr. Hardless also sought custody of his child. A preliminary objection was taken by Mrs. Hardless's Counsel, Mr. Fazal Rahman, that we had no jurisdiction to entertain this petition. After some discussion it was practically admitted that this objection was well-founded. Section 44, Divorce Act, lays down:

"The High Court after a decree absolute for dissolution of marriage or a decree of nullity of marriage, and the District Court after a decree for dissolution of marriage or of nullity of marriage has been confirmed, may upon application by petition for the purpose, make from time to time all such orders and provisions, with respect to the custody, maintenance and education of the minor children"

Section 16 of the Act lays down that every decree for a dissolution of marriage made by a High Court shall in the first instance be a decree nisi to be made absolute after a certain period. This refers to suits tried in the High Court where the decree nisi is generally made absolute after six months by the same Judge who heard the suit. On the other hand, s. 17 of the Act lays down that every decree for a dissolution of marriage made by a District Judge shall be subject to confirmation by the High Court, such confirmation being by a Bench of three Judges. Thus, the distinction is laid down; a decree by a District Judge being confirmed in the High Court; a decree nisi made by a High Court Judge being made absolute. Hence, according to the language of s. 44 we have no jurisdiction to hear this petition, the jurisdiction lying in the present case with the District Judge. This view is supported by authority: see M. Wallace v. A. Wallace (1), which dealt with an application for alimony. In similar circumstances the Bombay High Court held that the Court which had heard the original suit should hear the application. The learned Chief Justice said:

"The decree for dissolution was not a decree absolute under s. 16 of the Act upon a decree nisi which could only be passed by the High Court, but it was a decree confirming the Divisional Judge's decree for dissolution under s. 17. It is therefore clear we think that the Court which is empowered to make the order either for alimony or for the maintenance and education of the children is in this case the Court of the Divisional Judge and not the High Court."

For the same reasons, Mrs. Hardless's application for arrears of maintenance lies in the first instance to the District Judge. We assess the costs of these two days' hearing in the High Court at Rs. 150 to be paid into Court by Mr. Hardless within one month.

RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 92, Para. 4—Subrogation—Person allowed by mortgagee to redeem mortgage in part—If can claim right of subrogation—S. 92, whether retrospective.

Paragraph 4 of s. 92, T. P. Act, does not make any exception in favour of a person who has been allowed by the mortgagee to redeem the mortgage in part. Such a person cannot, therefore, claim the right of subrogation. 1 Ind. Cas. 913 (2), relied on, 35 Ind. Cas. 732 (1), held no longer good law.

Section 92, T. P. Act has retrospective effect. 171 Ind. Cas. 153 (3), followed.

F. A. from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Muzaffarnagar, dated August 30, 1935.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondent.

Verma, J.—The appellant, Mangal Sen, was defendant No. 17 in the suit, which was for the enforcement of a mortgage of August 30, 1922 executed by three brothers, Chandu Lal, Nandan Lal and Bansil Lal in favour of the plaintiff-respondent. The appellant was impleaded as a defendant on the allegation that he was a subsequent purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property. The appellant's contention was that he had, after purchasing on April 20, 1933 a portion of the mortgaged property paid off a sum of Rs. 4,180 to Joti Prasad who held a prior mortgage of August 25, 1921 executed by Bansil Lal alone. The appellant asserted in his written statement in para. 1 of the "further pleas" that the plaintiff could not get the property purchased by the appellant sold in enforcement of his mortgage. In para. 2 he alleged that he was not a subsequent purchaser, nor was the property purchased by him liable to be sold for the satisfaction of the amount due to the plaintiff. In para. 3 he stated that, even if the plaintiff had a right to get the property sold, he could not be allowed to do so without payment of a sum of Rs. 4,180 and interest thereon to the appellant. In para. 5 it was averred that the property purchased by the appellant was not liable to be sold at the instance of the plaintiff and that the appellant had been improperly impleaded as a defendant. The plaintiff filed a replication and asserted that Mangal Sen and Joti Prasad were brothers and that Mangal Sen had not paid any money to Joti Prasad.

It was also pleaded that Mangal Sen could not acquire any right of subrogation by reason of the partial redemption set up by him. The Court below held that Mangal Sen had proved that he had paid the sum of Rs. 4,180 to Joti Prasad in discharge of a portion of the amount due to Joti Prasad, but that such partial redemption could not entitle Mangal Sen to the right of subrogation in view of the provision contained in para. 4 of s. 92, T. P. Act. It accordingly rejected the claim put forward by Mangal Sen. In this appeal the relief sought by the appellant is that this Court may declare that in respect of the property purchased by him the appellant was a prior mortgagee to the extent of Rs. 4,180. It is clear from the written statement and from the judgment of the learned Civil Judge that no pleading precisely similar to the relief now sought in appeal was really put forward in the Court below and, strictly speaking the appellant cannot complain against the Court below for not having considered a plea which he never put forward. But, apart from that, it seems to me that the decision of the Court below is right. The facts bearing on this question are these. One of the items of property mortgaged to Joti Prasad under the deed of August 25, 1921 executed in his favour by Bansi Lal, was "one share out of six shares" situated in a village called Pairi. In the mortgage of August 30, 1922, made by Bansi Lal, Naudan Lal and Chandu Lal in favour of the plaintiff-respondent, one of the items mortgaged was "three out of six shares" in that village Pairi. In execution of a simple money decree held by certain persons against the sons of Bansi Lal, who had died by this time, a portion of the property mortgaged to Joti Prasad was put up to sale and was purchased by the appellant on April 20, 1933.

The appellant alleges that on August 20, 1933 he paid a sum of Rs. 4,180 to his brother Joti Prasad, and obtained from him a receipt which he has produced. His contention is that Joti Prasad released the property purchased by the appellant from his security and that the appellant took possession of that property free of the encumbrance of Joti Prasad. He claims that as the result of this alleged payment to Joti Prasad he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of Joti Prasad and to be treated as a prior mortgagee to the extent of Rs. 4,180. It is common ground that this payment of Rs. 4,180 even if it was made by Mangal Sen to Joti Prasad, did not redeem the mortgage of August 25, 1921, in full. Mr. Panna Lal has relied on the case in Udit Narain Misir v. Ashrafi Lal (1). That case was decided long before the T. P. Act was amended and s. 92 was inserted in the Act. The learned Judges who decided that case did not agree with the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (2). It seems to me that the Legislature, when amending the T. P. Act in 1929, deliberately accepted the view of the Calcutta High Court in Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (2) and did not accept the view expressed by this Court in Udit Narain Misir v. Ashrafi Lal (1). The appellant's purchase and his alleged payment to Joti Prasad are of the year 1933, i. e., at a time when the

T. P. Act had been amended. Mr. Panna Lal argues however that the law as it stood on August 25, 1921, when the mortgage-deed in favour of Joti Prasad was executed, would govern the rights of his client. This contention is not, in my opinion, correct. It has been held in the Full Bench case in Hira Singh v. Jai Singh (3), that s. 92, T. P. Act, has retrospective effect.

Now, s. 92 of the Act is as follows :

"Any of the persons referred to in s. 91 (other than the mortgagor) and any co-mortgagor shall, on redeeming property subject to the mortgage, have, so far as regards redemption, foreclosure or sale of such property, the same rights as the mortgagee whose mortgage he redeems may have against the mortgagor or any other mortgagees.

The right conferred by this section is called the right of subrogation, and a person acquiring the same is said to be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagees whose mortgage he redeems.

A person who has advanced to a mortgagor money with which the mortgage has been redeemed shall be subrogated to the rights of the mortgagee whose mortgage has been redeemed, if the mortgagor has by a registered instrument agreed that such persons shall be subrogated.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to confer a right of subrogation on any person unless the mortgage in respect of which the right is claimed has been redeemed in full."

It seems to me that the language of the statute is perfectly plain and that on that language the appellant is not entitled to claim the right of subrogation, even if he made the alleged payment to his brother, Joti Prasad, which, in my opinion, is very doubtful. Mr. Panna Lal's argument is that when the appellant paid the sum of Rs. 4,180 to Joti Prasad and persuaded him to release the property purchased by the appellant, the integrity of Joti Prasad's mortgage was broken up and that, instead of one mortgage in favour of Joti Prasad, several mortgages came into existence, each existing over different items of the property originally mortgaged. He contends that in this view the alleged payment by the appellant to Joti Prasad of the amount which was agreed upon between him and Joti Prasad to be the proportionate amount due from the property purchased by him amounted to a redemption in full of the mortgage over the property purchased by the appellant which according to Mr. Panna Lal, came into existence at the time of the alleged payment by the appellant to Joti Prasad. In the first place, as I have already indicated, I am not satisfied that his story that he paid any money to his brother, Joti Prasad is true. But even if he did make the payment as alleged, in my judgment the contention of Mr. Panna Lal is not sound. If his argument is accepted, any purchaser of a portion of the mortgaged property or any co-mortgagor can, by colluding with the mortgagee, frustrate the object of the Legislature in enacting para. 4 of s. 92. It is noteworthy that that paragraph does not make any exception in favour of a person who has been allowed by the mortgagee to redeem the mortgage in part. It seems to me that if it had been the intention of the Legislature to make any such exception it would have said so. For the reasons given above, I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the Court below is correct.

Bennet, J.—I agree with what my learned brother has stated and I would like to add a few words. The claim of the appellant is based on the receipt printed on p. 47, Ex. F-3. This receipt is dated August 20, 1933 and is a receipt by Joti Prasad, son of Ude Ram to Mangal Sen, the son, of the same Ude Ram as the particulars which are given are similar in each case. It is admitted therefore that the receipt is by one brother to another. Mangal Sen gave evidence on p. 19 but he did not state that he had ever separated from his brother Joti Prasad. Five days after the date which this receipt bears, that is, on August 25, 1933, Joti Prasad brought a suit of which the plaint is on p. 48. This suit was for the enforcement of the simple mortgage dated August 25, 1921. The principal amount advanced on that mortgage was Rs. 1,852. Paragraph 10 set out that Mangal Sen had paid the rateable amount for Khewat No. 1 in Mohalla Bansi Lal in Mauza Pairi which he has purchased in auction sale. Paragraph 11 set out that the total due of principal and interest was Rs. 13,480 but the claim was only brought for Rs. 5,250. The plaintiff deducted not only the amount of Rs. 4,180 alleged to have been received from his brother Mangal Sen but he also remitted a further amount of Rs. 4,050. As the plaintiff evidently considered that it was not possible to realize more than Rs. 5,250 from the remaining property it is clear that he was not giving up anything by this transaction with his brother. It was a case in which the family could not realize much from the remaining property. Therefore it was obviously no loss to the plaintiff Joti Prasad to execute a nominal receipt in favour of his brother.

Now, when the appellant Mangal Sen filed his written statement on p. 12 he evidently had no books of account or memorandum to show that he had paid any amount to his brother Joti Prasad. He therefore put down the amount of Rs. 5,000 as the amount which he paid. This written statement was dated October 3, 1934. Subsequently when the record of the suit by Joti Prasad, Suit No. 51 of 1933 was examined it was found that para. 11 of the plaint stated that Rs. 4,180 had been received from Mangal Sen by Joti Prasad. The receipt Ex. F-3 was then produced in Court on November 22, 1934, and the written statement was amended by an order of November 14, 1934, by which the amount of Rs. 5,000 was corrected to Rs. 4,180 to make it agree with the plaint of Joti Prasad and the receipt then produced. It is also to be noted that the plaint of Joti Prasad did not allege that any receipt had been given. Such a receipt as Ex. F-3 could be manufactured at any time. Joti Prasad has not been produced as a witness to support the statement of Mangal Sen, nor have any books of account been produced to show that there was any such payment. In these circumstances it appears to me that the mere statement of Mangal Sen and the receipt signed by Joti Prasad are not sufficient to prove that there was any payment of Rs. 4,000. I may further note that what Mangal Sen said in evidence was that Rs. 4,000 was paid whereas the receipt says Rs. 4,180. The plaintiff had pleaded in replication that this transaction was an entirely fictitious transaction. For these reasons I think that no ground for a claim for subrogation does arise as there was in my opinion no payment by Mangal Sen, appellant, to his brother.

BHARAT BANDHU CHATTOPADHYA—
DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (III
1913, ss. 3 (1), 20—Order directing certain person to be added as parties—Their names not specified in order nor added in certificate—Whether makes them certificate-debtors.

An order merely directing the addition as parties of certain persons, whose names were not specified in the order, nor added in the certificate, cannot make these persons certificate-debtors within the meaning of s. 3 (1), Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act and their right does not, therefore, pass by the sale.

A. from appellate decree of the District Judge, Faridpur, dated April 27, 1937.

Messrs. Hiralal Chakravarti and Nirmal Ch. Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Mr. Apurbadhan Mookerjee, Dr. S. C. Basak and Mr. Rama P. Mookerjee, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 16 respectively.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This appeal is on behalf of defendant No. 1, and the suit was one for setting aside a sale of residuary Taluk No. 4335 standing in the name of Ram Narayan Chatterjee in the Faridpur Collectorate, held on November 30, 1934 for non-payment of arrears of cesses, under the Public Demands Recovery Act. There were prayers also for confirmation of plaintiffs' possession to the said taluk, and in the alternative for recovery of possession if defendant No. 1 be found to have taken possession. The trial Court dismissed the suit, on appeal the judgment was reversed and the plaintiff's suit decreed. It is against this decision that the present second appeal has been preferred. On hearing the learned Advocates on both sides it seems to me that this appeal cannot succeed. It appears from the records that the certificate that was filed on July 22, 1933 originally contained the names of four persons, to wit (1) Kula Chandra Chatterji, (2) Ashutosh Chatterji, (3) Mohima Charan Chatterji and (4) Kazi Abdul Aziz; of these only Ashutosh was alive, and the rest were dead at the time when the certificate was filed. Ashutosh paid up his dues in proper time, and this is clear from the order dated January 17, 1934. After that it appears that the record-keeper supplied the names of some other persons, who were interested in the taluk, including that of Provat Chandra Dutt, the father of the present plaintiffs, and an order was passed that the names of these persons should be added as certificate-debtors. As a matter of fact the names were not added in the certificate, which remained unaltered as before. The peon reported that Provat was dead, and on August 11, 1934 another order was passed that the names of the heirs of Provati as supplied by the petition would be added and notice under s. 7 issued.

Apart from the irregularities in the service of notice, which have been pointed by the Court of Appeal below, it seems clear, that the names of the plaintiffs were not added as certificate-debtors, although a notice was issued in their names. In my opinion, under s. 20, Public Demands Recovery Act, all that vests in the purchaser is the right, title and interest of the certificate-debtor at the time of the sale. The names of the present plaintiffs never appeared as certificate-debtors in the certificate that was filed, and consequently their rights did not pass by the sale. Mr. Chakravarty has drawn our attention to the definition of a certificate-debtor as given in s. (3), cl. (1) of the Act. There it is stated that certificate-debtor means the person named as debtor in a certificate filed under the Act, and includes any person whose name is substituted or added as debtor by the certificate officer. Here the names of the plaintiffs were not in the certificate originally, nor were they subsequently added. In my opinion an order merely directing the addition as parties of certain persons, whose names were not specified in the order, nor added in the certificate, cannot make these persons certificate-debtors within the meaning of the section. The result is that the appeal fails. The cross-objection filed by defendant No. 15 is allowed and the order for costs passed against them by the Court of Appeal below is set aside. We direct the parties to bear their costs throughout.

Principal and agent—Interest—Agent, when liable to pay, on sums due from him to principal—Handwriting—Inference—Document appearing to be in handwriting of certain person—Such person must explain it—No explanation but evasive answers—Court can infer that document was in his handwriting.

No interest is payable by an agent in respect of money received by him on his principal's behalf, except under some contract express or implied, or where there has been some default on his part, such as a dealing with the money in breach of duty, or a failure to pay it over at the principal's request, in which cases interest is payable from the date of default. F. As. from the decision of the Sub-Judge, Aligarh, dated January 19, 1933.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and S. B. L. Gaur, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gopi Nath Kunzru and B. S. Darbari, for the Respondent.

Verma, J.—The suit which has given rise to these appeals by the defendant was one for accounts by a principal against his agent and for the recovery of the amount found due on the accounts being rendered. The preliminary decree was passed on January 19, 1933 and the appellant was ordered to render accounts to the plaintiff-respondent from September 11, 1915, to August 14, 1930. A Commissioner was appointed and, after going through the accounts and hearing the parties at length, he reported to the Court that a certain sum of money was recoverable by the plaintiff from the defendant. He further expressed the view that the defendant was liable to pay interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. Both parties took objections to this report. The learned Civil Judge has accepted some of the objections of the plaintiff and has rejected all the objections of the defendant except in certain minor matters. The result has been that the decree passed by the learned Civil Judge is for an amount larger than the amount found by the Commissioner. The defendant has filed two appeals, F. A. No. 45 of 1933 being against the preliminary decree and F. A. No. 530 of 1933 being against the final decree.

Learned Counsel appearing for the defendant-appellant has confined himself to the appeal against the final decree and has raised four points, three being with regard to specific items allowed by the Court below against the recommendation of the Commissioner and the fourth being with regard to the interest allowed. The first item challenged by learned Counsel is an item described in the Commissioner's report, as well as in the judgment of the Court below, as item No. 18 "about miscellaneous deposit of tenants, Rs. 2,265-8 0." The Commissioner had reported against the plaintiff's claim under this head, but the Court below accepting the objection of the plaintiff, has allowed a portion of this amount, namely Rs. 2,056-8-0. The claim was based on a document described as Ex. 274. The appellant has not had this paper translated and printed, but the contents of this document are to be found in the Commissioner's report at p. 45 of the paper book. We have also examined the original. When the defendant was confronted with this document he made this statement: "I do not know whether Ex.....274..... is in my handwriting." The writing on the face of it appears to be that of the defendant and it was for the defendant to explain this document and the entries to be found in it. Instead of offering any explanation, the defendant chose to take shelter behind the evasive reply that he did not know whether the document was in his handwriting. In our opinion, the Court below was right in inferring that the document was in the defendant's handwriting and in holding that it was for the defendant to explain it. There being no explanation forthcoming on behalf of the defendant, the decision of the Court below on this point is clearly right.

The next item questioned is what is described as item No. 8 in the Commissioner's report as well as in the judgment of the Court below. The item is one of Rs. 3,385-14-0 and is said to consist of certain sums which were payable by the defendant to the plaintiff on account of certain transactions of leases and sub-leases. Learned Counsel has questioned two of the sub-items which go to make up the total of Rs. 3,385-14-0. The first one that he has questioned is in connexion with a tenant called Tika Motia and amounts to Rs. 397-8-0. The Commissioner had reduced the claim under this head to Rs. 277-8-0 on the ground that the defendant was dismissed in 1337-Fasli and the rent of Rabi 1337 must therefore be deducted "because it may or may not have been realized." The Court below has pointed out that the Commissioner was wrong in thinking that the defendant was dismissed in 1337. It is common ground that the dismissal took place on August 14, 1930. The Fasli year 1337 came to an end on June 30, 1930. The position thus was that either the defendant had realized the rent as it fell due and became payable during the currency of the agricultural year, or by his neglect allowed it to fall into arrear. As soon as the Fasli year 1338 began on July 1, 1930, the rent of Rabi 1337 became an arrear. In either case the defendant was liable to pay the amount to the plaintiff. The decision of the Court below is thus clearly right. The second sub-item with regard to which the learned Counsel for the appellant has addressed us is the one which is dealt with by the Commissioner under the heading "No. 3 Bada C. Rs. 876-2-3" (p. 35 of our paper book). The point raised by learned Counsel is that the Commissioner as well as the learned Civil Judge have erred in not deducting the occupancy rent from what has been described as 'sub-tenancy rent.' But the Commissioner has pointed out that "the occupancy rent of this khata has been regularly credited up to the end of the lease," and the learned Judge has agreed with that finding of the Commissioner. We see no reason to differ from the finding of the Court below on this point.

The third item that has been dealt with by the learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant is item No. 9 in the Commissioner's report as well as in the judgment of the learned Judge. It is stated to be 'one of Rs. 2,232 as rent of non-occupancy tenants.' It appears that the appellant in his account books had two columns showing the rents of the tenants, viz. col. 6 and col. 7. The case of the plaintiff was that the rent entered in col. 6 was the real rent and that receipts were issued, suits were filed and siyahas were entered in accordance with the entries in this column, and that the amounts entered by the defendant in col. 7 were fictitious which the defendant had been fraudulently entering in the books to defraud the plaintiff. The defendant, on the other hand, contended that the amounts entered in col. 7 represented the real rent and that those entered in col. 6 were fictitious. The explanation given by the defendant as to why he had a column containing fictitious entries at all was that the plaintiff wanted to exchange his villages with another zamindar and with that end in view he got fictitious and exaggerated rents entered and kabuliyats executed in order to show that his property was of larger value than it really was. This explanation was not accepted by the Commissioner. But the Commissioner adverted to certain circumstances and stated that he was inclined "to the contention of the defendant." The learned Judge dealt with the point involved in this item when discussing item No. 7 and also in his judgment under item No. 9. Having considered the matter carefully, we have come to the conclusion that the decision of the learned Judge on this point is correct and that the Commissioner had erred.

The last point urged is as to interest. The first argument is that no interest should have been allowed and reliance has been placed on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bengal Nagpur Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji (1), and on the decision of this Court in Lalman v. Chintamani (2). It seems to us however that the contention of the learned Counsel is not well-founded. The case before their Lordships of the Privy Council was one in which there was a contract between the parties to the effect that the plaintiffs would execute certain work for the defendants and the defendants would pay for that work. Certain rates for calculating the price of the work had originally been mentioned, but subsequently by consent of parties those rates had been abandoned. No fresh rates were fixed, but the plaintiffs were allowed to carry on the work and to complete it. In these circumstances, their Lordships held in agreement with the Courts below that the amount should be determined on the basis of fair and reasonable rates, and the amount arrived at by the High Court not having been challenged, was accepted by their Lordships. The Courts in India had allowed interest to the plaintiffs on the amount thus arrived at. Their Lordships held that no interest should have been allowed. On the facts found, it was clear that there had been no wrongful detention by the defendant of the amount payable to the plaintiffs. The defendant company had not been guilty of any tortuous act and the case rested entirely on contract. Similarly, in Lalman v. Chintamani (2), it was found that the defendant had not been guilty of any improper detention and had actually been acquitted in the criminal proceedings launched by the plaintiff against him. In these circumstances it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest either under s. 73, Contract Act, or under the Interest Act (No. XXXII of 1839). The case before us however is entirely different. The defendant has not only been guilty of improper and dishonest detention of the plaintiff's money but has also been guilty of fraud. The law applicable to cases of this character is, in our opinion, correctly summarized in para. 423 of Vol. I of Edn. 2 of Halsbury's Laws of England. It is as follows:

"No interest is payable by an agent in respect of money received by him on his principal's behalf, except under some contract express or implied, or where there has been some default on his part, such as a dealing with the money in breach of duty, or a failure to pay it over at the principal's request, in which cases interest is payable from the date of default. The agent must also pay interest in all cases of fraud, and on all bribes and secret profits received by him during his agency".

In the case before us, several of the circumstances mentioned in this paragraph are present. The Court below was therefore right in allowing interest to the plaintiff. The second point raised by learned Counsel for the appellant with regard to interest is that the rate, namely, 12 per cent. per annum, is excessive. The majority of the items involved in the claim however were on account of realizations made from the tenants of the plaintiff's zamindari. If these sums had not been paid by the tenants and had fallen into arrears, the plaintiff would under the revenue law have been entitled to interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. We are therefore not prepared to accept the argument of the learned Counsel with regard to the rate of interest in respect of such items. But there are two items, namely Items Nos. 1 and 2, which are on account of bricks and lime and the construction of some building. We have come to the conclusion that the interest on the two sums of money found due under these two heads should be reduced to 6 per cent. per annum. The total interest allowed by the Court below on these two items is Rs. 3,916-5-0. Calculating the interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, the interest allowable to the plaintiff will come to Rs. 1,973-2-6 only. Thus the amount decreed by the Court below on account of interest should be reduced by Rs. 1,973-2-6.

The result is that we allow First Appeal No. 530 of 1933 in part and in modification of the decree of the Court below grant to the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 22,489-14-9. Future interest on this amount from the date of the decree of the Court below, namely August 31, 1933, shall, as directed by the Court below, be allowed to the plaintiff at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Parties shall pay and receive costs throughout in proportion to success and failure. First Appeal No. 455 of 1933 is dismissed with costs.

LEACH, C. J., LAKSHMANA RAU AND

In re GURUSWAMI TEVAR AND OTHERS—ACCUSED.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 32—Conviction, when can be based on uncorroborated dying declaration.

There may not be corroboration of the nature contemplated by s. 157, Evi. Act, or matters provable under s. 158, and the only direct evidence may be a statement by the deceased made admissible by s. 32. It does not, however, necessarily follow that this evidence is insufficient to support a conviction. In such a case the surrounding circumstances will have an important bearing. The evidence of an accomplice is tainted, and s. 114, Evi. Act, (illus. b) says that the Court may presume that he is unworthy of credit unless corroborated, but a dying declaration is on a much higher plane and the Act places no such restriction on its acceptance. [p. 284, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule when a dying declaration should be accepted, beyond saying that each case must be decided in the light of the other facts and the surrounding circumstances, but if the Court, after taking everything into consideration, is convinced that the statement is true, it is its duty to convict, notwithstanding that there is no corroboration in the true sense. The Court must, of course, be fully convinced of the truth of the statement and naturally it could not be fully convinced if there were anything in the other evidence or in the surrounding circumstances to raise suspicion as to its credibility. Ref. T. and Cr. A. referred by the Sessions Court, Tinnevely Division, in Case No. 60 of 1939.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench

Burn and Mockett, JJ.—The appellants have been convicted of murder by the learned Sessions Judge of Tinnevely and appellants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 have been sentenced to death. Appellants Nos. 3 and 5 have been sentenced to transportation for life. The case is one of a simple nature but there is an important question of law involved. There is no doubt about the fact that, on the early morning of March 31, 1939, Nammalwar Naicker, a resident of the village of Kalugachalapuram, was attacked while he was on his way to the village of Mannagopalanaickenpatti. He was stabbed in 38 places and he died soon after midnight. The Sub-Assistant Surgeon (P. W. No. 1) who was in charge of the hospital at Ettiyapuram saw him at 1 p. m. and found 32 injuries on him, of which seven were penetrating wounds into the abdomen and one was a penetrating wound in the chest. This Sub-Assistant Surgeon was not able to do anything for the man beyond rendering first aid and then he sent him on to the Headquarters Hospital at Palamcottah. Another Sub-Assistant Surgeon (P. W. No. 2) made a post mortem examination on April 1, and then he found that there were in all 38 injuries. P. W. No. 1 expressed an opinion that the abdominal injuries inflicted upon Nammalwar Naicker would only prove fatal in the absence of medical or surgical treatment but that, if treated properly, there was "every chance" of the injured man escaping death. This is a very remarkable opinion and, in our opinion, it is worthless. The post mortem certificate shows that two of the stabs not only penetrated the abdomen but punctured the intestines, so that faeces escaped into the peritoneal cavity. It is quite clear that Nammalwar Naicker was fatally wounded by persons who meant to kill him, and that he never had any chance of recovery.

There are no eye-witnesses in the case, the assassins having been careful to choose a time when there was nobody in sight. The case against the appellants rests almost entirely on statements said to have been made by Nammalwar Naicker himself before he died. Three witnesses P. Ws. Nos. 6, 7 and 8, say that they were in the vicinity and that they were attracted to the spot by the cries of Nammalwar Naicker but they do not corroborate him any further than by saying that the number of persons whom they saw running away was five. As the learned Sessions Judge had said, there are four statements of Nammalwar Naicker to be considered. In the first place, P. Ws. Nos. 6, 7 and 8 say that as soon as they reached him, he told them the names and fathers' names of the five persons who had attacked him. Those are the names of the present five accused persons. P. W. No. 6 ran to the village and informed P. W. No. 12, the brother-in-law of the deceased. P. Ws. Nos. 12, 13 and others went to the place where Nammalwar Naicker was lying stabbed. Nammalwar Naicker is said to have told those witnesses also the names and fathers' names of these five appellants. P. W. No. 12 went and fetched the Village Munsif, P. W. No. 21. He reached the scene of the murder at about 8 o'clock in the morning and he took down a statement from Nammalwar Naicker which is Ex. K. In that also the names and the fathers' names of the five appellants are found. Finally at about 2-30 p. m. on the same day in the hospital at Ettiyapuram a dying declaration (Ex. A) was recorded by a Special Magistrate (P. W. No. 4). In that again the deceased has stated that these five persons attacked him and stabbed him.

Learned Counsel for the appellants has attempted to show that the statement (Ex. K) recorded by the Village Munsif was a concoction but he has not adduced any convincing arguments in support of that proposition. It was proved that there was enmity between Nammalwar Naicker and the accused, but the accused were not the only members of the Marava caste with whom the deceased was at enmity. P. Ws. Nos. 6, 7 and 8 belong to a different village, Mannagopalanaickenpatti, and no enmity whatever was even suggested between them and any of the accused. There is therefore no reason why these witnesses should say falsely that Nammalwar Naicker named these five persons as his assailants. We can see no reason to believe that Ex. K was concocted.

The next contention of learned Counsel for the appellants is that Ex. K and Ex. A are widely discrepant. This contention is based upon the fact that in Ex. K, Nammalwar Naicker is recorded as having said that, when the five appellants approached him, appellant No. 1 came and gave him a stab was a soori (dagger) in the abdomen and afterwards the four persons joined together and stabbed him in the body. In Ex. A however he has given a much more detailed account in which he says that Guruswami Tevar (accused No. 1) stabbed him not only in the abdomen but in several other places before any of the other accused stabbed him at all. He also says that accused Nos. 3 and 5 held his legs while the other three accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4 were stabbing him. We are not able to see that there is any discrepancy in these statements. In Ex. K the wounded man has stated that all the five persons joined together and stabbed him. This cannot be said to be an inaccurate description of the occurrence. If five persons jointly attack a man and two of them hold him, while the others stab him, he cannot be considered to be an untruthful person if he says that they all five stabbed him. The only real inconsistency that is apparent between Ex. K and Ex. A is with regard to a knife. In Ex. K, Nammalwar Naicker, said: "When I warded off the soori which Kandiah Thevan had, it fell down." In Ex. A he said: "When they stabbed me, I wrested the soori from Krishna Thevan." Now, Krishna Thevan is the name of accused No. 2 and Kandiah Thevan is the name of accused No. 4. In Ex. K, Nammalwar Naicker does not mention that he wrested a knife from accused No. 2 and in Ex. A he does not mention that, while he was warding off a blow aimed at him by accused No. 4, accused No. 4's knife fell down. These however cannot be considered as contradictions. The learned Public Prosecutor points out that at the scene of offence two knives were actually found, one in a sheath and one bare. Apart from this, there is no discrepancy, and both these statements show that Nammalwar Naicker charged these five persons with the attack upon him. We cannot find also, as already stated, any reason to disbelieve P. Ws. Nos. 6, 7 and 8 and P. Ws. Nos. 12 and 13, and their evidence makes it clear that from the very beginning, within a few seconds after he was attacked, Nammalwar Naicker has been alleging that these five appellants are responsible for his death.

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge therefore that the statements of Nammalwar Naicker have been truthfully described by the witnesses and in the documents, Exs. K and A. The next question, as the learned Sessions Judge has pointed out, is whether Nammalwar Naicker's statements are true. As to this, the plea of the accused was that the whole case was a concoction against them by P. W. No. 12 and the Village Munsif, on account of the enmity due to faction between the Thevars (Maravars) and the Naickers. Accused No. 3 alleged that he had been sick for the last eight months and therefore confined to his house. He repeats this statement in his appeal petition from jail. None of the accused offered any explanation beyond this bare denial and allegation that the case was concocted on account of faction and none of them cited any witnesses. As already observed, there was enmity between the deceased and the Maravars of Kalugalachapuram, but there was no special enmity between the deceased and these five appellants, and, as the learned Sessions Judge has observed, there was not the slightest reason shown why Nammalwar Naicker, within a few seconds of being stabbed, should have made up his mind to exculpate the persons who really attacked him, and to accuse falsely five persons who had nothing whatever to do with the matter. It was sunrise when this attack on Nammalwar Naicker took place. He was stabbed in 38 places, which must have taken some time, so that he had ample opportunity to see who were the persons who were stabbing him. We can find no reason for doubting the truth of the statements made by Nammalwar Naicker. If they are believed, the appellants are clearly guilty of his murder.

The point of law which arises is whether, on the statements of a deceased person such as these, uncorroborated, (except as to the number of the assailants), the appellants can be convicted of murder. The weight of authority appears to be in favour of the view that a conviction based wholly upon the statements of a deceased person is not illegal. This was assumed in the case of Sanjappa (R. T. No. 112 of 1937) in which the judgment was pronounced by one of us, but in that case the judgment in Cr. Apps. Nos. 653 of 1935 and 148 of 1936 was not brought to our notice. Those appeals were heard by Sir Owen Beasley, C. J. and Gentle, J. and the judgment contains passages indicating that a dying declaration uncorroborated by other evidence could not justify a conviction. The learned Judge says:

"Whilst the contents of a dying declaration can be relied upon as evidence for the prosecution, in the absence of any corroboration of its contents, it is clear from the authorities and the text books that it is dangerous, imprudent and opposed to practice to do so, even when no justifiable criticisms can be levelled against the declaration."

In the case in question the learned Judge showed that the dying declaration upon which the prosecution relied was unreliable; but the observations are of a general nature. And in another place the learned Judge has said:

"Apart from the dangerous practice of relying upon the uncorroborated contents of a dying declaration alone"

Referring to these passages, my learned brothers Mockett and Horwill, JJ. have stated in R. T. No. 5 of 1937:

"Even a dying declaration, as has been held by this High Court, is very dangerous material by itself on which to found a conviction.

These dicta are clearly at variance with the principle on which R. T. No. 112 of 1937 was decided. The learned Public Prosecutor has stated that, so far as he is aware, there has not been any case in which it has been held that a dying declaration, proved to have been made and with no reason shown for distrusting its truth, was insufficient to warrant a conviction. Such a case as Gula Ella Reddi v. Emperor (1) is no exception to this rule, for, there the dying declaration was found to be unsatisfactory in itself. On the other hand, there are many cases in which dying declarations alone have been relied upon as justifying conviction. The learned Public Prosecutor brought to our notice the views expressed in Emperor v. Akbaralli Karimbhai (2), Naimuddi Biswas v. Emperor (3) and King v. Maung Po Thi (4). It is clear that by the provisions of s. 32 (1), Evi. Act, the statements made by Nammalwar Naicker in this case are evidence. There are very good reasons for believing them to be true, and none for disbelieving them. With respect, we do not think we should be acting dangerously or imprudently, if relying on these statements we confirmed the convictions of the appellants in this case. As however there is a conflict between the decision in R. T. No. 112 of 1937 and the observations in Or. Apps. Nos. 653 of 1935 and 143 of 1936 with regard to the question whether statements made by a person who is dead, uncorroborated by any other evidence, can support a conviction, we order, under r. 2 of the Appellate Side Rules, that this matter be referred to a Full Bench. The records will be laid before His Lordship the Chief Justice.

Mr. E. R. Balakrishnan, for the Accused.
The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Leach, C. J.—In order to appreciate the question which has been referred it is necessary to state certain of the facts. The appellants have been convicted of murder. Appellants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 have been sentenced to death and appellants Nos. 3 and

5 to transportation for life. Between 5 and 6 o'clock on the morning of March 31, 1939, one Nammalwar Naicker was attacked by a band of men and received 38 injuries from which he died shortly after midnight. As the result of his cries three persons who were in the vicinity were attracted to the spot where the deceased was lying. They had not seen the assault, but they said that they had seen five persons running away. When these witnesses reached the deceased, he told them that he had been attacked by five men and gave their names and the names of their fathers. The names given were the names of the five appellants. One of these witnesses went and called the deceased's brother-in-law and another person, both of whom also gave evidence. These two witnesses went to the spot and the deceased informed them that the appellants were his assailants. The Village Munsif was called to the scene of the crime at about 8 A. M. and recorded a statement made by the deceased. In that statement also the deceased implicated the appellants. The deceased was removed to the hospital at Ettiyapuram and at about 2-30 P. M. his dying declaration was recorded by a Magistrate. In that statement the deceased again said that his assailants were the appellants. It was proved that there was enmity between the deceased and the appellants, who are of the Marava caste, but they were not the only members of that caste with whom he was at enmity. The question of law which arises is whether on the statements of a deceased person of the nature of those indicated without other testimony, except as to the number of the assailants, the appellants can be convicted of murder. The question has been referred to a Full Bench because the judgments of two Division Benches of this Court are in conflict. Neither of these judgments has been reported. The first of the two cases which have given rise to this reference is Or. App. No. 653 of 1935 which was decided by Beasley, C. J. and Gentle, J. The judgment was delivered by Gentle, J. who after quoting from Taylor on Evidence and referring to Emperor v. Akbarathi Karimbhai (2), In re Dabbukota (5) and Gula Ella Reddi v. Emperor (1), observed:

"Whilst the contents of a dying declaration can be relied upon as evidence for the prosecution, in the absence of any corroboration of its contents it is clear from the authorities and text books that it is dangerous, imprudent and opposed to practice to do so, even when no justifiable criticisms can be levelled against the declaration."

The judgment which is in conflict is the judgment in R. T. No. 112 of 1937, which was delivered by Burn, J. and in which I concurred. In that case, there was no corroboration of a dying declaration, but the facts were such that my learned brother and I had no hesitation in accepting it as reliable evidence and upheld the conviction of the accused. The question at issue has been fully argued before this Full Bench and I am unable to accept the observations which I have just quoted from the judgment of Gentle, J. as correctly stating the position. With great respect I regard the statement as being far too wide. Section 32, Evi. Act, says that statements, written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense which under the circumstances of the case appears to the Court unreasonable, are themselves relevant facts in certain specified cases. The first case specified is when the statement is made by a person as to the cause of his death or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death, where the cause of death comes into question. The section declares that such statements are relevant whether the person who made them was or was not, at the time when they were made, under expectation of death, and whatever may be the nature of the proceeding in which the cause of his death comes into question. Therefore, a statement made by a person who is dead as to the cause of his death is evidence notwithstanding that he was not under expectation of death when he made it. There are two other sections of the Evi. Act which may have important bearing in a case of this nature, namely, ss. 157 and 158. Section 157, says:

"In order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact, may be proved."

Section 158 is in these words:

"Whenever any statement, relevant under s. 32 of s. 33, is proved, all matters may be proved either in order to contradict or to corroborate it, or in order to impeach or confirm the credit of the person by whom it was made, which might have been proved if that person had been called as a witness and had denied upon cross-examination the truth of the matter suggested."

There may not be corroboration of the nature contemplated by s. 157 or matters provable under s. 158, and the only direct evidence may be a statement by the deceased made admissible by s. 32. It does not, however, necessarily follow that this evidence is insufficient to support a conviction. In such a case the surrounding circumstances will have an important bearing. The evidence of an accomplice is tainted, and s. 114, Evi. Act, (illustration b) says that the Court may presume that he is unworthy of credit unless corroborated, but a dying declaration is on a much higher plane and the Act places no such restriction on its acceptance. The reference which Gentle, J. made to Taylor on Evidence consisted of a quotation from s. 722 of 11th Edn. This section deals with dying declarations and the quotation was as follows:

"It should always be recollected that the accused has not the power of cross-examination, a power quite as essential to the eliciting of the truth as the obligation of an oath can be and that where a witness has not a deep sense of accountability to his maker, feelings of anger or revenge, or, in the case of mutual conflict, the natural desire of screening his own misconduct, may affect the accuracy of his statements, and give a false colouring to the whole transaction."

This, of course, may be the case, but I should regard a statement by a person who has received a mortal wound, made immediately after the injury was caused, as being of high probative value when it relates to the cause of the injury, unless there is some reason shown to doubt its truth. The probative value of a statement of a person who has been mortally injured, but made after a considerable interval, during which time he has been surrounded by his relatives and friends, is certainly much less, but here again it seems to me it may be accepted if it fits in with earlier statements made when he could not have been influenced and they are otherwise unimpeachable. In Emperor v. Akbaralli Karimbhai (2) Beaumont, C. J. observed:

"Generally speaking, and as a rule of prudence, I am of opinion that a declaration, relevant under s. 32, but not made by one in immediate expectation of death, and not made in the presence of the accused, ought not to be acted upon unless there is some reliable corroboration."

The learned Chief Justice however agreed that there is no rule which requires that a dying declaration should not be acted upon unless it is corroborated and he pointed out that the evidential value of a declaration relevant under s. 32 varies very much in accordance with the circumstances in which it is made. Here I respectfully agree, but I am not prepared to go so far as to say that a declaration relevant under s. 32, though not made in immediate expectation of death, and not made in the presence of the accused, necessarily requires corroboration.

In In re Dabbukota (5) it was said :

"It is to be remembered that though dying declarations are in some respects deserving of a degree of consideration and credence to which ordinary statements are not, they are not subject to the test of cross-examination and if not substantially borne out by independent evidence and the probabilities of the case, or admitted facts, are worth little or nothing."

By this I presume is meant there must be corroboration before a dying declaration can be accepted. I have said sufficient to indicate that this statement is far too sweeping and it is open to the further objection that it offends against the law of evidence in India. With regard to the case in Gula Ella Reddi v. Emperor (1) all that need be said is that the circumstances showed that it was unsafe to convict the accused on the bare dying declaration put in evidence in that case and naturally it was not accepted as being sufficient to prove the case for the Crown.

In my judgment it is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule when a dying declaration should be accepted, beyond saying that each case must be decided in the light of the other facts and the surrounding circumstances, but if the Court, after taking everything into consideration, is convinced that the statement is true, it is its duty to convict, notwithstanding that there is no corroboration in the true sense. The Court must, of course, be fully convinced of the truth of the statement and naturally it could not be fully convinced if there were anything in the other evidence or in the surrounding circumstances to raise suspicion as to its credibility. I would answer the reference in this sense.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 40 of 1938

Lala SUMER CHAND—DEFENDANT—

APPELLANT

PLAINTIFFS AND DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.
U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 111—

First suit filed within three months of Revenue Court's order but withdrawn with Court's permission—Second suit beyond three months of the order—If barred by time.

Where a previous suit under s. 111, U. P. Land Revenue Act filed within three months of the order of the Revenue Court is withdrawn with the permission of the Court, a second suit, even if filed beyond three months from the order of the Revenue Court is not time-barred. 21 Ind. Cas. 654 (2), 25 Ind. Cas. 188 (3), 132 Ind. Cas. 191 (4) and 98 Ind. Cas. 516 (5), doubted but followed.

L. P. A. against the decision of Allsop, J., in S. A. No. 154 of 1936, dated March 22, 1938.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Panna Lal and N. C. Shastri, for the Respondents.

Thom, C. J.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration of proprietary title. The appeal which is under the Letters Patent is against the order of a learned single Judge of this Court. The only question raised for decision in the appeal is as to whether the suit is time-barred. A suit was instituted following an order by the Revenue Court under s. 111, Land Revenue Act. The Revenue Court's order was passed on June 17, 1932. The plaintiffs instituted their suit in the Civil Court as required within three months. This suit however was withdrawn on September 7, 1933 with the permission of the Civil Court and the suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted on September 21, 1933, i. e. more than three months after the order of the Revenue Court. The defendant-appellant pleaded that the suit was time-barred. This plea was rejected and the suit was decreed. Upon this point the decision of the trial Court was upheld by the learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellate Court. An appeal against this decision has been dismissed by this Court. It was contended for the appellant that the suit was clearly barred in view of the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 2, Civil P. C. This Rule is as follows :

"In any fresh suit instituted on permission granted under the last preceding rule, the plaintiff shall be bound by the law of limitation in the same manner as if the first suit had not been instituted."

It was urged for the appellant that s. 111, sub-s. (b), Land Revenue Act, prescribed a period within which a suit in the Civil Court must be instituted following an order by the Collector directing such a suit to be filed and that if the suit was not brought within that period it was barred by limitation. It was contended that the bar operated despite the fact that a suit had been filed by the plaintiff within three months of the order of the Revenue Court, that suit being subsequently withdrawn. Whether a second suit following the withdrawal of the first suit filed within the period of three months of the order of the Revenue Court under s. 111, Land Revenue Act, and withdrawn with the Court's permission is time-barred is a question which has been considered by this Court in a number of cases. The earliest case is Banwari Lal v Gopy (1). In that case a learned single Judge of this Court held that if the second suit was instituted more than three months after the order of the Revenue Court it was barred by limitation. That decision however was overruled by a Bench of this Court in Randhir Singh v. Bhagwan Das (2). This latter case was decided in the year 1913. From 1913 onwards, this Court has consistently followed this decision. The decision was followed by a learned single Judge of this Court in Shaikh Muhammad v. Kadir Bux (3), and again by a Bench of this Court in Nageshwar Bharthi v. Ram Narain Bharthi (4), and in Darbari Singh v. Ram Murat Singh (5). The ground upon which the decisions in these cases have proceeded appears to have been that the second suit is not a fresh suit but really a continuation of the first. The first suit having been instituted within time, it was held that the second suit is not time-barred. The effect of the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 2, has not been exhaustively discussed in any of the decisions above referred to. Had we been interpreting for the first time these provisions in relation to suits under s. 111, Land Revenue Act, we should have held that a second suit filed after a first suit has been withdrawn and beyond the three months from the order of the Revenue Court was time-barred. We do not think that the second suit can be regarded in any sense of the term as a continuation of the first. A "fresh" suit in our view is not the continuation of an earlier suit. It is a separate and independent proceeding. If it is not a continuation of the first it is clearly time-barred. Section 111, sub-s. (b) of the Land Revenue Act, prescribes that a suit in the Civil Court for a declaration of proprietary title must be brought within three months of the order of the Revenue Court. If it is not brought within three months of the order of the Revenue Court this suit must fail. The period of three months referred to in s. 111, in our judgment, is a period of limitation. In this connection we would refer to the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Drigpal Singh v. Pancham Singh (6).

Had it not been for the long and consistent course of decisions covering the period from 1913 to date we should in the view we take of the law have allowed this appeal. We do not consider however that at this stage when the law on the point has been well-settled so far as this Court is concerned and when no doubt litigants have relied upon the interpretation which has been placed upon s. 111 by this Court we would be justified in overruling these earlier decisions. We do not apprehend that any great injustice would result from leaving the law as it stands. On the other hand, the overruling of the earlier decisions without doubt would result in injustice. This would be so, we are satisfied, so far as the respondents in the present appeal are concerned. On the principle of stare decisis we would not, in our judgment, be justified in reversing the order of the learned single Judge of this Court. In the result the appeal is dismissed. In all the circumstances we direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

—Sale under s. 14, when effected — Ten days' period under s. 14, whether absolute.

Section 33, Beng. Land Rev. Sales Act is not confined to sales by public auction under the Act, but also applies to a sale under s. 14 of the Act. But in order to attract the operation of s. 33 the suit must be one to annul the sale and this presupposes that the party suing is the defaulting co-sharer or any other person who derives his title from him. Where the plaintiff co-sharer impeaches the rights of other co-sharers to become purchasers by reason of the subsequent deposits they made, but wants at the same time that the sale should stand and stand entirely in his favour, it is really a suit by one purchaser against another for a declaration that he has a preferential title and does not fall within s. 33 and would lie in a Civil Court, quite apart from s. 33 for having a declaration that the plaintiff is the sole purchaser, and no title was vested in any of the other co-sharers by reason of the payments they made under s. 14. Gossain Chatturbhuj v. Ishkrimal (1), explained. 24 Ind. Cas. 276 (2), dissented from [p. 288, col. 2; p. 289, col. 1.]

It is certainly incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of, but it is not necessary, that the question of substantial injury must also be made a specific ground of appeal before the Commissioner. [p. 289, col. 1.]

When one sharer has paid the entire arrears due any other sharer or sharers cannot by subsequently paying the money, even within ten days, could rank as co-purchasers with him. As soon as the full amount of arrears is paid by one sharer, the offer made by the Collector must be deemed to be accepted, and the purchase becomes complete. That the subsequent payments were also made by recorded sharers within ten days cannot affect the position. 24 Ind. Cas 276 (2), relied on. Debi Prosad v. Aklo Koer (3), distinguished. [p. 290, col. 1.]

It cannot be said that a sale under s. 14 is really made by the Collector after the period of ten days has expired, and after all the moneys are put in. The sale as is effected by the first payment of the entire arrears. If there are no materials, upon which the Collector can find as to whether one payment is earlier than the other, the obvious course would be to regard these payments as simultaneous, and declare both of them as to be joint purchasers. [p. 290, col. 2.]

Per Rozburgh, J.—The effect of an annulment dealt with in s. 34 clearly contemplates restoration of the defaulter, assumed to be decree-holder, on certain terms and conditions. [p. 293, col. 1.]

The word 'sale' is used rather loosely in the Act. 'Sale' must necessarily include the whole procedure from issue of notices under ss. 5 and 6 up till the final completion of the 'sale' in its narrower sense as the corollary to 'purchase'. A 'sale' is conducted contrary to the provisions of the Act within the meaning of s. 33 if there is any defect in any of these proceedings, not merely for defect at the time of actual auction. [ibid.]

If the period of ten days in s. 14 expired on a holiday, the period is extended till the re-opening day. [p. 290, col. 2.]

Messrs. Gunada Ch. Sen, Hiralal Chakravarti and Rabindra Nath Bhattacharjee, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—The facts giving rise to this appeal may be shortly stated as follows: There is a revenue paying estate bearing Touzi No. 395 of the Alipore Collectorate which is owned jointly by several co-sharers. A number of separate accounts were opened in respect of the shares under the provisions of the Revenue Sale Laws, and we are concerned only with one of these separate accounts which is S. A No. 395/3. The owners of this separate account having made default in the payment of revenue, due in respect of the same, this share was put up to sale under s. 13, Act XI of 1859 on September 23, 1935. No bids were received on that date, and the Collector in exercise of his powers under s. 14 of the Act stopped the sale, and made a declaration that the entire estate would be sold, unless the other recorded sharer or sharers of the touzi would purchase the separate account, by paying the entire arrears due in respect of the same, within ten days from that date. Several co-sharers now came forward, and each one of them deposited the entire arrears due in respect of the separate account, which amounted to Rs. 482.

The plaintiff paid the money on September 25, 1935. Another co-sharer named Butto Kristo, who is defendant No. 3 paid the said sum on the day following, and lastly on October 14, 1935. Hemendra and Gouribala, who are defendants Nos. 1 and 2, each deposited in the Collectorate the sum of Rs. 482 by separate chalans. It may be stated here that the puja holidays set in before the expiry of the ten days, within which the arrears were to be paid, and the office re-opened on October 14, 1935, on which day the payments were made by defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The Collector by his order dated October 17, 1935, declared all the four persons to be purchasers of separate account 395/3 in equal shares, and the certificate of purchase was issued accordingly. The balance of the deposits made by all these four persons was directed to be refunded. The matter was then taken before the Commissioner, who affirmed the order of the Collector. The plaintiff whose deposit was earliest in point of time now commenced this suit, and he prayed for a declaration that he was the full 16 annas purchaser of the separate account under s. 14 of the Revenue Sale Law, and that the defendants could not be given any shares in respect of the same. There was also a prayer for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from taking possession of the property in accordance with the order of the Collector. Gouribala, defendant No. 2, was alleged to have transferred her interest to one Devendra who was made defendant No. 4 in this suit. The suit was resisted by defendants Nos. 1 and 4. Their contentions were mainly of a twofold character. The first contention was that the order of the Collector was right and the plaintiff by making the deposit earlier could not obtain any preferential title. It was said that all the recorded sharers, who deposited the money within ten days from the date of the declaration, would be entitled to rank as purchasers under s. 14 of Act XI of 1859. The second contention was that the plaintiff's suit was barred under s. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law.

The trial Court was of opinion that the payments made by Hemendra and Gouribala, were ineffectual, inasmuch as they were made after the period of ten days had expired, and it held that the intervening of the pūja vacation could not give them an extension of time on the analogy of s. 4, Lim. Act. The only payments that were made within time were those of the plaintiff and Butto Kristo, and as between them, the plaintiff's deposit was earlier, he was entitled to be declared the purchaser of the entire separate account. In this view of the case, the Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit. There was an appeal taken against this decision, by defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to the Court of Appeal below, and the Additional Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal reversed the judgment of the trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Subordinate Judge concurred in the view taken by the Munsif that as soon as the plaintiff made his payment, the purchase was complete and as there was nothing left for anyone else to buy the Collector was bound to recognize the plaintiff as the sole purchaser of the separate account. But he held nevertheless that the plaintiff could not succeed in the suit, which was one under s. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law as he had not fulfilled the conditions of that section. What the Subordinate Judge said is this: that in order that a Civil Court might annul a sale under s. 33, Revenue Sale Law, it was necessary to establish that the plaintiff had sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of, and the question of injury must have been taken specifically before the Commissioner in an appeal. As no such point was raised before the Commissioner, the suit was not maintainable under s. 33, Revenue Sale Law.

The propriety of this view has been challenged by Mr. Bose who appears on behalf of the appellant. Mr. Sen who appears for the respondent has besides inviting us to uphold the view of the Subordinate Judge attempted to support his decision on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any preferential right by reason of his earlier deposit, and that the co-sharers who deposited the full amount of arrears within ten days were entitled to be recognized as joint purchaser of the separate account. On the question as to whether s. 33, Act XI of 1859 is a bar to the present suit, I am of the opinion, that the view taken by the Subordinate Judge is wrong. First of all it is difficult to say that the present suit at all comes within the purview of s. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law. It may be assumed as was held by the majority of Judges in Gossain Chatturbhuj v. Ishrimal (1), that s. 33 of Act XI of 1859 is not confined to sales by public auction under the Act, but also applies to a sale under s. 14 of the Act. But in order to attract the operation of s. 33, the suit must be one to annul the sale, and this pre-supposes that the party suing is the defaulting co-sharer or any other person who derives his title from him. In Gossain Chatturbhuj v. Ishrimal (1), the plaintiff was the defaulting co-sharer himself whose application for exemption of his separate account from sale was refused and the share was put up to sale under s. 14 of the Revenue Sale Law. Here the plaintiff does not want the sale to be set aside. He indeed impeaches the rights of the defendants to become purchasers by reason of the subsequent deposits they made, but he wants at the same time that the sale should stand and stand entirely in his favour. It is really a suit by one purchaser against another for a declaration that he has a preferential title. If the plaintiff's contention is right that as soon as he paid the money he became the purchaser, there was nothing left which the defendants could buy, and the order of the Collector declaring them to be joint purchasers would be one without jurisdiction. Under these circumstances a suit would certainly lie in a Civil Court, quite apart from s. 33 of Act XI of 1859, for having a declaration that the plaintiff is the sole purchaser, and no title was vested in any of the other co-sharers by reason of the payments they made, under s. 14 of the Revenue Sale

Law. I am not unmindful of the fact that a contrary view has been taken by Coxe and Imam, JJ. in Bahuria Sambho Kuar v. Harihar Prasad (2) and it was held under somewhat similar circumstances that the suit would be governed by s. 33 of Act XI of 1859. With all respect to the learned Judges, I regret that I cannot accept their view as correct. Even if in that case, the claim of the plaintiff amounted to a virtual annulment of the sale in favour of the plaintiff in the suit yet the learned Judges overlooked the fact that the plaintiff in that suit was not the defaulting co-owner and what he demanded was not merely that the sale in favour of the defendant should stand cancelled, but that his own title as purchaser should be declared.

This declaration the Court cannot obviously grant under s. 33 of the Revenue Sale Law. It seems to me that the learned Judges misapplied the decision in Gossain Chaturbhuj v. Ishrimal (1), to the case before them, although the facts of the earlier case were quite dissimilar, the suit being instituted there by the defaulting co-sharer himself whose separate account was sold under s. 14 of the Act. Even if the suit is regarded as one coming within s. 33 of the Act XI of 1859, I do not think that the decision of the Court of Appeal below is correct. In this case the plaintiff's complaint is that the sale has been held in contravention of the provisions of s. 14 of the Revenue Sale Law, and this very point was declared and specified in the appeal before the Commissioner. It is certainly incumbent upon the plaintiff to establish that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of, but it is not necessary, as the lower Appellate Court thinks, that the question of substantial injury must also be made a specific ground of appeal before the Commissioner. Mr. Gunāda Charan Sen who appears for the respondent has fairly conceded that the Subordinate Judge was wrong on this point. He says however that there is neither any allegation nor any proof adduced by the plaintiff that he has sustained substantial injury. In the plaint there is a definite statement that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if the order of the Collector stands. Section 14, Revenue Sale Law, gives the co-sharer purchaser rights of an exceptional character. He gets a property which may be of considerable value for a trifling amount without any competition whatsoever. In this case the annual revenue payable in respect of S. A. No. 395/3 is said to be over Rs. 1,800 and the purchase was for Rs. 482 only. In these circumstances there would be no question that the plaintiff would suffer loss if the sale in favour of all the four persons is allowed to stand. I am of the opinion therefore that the decision of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported on the ground that the suit was not maintainable under s. 33 of Act XI of 1859.

There remains now for our consideration the other question raised by Mr. Sen, as to whether the plaintiff can be held to be the sole purchaser of the separate account by reason of his paying the arrears of revenue earlier than the other sharers. The question is not free from difficulty and the section itself is not quite clear on this point. When separate accounts are opened in respect of separate shares of a touzi and there is default in payment of Govt. revenue, s. 13 of the Revenue Sale Law provides that the share in respect of which the default has occurred will be put up to sale first. If however the highest offer made at the sale does not equal the amount of arrears due, then the whole estate becomes liable to be exposed to sale. Section 14 here introduces a provision the object of which obviously is to give the other co-sharers a chance of saving the estate by purchasing the share in arrears. The Collector, when he finds that the sale of the separate share did not receive sufficient bids, is to stop the sale and issue a declaration that the entire estate would be put up to sale at a future date unless the recorded sharer or sharers shall within ten days purchase the separate account in arrears by paying to Govt. the whole arrears due from such share. The declaration, it seems to me is in the nature of an offer, inviting the recorded sharers to come and purchase the separate account by paying only the arrears due, and the offer remains open for ten days only, after which the separate accounts are closed and the whole estate is notified for sale. The question arises as to what would happen if more than one recorded co-sharer pays the whole amount of arrears within the specified period. If there is a joint payment by more than one co-sharer, no difficulty arises, and they will certainly rank as joint purchasers. The same thing will also happen if payments are made by several co-sharers each of the whole amount but at one and the same time. But when one sharer has paid the entire arrears due I do not think that any other sharer or sharers by subsequently paying the money, even within ten days could rank as co-purchasers with him. According to the section the purchase is to be made by paying the arrears due. As soon as the full amount of arrears is paid by one sharer, the offer made by the Collector must be deemed to be accepted, and the purchase becomes complete. That the subsequent payments were also made by recorded sharers within ten days cannot in my opinion affect the position. The period of ten days laid down in the section prescribes the limit of time after which no payments could be received. But as soon as one payment is made within time which wipes out the arrears, the sale is complete, and no subsequent payment of the same amount by any other co-sharer can make him a purchaser of the share. On this point I think that the decision in Bahuria Sambho Kuar v. Harihar Prasad (2) referred to above, is perfectly correct. "It seems to me," thus observes Cox, J.,

"that the section was intended merely to give co-sharers a chance of saving the estate and to secure the payment of revenue, and was not at all intended to define the rights of the co-sharers inter se... As soon as the payment is made the purchase is complete and there is nothing left for anyone else to buy."

Mr. Sen has referred us to the decision in Debi Prasad v. Aklo Koer (3). In that case each of the three co-sharers, had paid the entire amount of arrears separately, and the Collector issued a certificate of sale jointly to them. The only question raised was as to whether the sharers were to get equal shares in the separate account sold, or their interests would be in proportion to their shares in the parent estate. This Court held that the presumption would be that the Collector took from each of the funds an equal share, and consequently they would have equal shares in the property. The particular question which has arisen here was not mooted in that case at all, and we do not know whether the payments were made there by all the co-shares simultaneously, or at different times. I cannot accept the argument of Mr. Sen that a sale under s. 14 is really made by the Collector after the period of ten days has expired, and after all the moneys are put in. The sale as I have said already, is effected by the first payment of the entire arrears. Of course this fact has to be ascertained by the Collector and he is to issue a certificate of sale after ascertaining who the purchaser is. Mr. Sen has also argued that numerous practical difficulties would arise if this view is taken; for, in many cases, it would be impossible to find out which deposit is earlier. I do not think that there is much substance in this contention. If there are no materials, upon which the Collector can find as to whether one payment is earlier than the other, the obvious course would be to regard these payments as simultaneous, and declare both of them as to be joint purchasers. In the present case however, it is not disputed that the plaintiff's payment was earliest in point of time, and in these circumstances I must hold that he is entitled to a declaration of his title to the 16 annas share of the separate account sold. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the trial Court restored. The plaintiff will be entitled to his costs against the contesting defendants in all the Courts.

Roxburgh, J.—This litigation arises out of a sale under the provisions of s. 14, Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859. Separate account No. 3 of estate No. 395 of the Ali-pore Collectorate was after the usual preliminaries put up for sale by the Collector on September 23, 1935, and there being no bidder, he proceeded under s. 14, stopping the same and declaring that the entire estate would be put up for sale unless (in the words of the section)

"the other recorded sharer or sharers, or one or more of them, shall within ten days purchase the share in arrear by paying to the Prov. Govt. the whole arrear due from such share."

The plaintiff being the proprietor of one separate account of the estate deposited this full amount on September 25; his brother, defendant No. 3, being owner of another such account, deposited the full amount on September 26, and defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 2 also holders of separate accounts each deposited the full amount on October 14, being the opening day after the pūja vacation. The vacation lasted from October 1 to 12, the 13th being a Sunday. The Collector gave a certificate, as required by s. 14, in the names of all the four depositors sharers for joint ownership of the purchased share, each having an equal interest. The plaintiff then brought this suit for a declaration that he was the sixteen annas purchaser of the separate account No. 393/3, for a declaration that the defendants had no right or no right had accrued to them therein, and that, if necessary, orders might be passed setting aside the auction sale in respect of that share made by the Collector in favour of the defendants; there was also a prayer for injunction and recovery of possession, and finally a prayer for a declaration that if it were held that the other defendants had purchased any interest on account of the deposit of money by them, then they were not entitled to more than a share in proportion to their interest in the parent estate. The trial Court held that the plaintiff became purchaser of the separate account by his deposit on September 25, and that the subsequent deposits by the other sharers gave them no interest; and also held that the provisions of s. 33, Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, had been complied with by the plaintiff. The lower Appellate Court agreed with the former finding, but held that as the plaintiff had not "declared and specified" his case of substantial injury before the Commissioner he had not complied with the provisions of s. 33, and hence his suit must fail. He therefore allowed the appeal and the plaintiff now appeals.

It may be noted at the outset that Mr. Sen appearing for respondents concedes that he cannot support the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on this last operative ground; he contends however that the Collector was right in allotting the separate account in equal shares to all the depositors and also that the plaintiff has failed to prove substantial injury in the present case and hence the suit must fail. The substantial questions for decision in the appeal are first the interpretation to be given to the words of s. 14, cited above, in reference to the declaration made by the Collector under the section, and secondly, whether s. 33 applies to the facts of this case.

Mr. Chakravarti appearing for the appellant supports the interpretation given by the lower Courts and also further contends that s. 33 has no application to the present case, and lastly that, if it applies, then he has complied with its provisions. The section has been considered in three cases, Debi Prosad v. Aklo Koer (3), Gossain Chatturbhuj v. Ishrimal (1) and Bahuria Sambhu Kuar v. Harihar Prasad (2). In the first case three sets of sharers had each deposited the whole arrear due, and the Collector had given them a certificate for joint ownership of the defaulting share. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he was entitled to a share in proportion to his share in the parent estate, and lost. There is nothing to show whether the amounts were deposited on the same or on different days, nor was there any contention that any one depositor had priority. Incidentally it may be noted that there was no question of annulment of the sale or of the matter of the applicability of s. 33.

In Gossain Chatturbhuj v. Ishrimal (1) the plaintiff was the owner of the defaulting share and clearly prayed for annulment; he made no claim as a purchaser by deposit under s. 14, but sued other sharers who had so purchased. The arrears had been deposited by some of these defendants on October 4, and by others on the 7th and the Collector had given them all a joint certificate under s. 14. The basis of the plaintiff's case was that he had deposited the arrears before the date of auction sale and that the whole proceedings of the Collector were invalid. No question arose there as between the purchasing defendants. It was held by Beverley, J. that s. 6 of the Act applied and that the plaintiff's deposit having been made after the last date of payment was ineffective, he further held that s. 33 applied to the case of such a sale under s. 14; Ameer Ali, J. held that the deposit was effective, but that s. 33 only applied to a case of an auction sale under the Act and not to one under s. 14. Petheram, J. to whom the case was referred agreed on both points with Beverley, J. In Bahuria Sambhu Kuar v. Harihar Prasad (2) defendant No. 1 was the first depositor of the entire arrears on the separate account, and the Collector had given him a certificate. It was found as a fact that defendant No. 1 was benamidar for defendant No. 2 who was the defaulting co-sharer. The plaintiff had deposited the entire arrear on the day after defendant No. 1 had done so, and he sued for recovery of possession of the whole share or in the alternative for a half-interest in it. The plaintiff succeeded in the trial Court. On appeal Coxe, J. was disposed to hold that although defendant No. 2 was the real purchaser, and although he was a sharer in the defaulting separate account, he was not debarred from taking advantage of the right to purchase given under s. 14, and he considered, but did not definitely decide, that the word 'other' in the phrase 'other recorded sharer or sharers' in s. 14 was a mere inadvertance. He held however that defendant No. 1 as the first depositor was the purchaser and that the Collector had therefore been right in recognizing him as purchaser, and that "as soon as the payment is made the purchase is complete and there is nothing left for anyone else to buy. The Collector is bound therefore in my opinion, to recognize the depositor who first pays the whole amount, or, if there are more depositors than one, to recognise as joint purchasers those whose payments first amounted to the total arrears due."

He then went on to refer to Gossain Chattrbhuj v. Ishrimal (1) and to approve the view that s. 22 applies to sales under s. 14, and to repudiate an argument that the sale to defendant No. 1 being a sale to a sharer in the defaulting separate account it was a nullity and that it was therefore unnecessary to annul it. Finally he dealt with a contention that the plaintiff did not want the sale annulled but merely that he might be declared the purchaser in these terms (at p. 1107*):

"To accept this contention would, in my opinion, be twisting the plain English of the Statute. The defendant has been formally declared the purchaser and the land has been delivered to his possession. To take it away from him and give it to the plaintiff would, in my opinion, be a manifest annulment of the sale, and a complete annulment if the whole were taken away from him, and an annulment pro tanto if a portion were taken."

He held therefore that as the plaintiff had suffered no injury, even if the purchase was bad as being made by a defaulting proprietor, s. 33 was fatal to his suit. In my opinion, though the words of s. 14 are not entirely free from ambiguity, the clear meaning is that, after the separate share has been put up for (auction) sale under s. 13 and a bid sufficient to pay the arrear has failed to materialize, the Collector is to stop the 'sale' and declare that the entire estate will be put up for sale at a future date unless the sharers specified in s. 14 exercise the right of pre-emption given to them, that is to say unless one of them or any group of them 'purchase the share in arrear by paying to the Prov. Govt. the whole arrear due from such share.' I agree therefore on this point with the view expressed by Coxe, J. in so far as there is in fact a 'purchase' by one sharer or a group of sharers jointly, but I would reserve judgment on the view expressed by the learned Judge that apparently sharers may come along independently in driblets within the ten days period and pay in odd amounts and that the Collector is to treat as purchasers all those who have paid in something contributing to an amount equal to the total arrear. The case under consideration then was one of full deposit by one depositor and it was not strictly necessary therein as it is also unnecessary here to decide this point. There is the same objection to this view of the section as to the view that it means as was apparently assumed in Debi Prosad v. Aklo Koer (3). For example, how is the Collector to allot shares to the respective contributors. If the framers had any idea that there was to be anything but one straightforward transaction of purchase by one sharer or several coming jointly and simultaneously it seems to me that they would have made provision for these matters. It seems to me that the condition in the statutory declaration under s. 14 must be interpreted as a statutory offer, as it were, to the privileged parties to come and purchase the property, the purchase to be made by depositing the whole arrear, and being completed by such deposit; independent deposits of smaller sums should be ineffective. However for the purposes of this case it is sufficient to hold that if the first comer is, as here, a depositor of the full arrear, then he becomes the purchaser and all subsequent depositors acquire no interest; the sale is complete by the first deposit, and thereafter there is nothing to sell. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in this case acquired nothing by their deposits.

It may be noted that the Board's Manual has at different times contained various instructions on how this point is to be interpreted, the present instruction in force is to follow the decision of Coxe, J., but with the qualification that where the whole amount is not paid by any one depositor, those depositors will be recognized as joint depositors whose payments first amount to not less than the total arrears due, provided that the payments are made on the same day, at whatever hour. I think however that the view expressed by me above will be found to be correct, and if sharers who cannot pay the full amount of the arrear wish to join with other sharers in the purchase they should do so before coming to pay in the amount of the arrear and they should themselves at the time of purchase claim the respective shares so jointly purchased.

We next come to consideration of s. 33 which lays down that no sale for arrears of revenue shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except on the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of the Act, and then only on proof that the plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of, and no such sale shall be annulled upon such ground unless such ground shall have been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner. In my opinion this is not a suit for annulment of a sale for arrears of revenue at all, in fact annulment of the sale would give no remedy to the plaintiff; its effect would be merely to restore the property to the defaulting co-sharer provided that the decree could be executed. As the defaulting proprietor is not a party to the suit a decree for annulment would probably remain ineffective. The effect of an annulment is dealt with in s. 34 of the Act which clearly contemplates restoration of the defaulter, assumed to be decree-holder, on certain terms and conditions. Assuming that such restoration were made it could not help any of the present parties. If the property were again put to sale after due notice it might be sold in auction to some outside bidder; and by no other procedure can there be a re-sale after annulment of a sale; the Court has no power to make a sale after annulment.

With all respect to the learned Judges who decide Bahuria Sambho Kuar v. Harihar Prasad (2) it must be stated that in referring to and relying on the case in Gossain Chatterbhui v. Ishrimal (1), they failed to appreciate the vast distinction between that case where the remedy sought was actual annulment, and the type of case where there is a dispute between rival purchasers. Some of the confusion is due to the fact that the word 'sale' is used rather loosely in the Act. 'Sale' must necessarily include the whole procedure from issue of notices under ss. 5 and 6 up till the final completion of the 'sale' in its narrower sense as the corollary to 'purchase.' A 'sale' is conducted contrary to the provisions of the Act within the meaning of s. 33 if there is any defect in any of these proceedings, not merely for defect at the time of actual auction. In s. 14 'sale' is used to refer to the 'auction sale,' while the verbal difficulty to some extent is surmounted by referring to the pre-emption procedure as 'purchase.' If the 'purchase' is completed the Collector is to give a certificate, and then the purchaser or purchasers shall have the same right as if the share had been purchased at the 'sale'; if the 'purchase' is not made, the entire estate is to be sold after notification and publication as required by s. 6. Now it is clear that s. 33 will apply to a sale made under the pre-emption provisions of s. 14 if there is any defect in the preliminaries, (though Ameer Ali, J. in Gossain Chatterbhui v. Ishrimal (1), held the contrary view). According to the majority view in that case had the plaintiff had a substantial point in respect of his deposit of the arrear after the last day of payment he could have succeeded. It is therefore correct to say in what may be called head-note form that 's. 33 applies to sales held under s. 14,' but that is quite a different matter from saying that it must apply to a case where the dispute is between rival purchasers neither of whom really wishes the sale to be annulled, where the dispute is merely as to the identity of the vendor and not as to the fact of sale. The learned Judge (Coxe, J.) having held that the sale was complete as soon as payment had been made of the full arrear by a qualified person and that the Collector was bound to recognize the depositor who first deposited the whole amount, it seems difficult to follow how he could then hold that it was twisting the plain English of the Statute to say that the plaintiff did not want the sale annulled. The dispute was wholly as to who was the first depositor; the plaintiff contended that defendant No. 1 of that case, being a benamidar for defendant No. 2, a sharer of the defaulting separate account, was not a person who in law could purchase the account. If the contention was accepted, then certainly defendant No. 1 was not a depositor at all under the section; the plaintiff was the first depositor, and according to the learned Judge's own view the purchase was complete when the plaintiff deposited the full amount, and he was merely asking in the suit for a declaration that the Collector was bound to recognize him, and give him the certificate.

It is to be noted that there is no provision in s. 14 for any declaration of purchase as there is in s. 22 in the case of a purchase at a public sale. In the latter case some formal declaration by the auctioneer is manifestly required. The declaration completes the sale, subject to the conditions as to payment of deposit, and of the full purchase price. In the case of public sales the certificate of sale is not given until after 60 days from the day of sale, or, where there is an appeal to the Commissioner for annulment of the sale which is not decided within the 60 days, then until after the conclusion of the appeal. It cannot be said then that the granting of the certificate is itself any part of the 'sale' which can be annulled, for the certificate is not given till after the Commissioner has decided whether to annul the "sale" or not. In cases of the present type where the dispute is between rival purchasers the real dispute is as to the correctness of the Collector's certificate, which is under s. 28 the purchaser's evidence of title. In my opinion, therefore, both because annulment would be no remedy in this type of case, and because of the view that the first deposit by a qualified depositor constitutes the purchase, and because what is in dispute is merely the fact as to deposit and the effect of the law, s. 33 has no application; it will only apply if the sale is attacked for any defect in the procedure leading up to the position that a deposit of the amount of arrear by a qualified co-sharer will be a valid purchase of the defaulting share. Though constrained to differ from the view expressed in Bahuria Sambho Kuar v. Harihar Prasad (2) as to the applicability of s. 33 to a case of the present kind, it is not however necessary to refer the case to a Full Bench, since, even if the section applied I hold that it does not affect the plaintiff's claim as he has complied with its requirements both as to proof of substantial injury, and also admittedly as to raising the particular ground of irregularity now complained of in his appeal to the Commissioner.

We proceed then to consider whether the plaintiff has proved that he has sustained substantial injury "by reason of the irregularity complained of." A discussion of the point, on the assumption that s. 33 does apply to such cases, merely provides further reasons for holding that s. 33 cannot in fact apply to them. The irregularity complained of here is that the Collector has certified the four defendants as purchasers of the defaulting share, instead of merely certifying the plaintiff as purchaser. As the share has been sold for default of two kists only the purchase must be a lucrative one; the arrears amount to Rs. 480 odd, and the Court has valued the property at Rs. 1,200 which cannot be an over estimate. If the Collector's action amounts to part of the procedure of sale, then certainly the irregularity in his procedure has caused substantial injury to the plaintiff. But then argument is adduced from decisions relating to the true type of cases of annulment under s. 33, for example cases relating to disappointed bidders, to show that the injury alleged here by the purchaser is not the kind of injury contemplated by s. 33. This is really true, but the reason is not that there is no substantial injury but that the injury is not of the kind contemplated by s. 33 because that section has no application to the case at all; and the reason is closely allied to the fact that the injury is such that the remedy provided by s. 33, viz., annulment, is no cure, and can give no relief. However, it is clear that if it is held that s. 33 applies to this case the plaintiff is not hit by its provisions having complied with its requirements; he proves substantial injury and his ground of irregularity in his complaint to the Commissioner was the same ground as that now relied on, namely, the Collector's error in granting a joint certificate.

In the view taken above it is not necessary to discuss a point which was argued at some length before us in relation to the deposits made on October 14, the re-opening day, namely whether the ten days period in s. 14 was absolute or whether, if it expired on a holiday, the period was extended till the re-opening day. The present instructions in the Board's Manual are to the latter effect and appear to be correct. I agree therefore that the appeal must be allowed and that the decree of the trial Court must be restored.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI—Sale not challenged by party to execution proceedings under s. 47—Sale confirmed and certificate granted—Suit for possession on ground that sale certificate included more property than was ordered to be sold by decree—Maintainability.

When a sale of immovable property has not been challenged by the judgment-debtors a sale certificate is granted by the Court. At the date of the grant of certificate the sale becomes absolute. The sale certificate granted by the Court to the purchaser is a formal document of title. When a sale has been confirmed by the Court and has become absolute under the terms of O. XXI it cannot be said that the sale is a nullity. The sale must be considered valid until it is set aside. Where a party to the execution proceedings has failed to challenge the sale under s. 47 or O. XXI on the ground that the sale certificate included more property than the decree directed should be sold, a separate suit for possession is not maintainable. 183 Ind. Cas. 415 (2) and 125 Ind. Cas. 765 (3), relied on, 113 Ind. Cas. 725 (4), dissented from.

Mr. Muhammad Jalaluddin Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for the Respondent.

Judgment.— This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for possession. The appellants sought to recover the property which had been sold to the defendant at an auction sale held in execution of a decree in his favour. It is averred by the plaintiffs-appellants that more property was sold than had been mortgaged and therefore covered by the decree obtained on the footing of the mortgage and executed by the defendant. The learned Munsif decreed the suit. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the learned Munsif and dismissed the suit. He has held that the plaintiffs having failed to challenge the sale under the provisions of s. 47, Civil P. C., or O. XXI, they are not now entitled to maintain a suit for possession. The plaintiffs were parties to the execution proceedings. They could have challenged the sale upon the ground that the sale certificate included more property than the decree directed should be sold. When a sale of immovable property has not been challenged by the judgment-debtors a sale certificate is granted by the Court. At the date of the grant of certificate the sale becomes absolute. It was contended for the plaintiffs in appeal that the suit was one for possession and not one to set aside a sale. In substance however, the suit is one to avoid the sale so far as the property not covered by the mortgage is concerned. The sale certificate granted by the Court to the defendant is a formal document of title: see Venkata Jagannatha Rao Garu v. Venkata Kumara Mahipati Surya Rao (1). The plaintiffs therefore cannot take possession of the property in suit from the defendant unless this document of title is avoided. It is not open now however to the plaintiffs to maintain a suit to set aside the sale. The plaintiff's right to challenge the sale expired when the sale was confirmed by the Court in favour of the defendant. In this connection reference may be made to the cases in Rahim Buksh v. Kishen Lal (2) and Kishen Lal v. Peare Lal, 125 Ind. Cas. 165 (3).

upon the case in Bulaki Das v. Kesri (4). The decision in this latter case certainly supports the contention for the plaintiffs that a suit for possession is maintainable where the property possession of which is claimed, is property which has been sold at an auction sale held in execution of a decree and which has not been covered by the decree. The point in issue was not exhaustively discussed by the Bench which decided that case. It was held that the suit was maintainable upon the ground that so far as the excess property was concerned the auction sale was a nullity. I am unable to agree with this proposition which has been reflected in the decisions already referred to. When a sale has been confirmed by the Court and has become absolute under the terms of O. XXI, it cannot be said that the sale is a nullity. The sale has been effected under orders of the Court and it must be considered valid until it is set aside. Upon the whole matter I am satisfied that the plaintiffs' suit which in substance is a suit to avoid an auction sale held in execution of a mortgage decree is not maintainable. There is no force in the appeal, the appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 60, 2 (3), 30 (1), 87—Mere re-registration, if validates deed—Court, whether can go behind certificate of registration—Districts and sub-districts under Act—Sub-Registrar at one place having no jurisdiction wrongly accepting and registering document—District Registrar can re-register it himself—His directing registration of document by Sub-Registrar having jurisdiction is irregularity curable by s. 87.

The mere fact that the deed has been re-registered cannot validate it and the Courts are entitled to go behind the certificate of registration: Mujib-un-nissa v. Abdur Rahim (1), Beni Madhab Mittar v. Khatir Mondul (2) and Batj Nath Tiwari v. Sheo Sahay Bhagut (3), relied on. [p. 296, col. 1.]

Section 2(3), Reg. Act defines a district and sub-district as one formed under the Reg. Act. Therefore, it is clear that the Registering Authorities have their own districts and sub-districts which need not necessarily conform to those of the Revenue Authorities. [p. 296, col. 2; p. 297, col. 1.]

The discretion conferred by s. 30 (1); Reg. Act is wide and unfettered. It is not controlled, in so far as representation of a document which has been accepted and duly registered in a wrong place by either s. 32 or s. 34 or by any other provision of Part VI, or any other part. These provisions deal with initial presentation and do not refer to representation of a document which has been accepted for registration and duly registered in the wrong place through a mistake of the registering authorities for which the parties were not responsible. These sections no more impose a time-limit or any other restriction upon representation. The discretion should not be lightly exercised. It should not be exercised at all when there is gross negligence, or carelessness or fraud. [p. 298, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a Sub-Registrar of a sub-district having no jurisdiction to accept for registration a document, has wrongly accepted and duly registered it, the District Registrar having control over such Sub-Registrar and the Sub-Registrar by whom the document ought to have been registered, can remedy the wrong and register the document. If instead of registering it himself he directs the latter Sub-Registrar to register it, it is mere irregularity curable by s. 87. [p. 298, col. 1.]

Misc. C. Case from the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class Balaghat, dated August 26, 1935.

Mr. J. Sen, for the Appellants.

Rai Bahadur D. N. Chaudhari, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an application by R. B. D. N. Chowdhari asking us to reconsider our order of March 7, 1938 in which we afforded the plaintiff an opportunity of obtaining registration of the mortgage-deed upon which he sues.

A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. Sen to the effect that no review lies. R. B. D. N. Chowdhari admits this but says that we have jurisdiction under s. 151 to reconsider an interlocutory order of the kind we have made. We do not propose to decide this point because we have also heard R. B. D. N. Chowdhari on the merits and can see no reason for altering our decision.

The learned Rai Bahadur argues that the mere fact that the deed has now been re-registered cannot validate it and that the Courts are entitled to go behind the certificate of registration. He refers to Rustomji's Registration Act, p. 358, to s. 60 of the Reg. Act, and to Mujib-un-Nissa v. Abdur Rahim (1), Beni Madhab Mitter v. Khatir Mondul (2) and Baij Nath Tiwari v. Sheo Sahay Bhagut (3) in support of this proposition.

That may readily be conceded and we are prepared to treat this document as if it had been brought before us in its present form without any suggestion from us or any other Court about re-registration.

In those circumstances R. B. Chowdhari argues that only one conclusion is possible. He states that we have already decided that the first registration was invalid because the Sub-Registrar to whom it was presented had no jurisdiction to register it. He says the second is equally invalid because the second presentation was beyond time. He says the provisions of s. 23 of the Reg. Act are mandatory.

As regards Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondum Lall (4) he states that we have misunderstood that ruling. He points out that the re-registration which the Privy Council upheld in that case was by the same Sub-Registrar and that the fact that it was initially presented to the proper registering authority makes all the difference. Section 23-A now embodies the purport of that ruling and it is similarly restricted in its application.

We fully realise that Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondum Lall (4) is not a decision on all fours with the present case. The position we have here is not directly covered by authority, at any rate, not by that of their Lordships; nor is there any decision of this Court on the point. It is consequently a case of first impression and what we have done is to apply the principles laid down in Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondum Lall (4) as far as we can to the present circumstances.

We have already decided that there was no question of fraud in this case. We have already held that all the parties, as well as the Sub-Registrar at Baihar acted in perfect good faith. The situation of the property as given in the deed is "Mouza Lamta, Tahsil and District Balaghat." Both Lamta and Baihar are in the Balaghat District, so that in itself affords no indication as to whether Lamta lies within the registration sub-district of Baihar, or of Balaghat. It is true the document speaks of the Tahsil of Balaghat which is not the same as the Tahsil of Baihar, but it does not follow that the registration sub-districts are co-terminous with the revenue areas. Section 2 (3) defines a district and sub-district

(1) 23 A 233; 28 I A 15; 5 O W N 177; 11 M L J 58; 3 Bom. L R 114; 7 Sar. 820 (P O).

(2) 14 O 449

(3) 18 C 556 (F B).

(4) 24 W R 75.

as one, formed under the Reg. Act. Therefore it is clear that the Registering Authorities have their own districts and sub-districts which need not necessarily conform to those of the Revenue Authorities. In fact, the very names, sub-district and Tahsil, show that they need not be the same.

A glance at the map will show that Lamta, Baihar and Balaghat form three points of a triangle which, as the crow flies is very roughly equilateral. A motor road connects Balaghat with Baihar, and the same road runs on through Baihar to Lamta. The distance between Balaghat and Baihar by road is 41 miles, and that between Baihar and Lamta only 32. Motor buses run between these places.

The third side of the triangle between Lamta and Balaghat consists of a narrow gauge railway line. Lamta is only a small station on this out of the way line and the train connections are probably neither frequent nor convenient. Forest and a wild range of hills separate them all. It is easy to see how in these circumstances Lamta would be much more closely associated with Baihar than with Balaghat, and easy to see how the mistake came to be made. In fact when it is realised that even the Sub-Registrar himself thought that Lamta fell within his sub-district it is easy to see how mere laymen could also be misled.

It has to be remembered that these places lie in a wild part of the country where forests and wild hills abound, and where the line of demarcation between one sub-district and another is to be found only on maps and not on the ground itself. Expert surveyors would often be required to determine whether any given area falls on one side of the boundary or the other. In these circumstances it would be monstrous to mould the law of registration so woodenly and inelastically as to destroy titles taken and given in good faith simply because a Govt. official who is theoretically supposed to know his district does not, and as a matter of practical politics cannot, know every inch of it.

When Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondum Lall (4) was decided the matter was also one of first impression. There was no authority or precedent to guide their Lordships. Section 23-A of the Act was not there. They took the bold and just course and interpreted the law as it ought to be interpreted whenever that is possible, in a broad and common-sense way so as to further the ends of justice and not to defeat them. We feel we are called upon to do the same here. The same principles which guided their Lordships are here to guide us too. The same considerations which weighed with them weigh with us also. When their Lordships decided their case, the Reg. Act neither prohibited nor allowed re-registration in the peculiar circumstances which then prevailed. It was silent on the point. In the case before us also the Reg. Act neither prohibits nor allows what has now been done. It is silent here as well.

The great principle which their Lordships laid down was that when the Act does not prohibit re-registration or impose a time-limit within which it must be done, then in order to prevent injustice to the parties flowing from the mistaken act of the Registering Authorities themselves, these authorities have inherent power to remedy their own wrongs just as Courts have inherent power to remedy theirs.

In the case before their Lordships, the Sub-Registrar had jurisdiction to accept the document for registration both when it was first presented and when it was represented. Therefore that was the official clothed with the power to remedy the wrong done by his predecessor.

In the case now before us the Sub-Registrar at Baihar had no power either in the beginning or at the end, but the District Registrar had power to determine in which of two sub-districts the property lay and to effect registration accordingly. He had that power in the beginning he had it when the document was represented; and he has it now. He therefore was and is the man empowered to remedy this wrong.

Under s. 30 (1) the Registrar is given a discretion to receive and register any document which might be registered by any Sub-Registrar subordinate to him. The document in this case ought to have been registered before the Sub-Registrar at Balaghat. This Sub-Registrar is subordinate to the District Registrar who directed the re-registration in this case. Therefore this District Registrar had at all material times power and authority to deal with this document because the property comprised in it fell within his jurisdiction.

Had the Sub-Registrar at Baihar refused registration in the first instance, the District Registrar could have exercised the discretion vested in him by this section and could have effected registration himself. So far as he was concerned, presentation to his subordinate at Baihar was as good as presentation at Balaghat, because both places were within his jurisdiction and both officers were under his authority and control, and also because no procedure is laid down as to the manner in which a document is to be placed before him for his reception; and in any event that would be an irregularity curable by s. 87. No time-limit is fixed within which he is to exercise this discretion and consequently, as their Lordships of the Privy Council have pointed out, he can exercise it at any time, and would certainly be justified in doing so when a Division Bench of this Court considered the case a fit and proper one for the exercise of such discretion.

It will be seen that the discretion conferred by s. 30 (1) is wide and unfettered. It is not controlled, in so far as representation of a document in circumstances similar to the present are concerned, by either s. 32 or s. 34 or by any other provision of Part VI, or any other part. These provisions deal with initial presentation and do not refer to representation of a document which has been accepted for registration and duly registered in the wrong place through a mistake of the Registering Authorities for which the parties were not responsible. The parties here did nothing to mislead, and placed all the facts squarely before the Sub-Registrar in the first instance and left themselves in his hands. These sections no more impose a time-limit or any other restriction upon representation than did the corresponding sections in the Act which was in force when their Lordships decided Sah Mukhun Lall Panday v. Sah Koondum Lall (4). The District Registrar had therefore ample power to accept the deed for re-registration.

In point of fact he did not actually register it himself but directed the Sub-Registrar at Balaghat, who is subordinate to him, to do so. But that, if an irregularity at all, is a mere defect in procedure which is curable by s. 87. Even if he had effected registration himself the registration would, under s. 66 (1), have been entered in the books of the Sub-Registrar at Balaghat which, on our findings, is the sub-district within which the property in dispute is situate. Therefore registration by the Sub-Registrar at Balaghat at the direction of the Registrar has made no practical difference to the essentials with which the law of registration is concerned.

It is to be observed that we did not direct re-registration by the Sub-Registrar at Balaghat. All we said was that the document should be represented to enable the proper Registering Authority to register it. This we think has now been done, and even if there is a slight irregularity in the procedure of the District Registrar in the manner of effecting the registration, it is curable by s. 87.

But we wish to make it plain that the circumstances here are exceptional. We do not for a moment suggest that this discretion should be lightly exercised, or that it should be exercised at all when there is gross negligence, or carelessness or fraud. But in a case like this when even the Registering Authorities themselves were misled and accepted the document and registered it, and were thus instrumental in lulling the parties into a sense of security it is pre-eminently right and proper that resort should be had to the exercise of these exceptional powers.

There is however one small point on which our interlocutory order will require modification. We stated that when re-registration had been effected a formal order decreeing the plaintiff's claim with costs would be made. We omitted to notice that the case had only been decided upon a preliminary point and that there had been no decision on the merits. Of course the matter will have to go back for a continuation of the trial.

The question of fraud was again urged and again reference was made to the passages in the pleadings to which we have already referred in our preliminary judgment. We see no reason to alter our view. If the parties genuinely believed, as we consider they did, that registration could be effected at Baihar, they would have been justified in believing that it could also be effected at Balaghat, for as we have shown the District Registrar at Balaghat could have registered it at Balaghat even if ordinarily the proper place of registration had been with the Sub-Registrar at Baihar. The passage referred to does not therefore contain an admission of fraud, or an admission that the parties knew at the time of registration, that the Sub-Registrar at Baihar had no jurisdiction.

The decree of the lower Court is set aside and the case is remanded under

O. XLI, r. 23, of the Civil P. C. for a continuance of the trial from the point at which it left off. Costs will follow the event. There will be a refund of court-fees under s. 13 of the Court Fees Act.

Compromise—Vakalatnama held gave power to the Pleader to enter into compromise on behalf of minor—Compromise otherwise valid and binding on minor—Question whether it was for benefit of minor held could not be discussed in suit for declaration that compromise is void.

By a vakalatnama extensive powers concerning the conduct and prosecution of the suit on behalf of a minor were given to a Pleader and he was inter alia authorized to appoint arbitrators, to file compromise (sulahnama dakhil karen) and to file documents and it was stated in the vakalatnama that all the acts done by the Pleader would be accepted by the minor:

Held, that the vakalatnama conferred very wide powers in very general terms on the Pleader, and as such, the vakalatnama must by necessary implication be deemed to have authorized him to enter into the compromise. 146 Ind. Cas. 84 (1), relied on.

If the compromise is otherwise valid and binding the question whether or not it was for the benefit of the plaintiff, cannot be debated and discussed in a suit for a declaration that the compromise is not binding on him. That was a question to be determined by the Judge who granted the permission for the compromise.

S. A. from the decree of the Additional Civil Judge, Allahabad, dated March 30, 1936.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and B. N. Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Respondents.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This is an appeal by Sat Deo Prasad, minor, an unsuccessful plaintiff, whose suit for a declaration that the compromise decree in suit No. 233 of 1933 of the Court of the Munsif, West Allahabad, was conclusive and void and was not binding on him (the plaintiff) has been dismissed by both the Courts below. The parties to the present suit are descended from one Bhagwan Prasad and their family pedigree is as follows:

It appears that suit No. 233 of 1933 was filed on behalf of Sat Deo Prasad by his mother, Mst. Bhagwati Devi, who acted as his next friend in the suit. The defendants to that suit were amongst others Debi Badal, Dwarka Prasad and Inder Kuer. As Mst. Bhagwati Devi was a pardanashin lady she appointed one Balgobind as an attorney to look after the prosecution of the case. The powers given to Balgobind were evidenced by a registered power-of-attorney dated May 8, 1933. By this deed Balgobind was inter alia authorized to file a compromise. The Urdu words used in the document were sulahnama dakhil karen. An Advocate named B. Mahabir Prasad was appointed a Pleader on behalf of the plaintiff by means of vakalatnama that was signed by Bhagwati Devi. By the vakalatnama extensive powers concerning the conduct and prosecution of the suit were given to B. Mahabir Prasad and he was inter alia authorized to appoint arbitrators, to file compromise (sulahnama dakhil karen) and to file documents and it was stated in the vakalatnama that all the acts done by B. Mahabir Prasad would be accepted by Sat Deo Prasad, plaintiff. In short wide and extensive powers were conferred on B. Mahabir Prasad by the vakalatnama.

Suit No. 233 was contested by the defendants and on the date of the recording of evidence the parties entered into a compromise when the trial Judge was actually recording the statement of Balgobind. It has been found by the Courts below that the terms of the compromise were discussed by the parties or their Pleaders in the presence of the presiding Judge and after the terms were settled the Counsel for the parties made a statement concerning those terms and that statement was recorded and signed by Balgobind and the Pleaders of the parties. In short, it is manifest from the findings recorded by the Courts below that the compromise was not a hole and corner affair but was arrived at in open Court after mutual discussion between the parties. The plaintiff-appellant assailed the validity of the compromise on four grounds. He alleged that his mother, who was his next friend, gave no instructions for the compromise to any person whatsoever. Secondly he alleged that Balgobind was under the influence of Debi Badal who was one of the defendants in suit No. 233. Thirdly he alleged that the compromise was entered into without the permission of the Court and lastly he asserted that the compromise was prejudicial to his interest.

The contention of the plaintiff that the compromise was entered into without the permission of the Court was baseless. It has been found by both the Courts below that the requisite permission to enter into a compromise on behalf of the plaintiff, who was a minor, was given by the presiding officer of the Court. The question whether the compromise was or was not for the benefit of the minor had no material bearing on the decision of the present suit unless the compromise was vitiated on any of the grounds alleged by the plaintiff. If the compromise was otherwise valid and binding the question whether or not it was for the benefit of the plaintiff cannot now be debated and discussed. That was a question to be determined by the Judge who granted the permission for the compromise. It may be assumed for the purposes of argument that the mother of the plaintiff who was his next friend did not give any directions either to Balgobind or to B. Mahabir Prasad to enter into the compromise. Nevertheless, the compromise must be held to be valid and binding if it is found that either Balgobind or B. Mahabir Prasad had the authority to enter into the same and that in exercising that authority they acted honestly and without being in collusion with the defendants to the suit.

So far as B. Mahabir Prasad is concerned he was undoubtedly competent to enter into the compromise. As stated before the vakalatnama in his favour conferred very wide powers in very general terms on him, and as such, the vakalatnama must by necessary implication be deemed to have authorized him to enter into the compromise. This was the view taken in the Full Bench decision of this Court in Akbari Begam v. Rahmat Husain (1). It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that the words sulahnama dakil karen that find a place in the power-of-attorney and in the vakalanama did at best authorize Balgobind and B. Mahabir Prasad to file a compromise and not to enter into a compromise. We are unable to agree with this contention. The words noted above are words of general import and uncontrolled as they are by any condition to the effect that the compromise must bear the signature of the plaintiff's guardian before the same can be filed in Court the only reasonable interpretation that can be put on those words is that the attorney and the Vakil were given the authority to enter into a compromise on behalf of the minor. That being so the competence of the Vakil and of Balgobind to compromise the suit cannot be questioned. We find that the compromise was signed also by the plaintiff's father. It is not suggested that the plaintiff's father was in collusion with the other defendants to Suit No. 233.

The allegation that Balgobind or the plaintiff's father were either in collusion with or under the influence of Debi Badal was not accepted by either of the Courts below. It follows that the compromise was entered into by authorized persons and was not vitiated by fraud or collusion. The Courts below were, therefore right in holding that the compromise decree was binding on the plaintiff-appellant. This appeal must therefore fail and is dismissed with costs.

Where the assessee is a joint family and this family carries on business in five different buildings within the boundaries of the Union, the Committee is not entitled to levy tax in respect of each building owned or occupied by it within the Union. Acceptance of the contention that it is so entitled will be to ignore altogether the provisions of cl. (d) of sub-s. 3 of s. 118-C, Bihar and Orissa Local Self-Govt. Act. The assessment in such a case should not exceed Rs. 5, the joint family being a person within the meaning of cl. (d) of sub-s. 3.

In such a case the assessee is entitled to the refund of the whole of the excess tax paid to the Union.

Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Bose, K. N. Lal and K. P. Varma, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a suit by the karta and members of a joint Hindu family for a declaration that an assessment made on them on June 9, 1935, by the Union Committee of Dalsinghsarai under s. 118-C of the Bihar and Orissa Local Self Govt. Act amounting to Rs. 255 was ultra vires the Union Committee and for recovery of the tax paid plus Rs. 10 by way of interest. The Courts below have agreed in decreeing the suit. This appeal is by the Union Committee of Dalsinghsarai challenging the decision of the Courts below.

The question that arises is whether an owner or occupier of buildings within the Union is taxable in respect of each of the building which he owns or occupies or whether only one tax is assessable on each individual. Section 118-C of the Act empowers the Union Committee to impose on the owners of buildings, tanks, wells or water-courses, or the occupiers of buildings, within the Union, or in any village therein, such assessment as may be required approximately to meet any deficiency in the financial resources of the Union. Clause (d) of sub-s. 3, however, limits the amount to be assessed on any person to Rs. 5 per mensem. The assessee in this case was a joint family and this family carried on business in five different buildings within the boundaries of the Union. Both before and after 1935 the assessment on the family had been limited to five rupees per mensem. In 1935, however, the Union assessed the family in respect of each of these buildings with the result that the family has had to pay more than five rupees per mensem. It is not disputed, of course, that a joint Hindu family 'is a person' within the meaning of cl. (d) of sub-s. 3. The learned Advocate for the Union Committee in this Court has maintained the argument addressed to the Courts below that the Committee is entitled to levy tax in respect of each building owned or occupied by persons within the Union. Acceptance of that contention will be to ignore altogether the provisions of cl. (d) or sub-s. 3. Had the Legislature intended that any one person within the ambits of the Union Committee should be liable to pay more than five rupees per mensem, cl. (d) would have read very differently and probably would have been worded as follows: The amount to be assessed in respect of any building, tank, well or water-course shall not exceed five rupees per mensem. Clause (d), however, as it stands, does not refer to buildings, tanks, wells or water-courses but to persons and in unequivocal language limits the assessment on any one person to five rupees per mensem. I, therefore, agree with the Courts, below that the assessment in the present case, in so far as it offends against the provisions of cl. (d), was ultra vires the Union Committee, and would, therefore reduce the assessment to five rupees per mensem.

With regard to the claim for recovery of the amount already paid, the learned Advocate for the respondents concedes that the decree of the Court must be modified to this extent that his clients are not entitled to the refund of the whole of Rs. 255 paid but only to so much of it as it is in excess of what was within the power of the Union Committee to levy, namely Rs. 60 per annum. He concedes, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to retain Rs. 60 out of Rs. 255 paid. The result is that the decree of the Court below will be modified to this extent that it will be declared that the assessment on the plaintiffs in excess of five rupees per mensem is ultra vires and the plaintiffs are entitled to recover Rs. 195 out of the money which they claimed. With this modification the appeal is dismissed. The parties will bear their own costs in this Court.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 184—S. 184 does not overrule O. VIII, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code—Limitation must be pleaded—Facts in case not clear and undisputed—Plea of limitation not raised in trial Court—Should not be allowed in appeal—Suit for possession as raiyat—Limitation—Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (III of 1913), s. 20—Representation—Applicability to sale in certificate proceeding—S. 146-A, Bengal Tenancy Act, if applies to such proceedings.

Section 184 (1) Ben. Ten. Act does not overrule the provisions of O. VIII, r. 2, Civil P. C. which require that the defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which raise issues of fact not arising out of the point, as for instance, limitation. Section 184 would require a suit to be dismissed if in fact it has been filed after the period of limitation and would apply even in an ex parte case if the facts appear clear and undisputed. Where however, the facts are not clear and undisputed. The question of limitation should not be allowed to be raised as the necessary facts had not been pleaded and so attention had not been drawn to them at the time of the trial.

Limitation for a suit to recover possession of land claimed by the plaintiff as a raiyat is governed by s. 184, Ben. Ten. Act and not by s. 3 or s. 29, Lim. Act.

Section 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act does not in terms apply to certificate proceedings. Certificate proceedings are governed by s. 20, Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act. The words "where the holding is sold in execution of a certificate" in s. 20 (1) mean "where the interests of all the tenants of a holding are bound by the sale and sold in execution of a certificate." The principle of representation recognized in respect of rent decrees would also apply in the case of sales in execution of certificates. When the amendment to Ben. Ten. Act was made by the insertion of s. 146-A, by which in the case of sales by execution of decrees it was provided that in certain circumstances the interests of certain persons not actually parties to the suit might be affected, it does not follow that this applied also to certificate sales in so far as any change was made from the law as it stood at the time when the Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act itself was passed in 1913.

A. from the appellate decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated August 17, 1937.

Mr. Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. Rama Prosad Mukherjee, for the Respondents.

Ruxburgh, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit by the plaintiffs for declaration of their raiyati right in one-third share of the suit land and for recovery of possession. The suit land formerly belonged to one Hakimuddin patwari who died in Pous 1331 B. S. leaving six daughters, one son and a widow. Three of the daughters are plaintiffs and the other three daughters and the son and the widow are pro forma defendants Nos. 5 to 9. The suit was contested by the Secretary of State, defendant No. 1, who had purchased the holding of Hakimuddin patwari in a certificate sale in respect of arrears of rent for 1337-1338 B. S. The plaintiffs claim, as they were not certificate debtors in those proceedings, their interests were not affected by the certificate sale, and they also claim to have been dispossessed of the holding in the latter part of 1340 B. S. by the Secretary of State.

The Secretary of State's case is that the three plaintiffs were represented by pro forma defendant No. 6, Selim Mia, son of Hakimuddin patwari, and that their interest passed in the sale. In the trial Court the plaintiffs claimed that they had separate possession of the suit land and had themselves paid rent. The trial Court found that in fact they had no separate possession and that the rent had been paid by the son, Selim Mia. The trial Court therefore found that the plaintiffs had been represented by Selim Mia and dismissed their suit. In the lower Appellate Court, the question of representation appears to have been argued on the basis of s. 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act, and that Court also found that the plaintiffs had been represented by Selim Mia within the terms of sub-cl. (ii) of sub-s. (3) of s. 146-A. The lower Appellate Court also held that the plaintiffs' claim was barred under a special law of limitation. In this Court two points are urged, first that the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed the question of limitation to be canvassed before it, and secondly that s. 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act, does not apply to certificate proceedings.

As regards the question of limitation, we think that the lower Appellate Court was in error. The learned Judge discussed s. 3 and s. 29, Lim. Act, and O. VIII, r. 2, Civil P. C. It is to be noted however that the case is really governed by s. 184, Ben. Ten. Act, although this fact in itself appears to make no difference to the decision. Section 184, sub-s. (1) provides that every suit instituted after the period of limitation provided in Sch. III shall be dismissed although limitation has not been pleaded. We are of opinion that this does not overrule the provisions of O. VIII, r. 2 which require that the defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which raise issues of fact not arising out of the point, as for instance, limitation. Section 184, would require a suit to be dismissed if in fact it has been filed after the period of limitation and would apply even in an ex parte case if the facts appeared but it is clearly evident from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court itself that in this case the facts were not clear and undisputed and indeed he discussed the evidence at some length in order to arrive at a conclusion that the suit must necessarily have been filed, at any rate, a few days after the period of limitation had expired, and he uses for the purpose some of the evidence that appeared in the case. We do not think, this was the proper way of treating the matter and we consider this was clearly a case in which the question of limitation should not have been allowed to be raised as the necessary facts had not been pleaded and so attention had not been drawn to them at the time of the trial.

Coming next to the question of representation, it is to be noted that the trial Court did not rely on specific terms of s. 146-A, Ben. Ten. Act. This section was enacted in the Amendment Act of 1928, and in fact substantially codified the previous law on the subject, at any rate as regards decrees. We think however for reasons that will appear hereafter that it must be conceded that it cannot be held to apply in terms to certificate proceeding and that if it is desired by the Legislature that it should be so, some specific reference to the Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, is necessary in that section. The decision on the question turns on the interpretation of s. 20, Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913. Sub-s. (1) of that section provides that :

"Where property is sold in execution of a certificate there shall vest in the purchaser merely the right, title and interest of the certificate debtor at the time of the sale even though the property itself be specified."

We have then the terms of sub-s. (3) which runs as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-s. (1) in areas in which Chap. XIV, Ben. Ten. Act, 1885, is, in force, where a tenure or holding is sold in execution of a certificate for arrears of rent due in respect thereof, the tenure or holding shall, subject to the provisions of s. 22 of that Act, pass to the purchaser, subject to the interests defined in that chapter as 'protected interests' but with power to annul the interests defined in that chapter as incumbrances."

Mr. Sen Gupta who argued the case for the appellants appeared to urge that the meaning of the words "where the holding is sold in execution of a certificate" must be taken to be equivalent to "where all the tenants of a holding are certificate debtors, and hence all of their interests are sold", but, we think, it must be taken as meaning "where the interests of all the tenants of a holding are bound by the sale and sold in execution of a certificate." The real intention of sub-cl. (3) is evidently to make clear that, just as in a sale in execution of a rent decree more than the interests of the tenants themselves shall pass, namely the right to annul incumbrances under Chap. XIV, Ben. Ten. Act, so also in the case of a certificate sale a similar right shall pass. In support of his contention Mr. Sen Gupta referred to the case in

Mst. Raja Koer v. Ganga Singh (1), which has been relied on in Ghanshyam Das v. Ragho Singh (2), but the former case was decided before the Act of 1913, and on the ground that a certificate sale did not contemplate enforcement of a security. The provisions of s. 20 (3) now clearly provide for such enforcement, and it is in cases of such a kind that the question of representation becomes of importance, for, the interests of third parties are vitally affected, and the decision as to this interest may turn on a question whether some obscure heir or co-sharer tenant who had taken no interest in his share has been named as a certificate debtor in a certificate or was a party to the decree for arrears of rent. We must suppose that when the Legislature gave this extended effect to sales in execution of certain certificates for rent it intended to make it as effective as in the case of a sale in execution of a decree for rent, and legislated on the assumption that the principle of representation then recognized in respect of rent decree without statutory provision would also apply in the case of sales in execution of certificates.

Mr. Rama Prasad Mukherjee, appearing for the Secretary of State pointed out that the phrase "where a tenure or holding is sold in execution of a certificate for arrears of rent due in respect thereof," which appears in s. 20 (3), Public Demands Recovery Act, occurs also in s. 159, Ben. Ten. Act (with the substitution of 'decree' for 'certificate') and that it was inserted in other sections of Chap. XIV of that Act, for example in ss. 166, 171, 172; by s. 62, Public Demands Recovery Act, itself. He urges that the phrase should be given the same interpretation throughout. Section 61 of that Act inserted s. 158-B into the Ben. Ten. Act, in order to make it clear in what circumstances so far as affected the landlords the holdings should pass or not, and a distinction was made in that the holding passed in the case of a decree if it was obtained either by a sole landlord or by the entire body of landlords or by one or more co-sharer-landlords who had made all remaining co-sharers party defendants to the suit, whereas in the case of a certificate the holding would only pass if the certificate was signed on the requisition of, or in favour of, a sole landlord or of the entire body of landlords. Thus, in the case of certificate procedure, there was no provision for bringing in co-sharer-landlords who were not themselves applying for a certificate and s. 20 (4), Public Demands Recovery Act, itself points this out. These provisions were amended in 1928, but the same distinction between decree and a certificate was maintained and so far as a certificate was concerned, the terms of s. 158-AAA were to the same effect as those of s. 158-B which was repealed. So far as a decree was concerned, some special provision was made so that a co-sharer-landlord in certain circumstances might have the advantage of a rent sale in respect of his separate share of the rent. (Chap. XIII-A including s. 158-AAA has since been repealed by the amendment of 1938.)

It will be seen that the formula "where a tenure or holding is sold in execution of a decree for arrears due in respect thereof" in s. 159 and other sections in Chap. XIV, Ben. Ten. Act, has a different meaning according as whether a decree or a certificate is referred to, in the sense that the tenure or holding is "sold" within the meaning of those sections only according as whether the procedure of s. 148-A or the terms of s. 158-AAA, respectively are complied with. Similarly, then it appears that the formula may have a different meaning according as a decree or certificate is referred to in so far as the interests of the tenants are affected. In other words, when the amendment to Ben. Ten. Act was made by the insertion of s. 146-A by which in the case of sales by execution of decrees it was provided that in certain circumstances the interests of certain persons not actually parties to the suit might be affected, it does not follow that this applied also to certificate sales in so far as any change was made from the law as it stood at the time when Ben. Public Demands Recovery Act itself was passed in 1913. To this extent therefore the contention of Mr. Sen Gupta must prevail and we hold that s. 146-A does not apply in terms to certificate sales, but on the other hand both Courts have found as a fact that the heirs of Hakimuddin patwari possesses this holding jointly and that the rent was paid by the son. It would seem that, as was indeed found by the trial Court, apart from the explicit terms of s. 146-A the plaintiff daughters were represented and therefore their interests were bound by the sale. The result is that although the appellant's contention on the point of limitation succeeds, they fail on the question of representation, and this appeal must be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

Trade name—Temporary injunction restraining defendant from using disputed trade name, when can be granted—Injunction—Temporary—Temporary injunction declined by Judge—His successor, if can go behind order and subsequently grant it.

Where the name of one particular individual or firm has such universal reputation in connection with a particular class of goods that it becomes evident that if a second person enters the trade under a name which is the same or so similar as likely to cause confusion in the mind of the intending purchasers and the harm thus caused is prima facie such as no compensation would be enough to counterbalance it, the Court can grant temporary injunction restraining the second person from using the disputed trade name till the decision of the suit.

Where a Judge has declined to grant a temporary injunction, his successor can go behind that order when new circumstances have subsequently arisen and make another order which the exigencies of the case require.

F. A. from an order of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated June 26, 1939.

Messrs. Achhru Ram and Din Dayal Kapur, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dev Raj Sawhney and Kishori Lal, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—In a suit instituted by the firm 'Bhaion Ki Dokan' against Ishar Das and Devi Dayal, a temporary injunction has been issued by the Subordinate Judge "restraining the defendants from using the disputed trade name 'Punjabi Bhaion Ki Dokan'  "as well as from using the trade labels with the inscription of 'Punjabi Bhaion Ki Dokan' till the decision of the suit." The defendants have appealed. It is contended by the appellants' Counsel that the application for injunction was belated inasmuch as the defendants' business had started in 1935, that since then the goods manufactured by them have been displayed in several exhibitions to the knowledge of the plaintiffs and that the balance of convenience was on the defendants' side and not on the plaintiffs' side. It is further urged that these contentions had prevailed with Lala Sardari Lal, Subordinate Judge, who was first dealing with the case and who had consequently declined to comply with the plaintiffs' wishes. It is added that the injury to the defendants is irremediable and that the purpose of the plaintiffs can be served if the defendants keep regular accounts and undertake to pay their profits to the plaintiffs in case their suit is decreed. It is also emphasized that Sardar Prahlad Singh who succeeded Lala Sardari Lal, had gone out of his way in entertaining another application from the plaintiffs to the same effect and disturbing his predecessor's order.

The facts, as stated by the appellants' Counsel, are correct, but I do not agree with him that in the new circumstances that had arisen, Mr. Prahlad Singh could not go behind the order of Lala Sardari Lal and make another order which the exigencies of the case required. I am also not disposed to agree with the appellants' Counsel that no order should have been made inasmuch as the defendants' business had been in existence for some time before the grant of the temporary injunction. So far as the balance of convenience is concerned. I have no hesitation in remarking that the injury done to the plaintiffs' business is in a way irreparable. The two names 'Bhaion Ki Doka' and 'Punjabi Bhaion Ki Doka' are apparently so similar as likely to cause confusion in the mind of the intending purchasers and the harm thus caused is prima facie such as no compensation would be enough to counterbalance it. In trade it is the name that counts and if once a name gains publicity it forms the main asset of the concern. The principle governing such cases has been very succinctly enunciated in Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 27, pp. 750-51. (Edn. 1913). The passages read as follows:

"In some cases, however, the name of one particular individual or firm has such universal reputation in connexion with a particular class of goods that it becomes evident that if a second person enters the trade under a name which is the same or similar, confusion must arise unless special precautions are taken. In such cases the Court interferes either to insist on the second individual taking proper measures to prevent such confusion arising, or, in certain cases, to restrain him from trading under a name which is the same as or closely resembles that of the well-known trader, or from using such trader's name as the trade name of his goods.

Where the plaintiff can show that the defendant's object is to produce confusion the Court intervenes much more readily, and often grants the plaintiff wider relief than he would otherwise obtain. The evidence of such fraudulent intention may be derived from the manner of trading or from the circumstances under which the name was adopted".

I am in respectful agreement with these remarks and consequently find no justification in interfering with the discretion of the Court below which, to my mind, has not been injudiciously exercised. Counsel for the appellants has referred to several authorities in this connexion: Varcados v. Mcleod (1), New Delhi Theatres Ltd. v. Kailash Chand (2), North Western Railway Administration v. N. W. Ry Union, Lahore (3), Prabhu Das Suri v. Law Reporter Ltd, Lahore (4), Mahomed Ahmad Khan v. Ahmad Nabi (5), Hari Chand Anand & Co. v. Singer Manufacturing Co. (6), Yoshimi Beshaka Kaisha Ltd. v. Firm of Dwarkadas Fateh-Chand (7), and Kerr & Co. v. Ahmedabad Cotton Manufacturing & Calico Printing Co. (8), but, in my view, none of them is in point, especially as every case is to be decided on its own facts. Moreover, the probability of deception cannot be denied in the present case and I have arrived at this conclusion by personal inspection of the goods manufactured which were shown to me at the time of hearing. I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX

rr. 1, 2; s. 151—Enforcement of mortgage, if waste or damage of property—Suit by mortgagor at Agra for reduction of interest under s. 33, U. P. Agriculturists Relief Act (XXVII of 1934)—Suit by mortgagee on mortgage in Bombay Court—Mortgagee, if can be restrained by injunction from proceeding with his case at Bombay.

The enforcement of a mortgage can never be characterized as an attempt to waste or damage any property.

The lawful exercise of a right vested in a person cannot be legally restrained by the Court under r. 2, O. XXXIX, Civil P. C.

A mortgage contained properties situated outside U. P. The principal and interest due under a previous mortgage formed part of the consideration of this mortgage and the deed stated that the first mortgage was satisfied and discharged. The mortgagor paid some instalments according to the terms of the mortgage on account of the interest but subsequently being advised that he was paying higher rate of interest than what he was bound to do as an agriculturist, a suit was filed by the mortgagor under s. 33, U. P. Agri. Relief Act, in the Court at Agra against the mortgagee. While this suit was pending the mortgagee brought a suit in Court at Bombay which had jurisdiction, for the enforcement of the mortgage. The mortgagor applied to the Court at Agra for the issue of an injunction restraining the mortgagee from proceeding with the Bombay suit and the application was granted. The suit at Agra was, however, dismissed and the injunction came to an end. An appeal was preferred by the mortgagor and he asked for an issue of an ad interim injunction which was rejected. An appeal was preferred to the High Court from this order and an application for temporary injunction pending the disposal of appeal was made:

Held, that O. XXXIX, r. 2 and s. 151, Civil P. C., had no application. The mortgagee had a right to bring the suit in Bombay and his action was neither illegal nor dishonest nor even improper and hence the injunction restraining him from proceeding with the Bombay case could not be granted.

[Case-law discussed.]

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Applicant.

Messrs. S. N. Sen and M. L. Chaturvedi, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application by Pt. Parbhu Dayal under O. XXXIX, rr. 1 and 2 and s. 151, Civil P. C. The facts that have given rise to this application may be briefly stated. It appears that the applicant executed an equitable mortgage on May 14, 1930, in favour of Seth Lal Das for a large sum of money. The properties hypothecated under this mortgage were situate within the United Provinces. On October 9, 1934, the applicant executed another mortgage in favour of Seth Lal Das and his wife. In this mortgage, some properties outside this province were also included. The principal and interest due under the bond of May 14, 1930, formed part of the consideration of the latter mortgage. It was stated in the deed that in consequence of the execution of the second mortgage the first mortgage was satisfied and discharged. Under the terms of the mortgage deed the applicant was required to pay certain amount periodically on account of interest due under the mortgage. It is stated by the applicant, and this statement is not disputed, that the applicant paid the instalments till April 1938. Since then the payment of interest has been withheld. The applicant states that he was advised that he was paying higher rate of interest than what he was bound to do as an agriculturist according to the provisions of the Agri. Relief Act. He therefore called upon the creditors to render accounts to the applicant. As the creditors failed to render accounts a suit was filed by the applicant under s. 33, Agri. Relief Act, in the Court of the Civil Judge, Agra on March 5, 1937. On the objection of the mortgagees the plaint was returned for presentation in the Court of the Munsif of Agra. The plaint was then presented in the latter Court on February 10, 1938. While this suit was pending in October 1938, the mortgagees brought a suit at Bombay for the enforcement of the mortgage of 1934. It is assumed for purposes of this application that the Bombay High Court has got jurisdiction to try the suit instituted by the mortgagees. The applicant made an application to the Munsif of Agra for the issue of an injunction restraining the mortgagees from proceeding with the Bombay suit. The Munsif rejected the application but the learned District Judge granted it. Ultimately the suit pending in the Court of the Munsif under s. 33, Agri. Relief Act, was dismissed. The applicant then filed an appeal from the decision of the trial Court in the Court of the District Judge which is still pending.

The injunction granted by the District Judge having come to an end with the termination of the suit, the applicant applied to the District Judge for the issue of an ad interim injunction. This application however was rejected. The applicant has filed a first appeal from order to this Court against the order of the District Judge refusing to grant injunction. This appeal has not been admitted yet. The applicant after filing the appeal made an application for the issue of a temporary injunction pending the disposal of the appeal. This was granted on March 17, 1939, by a learned Judge of this Court and notice was issued to the opposite party to show cause why the ex parte order granting a temporary injunction may not be confirmed. The opposite party has now appeared and contests the application of the applicant on several grounds. I have heard learned Counsel for the parties at considerable length and I now proceed to consider some of the points raised at the Bar.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party contends that the suit instituted by the applicant under the Agri. Relief Act is not maintainable as some of the properties hypothecated are situate outside the United Provinces. In support of this contention, reliance is placed on a Bench ruling of this Court reported in Wahiduddin v. Makhan Lal (1). In that case properties in Meerut and Delhi were hypothecated by an agriculturist. The mortgagor brought a suit under s. 33 of the Act. The learned Judges held that the suit was not maintainable as the mortgage was indivisible and some of the properties were outside this province to which the provisions of the Act did not apply. Learned Counsel for the applicant has attempted to distinguish this ruling. In my opinion it is not proper for me to express any opinion on the merits of the case. This is a question that will have to be considered later. It is urged by learned Counsel for the opposite party that the suit in Bombay is for the enforcement of the second mortgage, while the suit under s. 33 of the Code refers to the mortgages of 1930 and 1934 both. It is urged that the mortgage of 1930 does not subsist while the suit with reference to the second mortgage is not maintainable in view of the ruling cited above. This again is a matter which will have to be determined later if the appeal filed by the applicant is admitted. It may be mentioned that the ruling of the Bench would be binding on me as a single Judge. As stated above, I am not prepared to enter into the merits of the case.

The next point stressed by learned Counsel for the mortgagees is that O. XXXIX, r. 1, has no application to the facts of the present case and that this Court has no jurisdiction to issue an injunction restraining the mortgagees from seeking their legal remedy in the Bombay High Court. Learned Counsel for the applicant contends that his application is covered by O. XXXIX, rr. 1 and 2. I now proceed to examine the aforesaid Rule. Rule 2, provides: "In any suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury of any kind . . ." The words "any kind" have been added in the present Civil

P. C. They were absent in the old Code. In Darab Kuar v. Gomti Kuar (2), it was held that s. 493, applied to suits restraining a defendant from committing a breach of contract or injuries akin to breaches of contract. The learned Judges declined to grant an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering in the management of the properties in dispute. This ruling however is no longer good law in view of the addition of the words "of any kind." The question is whether the lawful exercise of a right vested in a person can be legally restrained by the Court under this Rule. In my opinion, this cannot be done. It must be conceded that the mortgagees have as much right to bring a suit in Bombay as the applicant has got a right to institute a suit at Agra. The mortgagors want to take advantage of a local legislation which is enacted exclusively for the benefit of the agriculturist. The mortgagees on the other hand are anxious to enforce the terms of a contract solemnly entered into by the parties. It is impossible to hold that the action of the mortgagees is illegal or dishonest. In my judgment, r. 2, does not help the applicant. Coming to r. 1, I find it difficult to hold that the property in suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree. The mortgagees have not yet obtained a decree and therefore no question of execution arises. The enforcement of a mortgage can never be characterized as an attempt to waste or damage any property. Sub-cl. (b), obviously has no application. In my opinion, therefore, r. 1, in terms does not apply.

It may be urged that apart from the provisions of the Code this Court has power to restrain a party from proceeding with a suit in another Court. This view has been taken in several cases in Bombay. In Narain Vithal v. Janki Bai Sitaram (3), a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held that a single Judge sitting on the Original Side is competent under s. 151, Civil P. C., to restrain the parties in a suit before him from proceeding with a suit in a Subordinate Judge's Court in the mofussil and so in effect stay proceedings. The suit for the enforcement of the mortgage however is not pending in a Court subordinate to this Court and therefore this ruling is inapplicable. Similar view was taken in Mulchand Raichand v. Gill & Co. (4), at pp. 298 and 299. In V. R. Naik v. Balwant Sitaram (5), it was held that the Bombay High Court had jurisdiction in the plaintiff's suit to pass an order restraining the defendant from proceeding with his suit in the Hyderabad Courts. The facts were that the defendant filed a suit in Hyderabad State, being a resident of that State, against the plaintiff and subsequently the plaintiff filed another suit against the defendant in the Bombay High Court. The subject-matter of the suit was the same and the defendant entered appearance in the plaintiff's suit without protest and also made a counterclaim. On these facts an injunction restraining the defendant was issued. This case no doubt shows that the High Court has got inherent jurisdiction apart from the provisions of the Code. In Vanechand v. Lakshmi Chand (6) Pratt, J., observed:

There is no doubt as to the jurisdiction of this Court to restrain a party from prosecuting a suit in a foreign Court. The principle on which this jurisdiction is exercised is set forth in the judgment of Lord Cranworth in Carren Iron Co. v. Maclaren (7). It is that the Court acts in personam and will not suffer anyone within its reach to do what is contrary to its notions of equity merely because the act to be done may be in point of locality beyond its jurisdiction."

It will be observed that the only justification for the exercise of the equity jurisdiction by this Court is that a party to the suit is doing something which is against its notions of equity. The question therefore is whether the mortgagees in the case are guilty of any such conduct. After giving my very serious consideration to the able arguments advanced by learned Counsel for the parties, I am unable to say that the action of the mortgagees can be characterized as illegal or even improper. The Legislature in its wisdom has thought it fit to grant reliefs to certain class of persons. In conferring such a right the terms of the contract entered into between the parties are to be ignored. Even the provisions of other enactments are superseded by this special enactment. The applicant is fully entitled to claim benefit of the possession of the Act and no reasonable objection can be raised against his attempt to obtain a reduction of interest payable under the bond. On the other hand the mortgagees cannot be blamed for instituting a suit for the enforcement of their mortgage in a Court which will not recognize the provisions of the local Act. In my judgment, the applicant is within his rights in instituting the suit in Bombay and should not be restrained from taking such a course.

There is no doubt that the institution of two parallel suits in two Courts may lead to complications which if possible should be avoided. It is for the applicant to take such steps as may be open to him. This Court however will not be justified in restraining one of the parties from claiming his legal remedy. An order of injunction no doubt will be helpful to the applicant, but it will manifestly be detrimental to the interest of the opposite party. In my opinion there is no justification for such a discrimination. In the result I discharge the temporary injunction and dismiss the application with costs. I direct that the record be sent immediately to the Court below to enable the applicant to proceed with his appeal.

The principle underlying the cases in which persons have been punished for attacks upon Courts and interferences with the due execution of their orders is not the protecting of either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of them, but the protecting of the public and especially those who either voluntarily or by compulsion are subject to its jurisdiction, from the mischief they will incur if the authority of the tribunal be undermined or impaired. 117 Ind. Mr. U E Maung, for the Respondents.

Mya Bu, J.—The newspaper article which has given rise to this proceeding is the editorial in the Burmese newspaper, the New Light of Burma, dated April 5, 1939, of which respondents Nos. 1 and 2 are the publisher and editor-in-chief respectively. The article contained comments on the finding of the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Rangoon in his Criminal Miscellaneous Trial No. 4 of 1939 in which the Magistrate held an inquest under s. 176, Criminal P. O., into the death of one Maung Aung Gyaw which had provoked widespread public interest in this country. The Magistrate's finding was that the death was due to misadventure. The article in question was entitled "Insult to the whole Burmese Nation," and in it, it was asserted that the Magistrate's finding was entirely different from that of the eye-witnesses and of the whole country, and that it was a view which was an insult to the whole Burmese Nation, and also that an officer who had so much confidence in and reliance on the Police, as the Magistrate in question, was scarcely found. These and the other statements set out below show the true character of the article. After referring to the action of a Deputy Commissioner:

"Who, when a big mob of people attempted to man-hole him, refrained from calling in military aid or dispersing the mob by ordering a baton charge but released arrested persons as desired by the mob, thereby putting the matter to an end", the article went on to state:

"We would like to ask if U Sein Daing's failure to comment that the Rangoon Police should adopt such a procedure was because of desire to suppress the country and to praise the Police alone..... Only recently a Police Officer trod on and tore to pieces a Dobama three colour flag in Rangoon, and when a question was asked in the House, U Ba Pe, Minister for Home Affairs, replied that there were also fools in the Police force and that he would see that such a thing did not happen in future; and persons like U Sein Daing who seem to hold that every Police Officer must be a good man, should take particular note of this. So we do not want to write more about U Sein Daing who favours the Police too much (too partial to the Police)".

"Nevertheless we are indeed surprised and disgusted that U Sein Daing should have such implicit faith in the Commissioner of Police who has acted like the Myowun (Governor) who put a person to death when asked (to use his discretion and chastise him) and pass bad remarks against the country".

These remarks are tantamount to imputations of deliberate perversity, incapability and partiality to the Police on the part of the Magistrate in question. There can be no doubt that they are calculated to bring into contempt, U Sein Daing, the Eastern Sub-Divisional Magistrate, in his capacity as such. For the publication of this article the respondents are liable to be dealt with for contempt of Court.

Their learned Advocate does not contest the proposition that the article prima facie amounts to contempt of Court, but he explains that the article was written in a moment of excitement and it was not the intention of the respondent to make deliberate charges of perversity, incapability and partiality against the Magistrate in question. What the intentions of the respondents were must, in the first place, be judged from their own acts, and considering that the article was written more than 3½ months after Maung Aung Gyaw's death, it is difficult to comprehend what the moment of excitement that is said to be prevailing at the time when the article was published was. The main question for consideration then is what is the suitable form of punishment. In this connexion the respondents have stated through their Advocate that in so far as the article suggests perversity, dishonesty and partiality of the Magistrate and his incapacity for holding his office, they unreservedly express regret and withdraw any such imputation on the Magistrate, and have reiterated the assertion of the absence of intention on their part to make those imputations. The object of a proceeding for contempt of Court and the object of punishment for attacks of this character upon Courts can be clearly understood from quotations of Sir Courtney-Terrell in his judgment in In re Murli Manohar Prasad (1):

"Blackstone, in a celebrated passage of his commentaries (Vol. 4, page 285) which will be found quoted in Legal Remembrancer v. Motilal Ghose (2), at page 255 specifies in his description of contempts of Court, contempts which arise 'by speaking or writing contemptuously of the Court or Judges acting in their judicial capacity and which demonstrate a gross want of that regard and respect which when once Courts of Justice are deprived of, their authority, so necessary for the good order of the Kingdom is entirely lost amongst the people.' Sir John Wilmot, C. J., in R. v. Almon (3) at p. 255 justifies a similar view. After quoting the opinion of Wilmot, C. J., and giving a list of recent authorities Mukherji, J., continues: 'The principle from these cases is that punishment is inflicted for attacks of this character upon Judges, not with a view to protect either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of the attack but with a view to protect the public, and specially those who, either voluntarily or by compulsion, are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, from the mischief they will incur, if the authority of the tribunal be undermined or impaired'.

In Emperor v. Sayyad Habib (4), a Special Bench of the High Court of Lahore laid down that the principle underlying the cases in which persons have been punished for attacks upon Courts and interferences with the due execution of their orders is not the protecting of either the Court as a whole or the individual Judges of the Court from a repetition of them, but the protecting of the public and especially those who either voluntarily or by compulsion are subject to its jurisdiction, from the mischief they will incur if the authority of the tribunal be undermined or impaired. It was also pointed out in that case that the mere fact that an apology has been tendered by the accused is not a sufficient reason for securing immunity from punishment for him. That was a case in which a daily newspaper of Lahore in the course of an article called the Judge "sycophantic" and accused him of having decided the case not according to the dictates of justice but in order to please and curry favour with others. The Special Bench considered that the scandalous nature of that article called for punishment that shall be a deterrent not only to the offender in the case but to all others. Similarly in Emperor v. Jagannath Prasad (5), a Bench of the Allahabad High Court dealing with the case in which, for groundless attacks made by the respondent on the judicial conscience and independence of the presiding officers of certain Courts, the learned Counsel for the respondent stated that his client tendered an apology and threw himself on the mercy of the Court, observed:

"We shall be failing in our duty to uphold the legitimate dignity of the Courts below if in a case like the present, which is a glaring example of gross contempt of the Subordinate Court, we were to accept this apology".

Bearing all these judicial principles in mind, we are of the opinion that we shall be failing in our duty if we, accepting the apology tendered, as stated above, allow the respondents to go unpunished. The nature of the attacks made upon the Magistrate in this case is far worse than those which were the subject-matter of the proceeding in Government Advocate, Burma v. Saya Sein (6). Considering all the circumstances of the case, we order that the respondents do pay a fine of Rs. 250 each in default each to suffer three months' simple imprisonment. The respondents are granted one week's time to pay their fines.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 10, 438—District Magistrate invested with powers under s. 10 has also other powers not contemplated by Code—"Proceeding" in s. 438—Order of District Magistrate not judicial one—No penalty exacted for its non-compliance—Interference by High Court under s. 438.

From the mere fact that the District Magistrate has been invested with certain powers under s. 10, it does not follow that he has not other powers which are not contemplated by the Criminal P. O. He is in addition the Collector of the district. He is also the District Officer and in those capacities he has to perform many functions which are not covered by the Criminal P. O.

The word "proceeding" used in s. 438 must be a proceeding as referred to in s. 435, that is to say, a proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court. The High Court will not interfere where the Magistrate or other officer is acting in an executive and not in a judicial capacity. It is only when an order has been made, and for non-compliance of that order some penalty has been exacted that the High Court will interfere. The Empress v. Surja Narain Das (2), relied on.

Held, that the High Court could not interfere under s. 438 as the order of the District Magistrate was not a judicial order and secondly, because the order was not enforceable and no penalty had been exacted under it.

Sir A. K. Roy (Advocate-General) and Mr. Anil Chandra Roy Choudhry, Against the Reference.

McNair, J.—This is a reference under s. 438, Criminal P. O., by the District and Sessions Judge of Midnapur. The facts are simple. One Mahadeo Singh, an employee of Thakur Shyam Narain Singh, had started on pilgrimage to Puri on one of his master's elephants. They stopped near a village named Kushmai to cook their food. The elephant which was chained nearby somehow escaped into the jungle and was subsequently captured by Choudhury Bijoy Krishna Deb. The captor informed the District Magistrate of the circumstances by a petition filed in his Court. The petitioner alleged that the elephant was causing damage to property and interfering with traffic and that the petitioner after much effort "bagged the said elephant in his own house at a cost of about Rs. 700." The petitioner further stated that nobody claimed the elephant and he asked leave to keep it. The learned District Magistrate granted leave pending an inquiry, and the fact that the elephant was found was advertised, and the District Magistrate at once wrote to the Chief Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal stating the facts and asking for instructions. Thakur Shyam Narain Singh put in his claim to the elephant which was admitted after investigation and the District Magistrate ordered the elephant to be returned to him forthwith. The captor then claimed nearly Rs. 2,000 for his cost of the capture and for feeding the elephant. The District Magistrate considered this figure exorbitant and after directing the captor to appear before him he assessed the costs of capture at Rs. 150 and the costs of feeding the elephant at Rs. 100 a month. He then directed the owner to deposit that amount in Court within three days. The owner appealed to the District Judge who has referred the matter to this Court treating the appeal as a petition for revision. In his report the learned Sessions Judge says that the appeal filed before him was evidently under the impression that the learned District Magistrate was acting under s. 523, Criminal P. C. He thereupon called upon the Additional District Magistrate for a report. The Additional District Magistrate sent a report in which he said that the orders were purely executive in character as distinguished from judicial and cannot form the subject-matter of a criminal appeal. The learned Sessions Judge then sets out his reasons for saying that no appeal lay under s. 523, because the seizure of the elephant was not by a Police Officer, nor was the elephant captured in circumstances creating suspicion of the commission of any offence. He then says that the question however is whether the order passed by the learned District Magistrate is liable to revision by the High Court and if so, whether it should be revised. He states his own view that the District Magistrate's order passed by him was in the capacity of a Magistrate. He considers that the District Magistrate's order was without jurisdiction and he argues that because a District Magistrate derives his powers principally from the Criminal P. C., he may be presumed to be acting under the Criminal P. C., or, in other words, all his orders may be presumed to be judicial rather than executive and his conclusion is that such orders are liable to revision by the High Court under ss. 435 and 438, Criminal P. C.

This opinion of the learned Sessions Judge seems to me to lose sight of the fact that the District Magistrate acts in a dual capacity. In this instance the fact that the learned District Magistrate at the outset wrote to the Political Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal asking for orders suggests that he was not acting in a judicial capacity but possibly in an executive capacity. Again there was no suggestion of a criminal offence and there was no proceeding of a criminal nature. Section 5, Criminal P. C., provides for the investigation of an offence under the I. P. C., according to the provisions contained in the Criminal P. C., and sub-s. (2) of the same section provides that all offences under any other law shall be similarly investigated subject to any enactment for the time being in force regulating the manner or place of investigating, inquiring into, trying, or otherwise dealing with such offences. Section 6 enumerates the classes of Criminal Courts, Class 3 being Magistrates of the First Class. Section 10 provides that in every district outside the presidency towns the Local Govt. shall appoint a Magistrate of the First Class who shall be called the District Magistrate and indeed in this case the learned District Magistrate has been appointed by the Local Govt. under the provisions of s. 10. But because the learned District Magistrate has been invested with certain powers under s. 10, it does not follow that he has not other powers which are not contemplated by the Criminal P. C., as is pointed out by the learned District Magistrate in his letter of explanation. He is in addition the Collector of the district. He is also the District Officer and in those capacities he has to perform many functions which are not covered by the Criminal P. C.

The provisions relating to reference and revision, which are relevant to this enquiry, are found in ss. 435 and 438. Section 435 provides that the High Court or any Sessions Judge or certain other officers may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceeding of such inferior Court. Section 438, under which this reference has been made, empowers the Sessions Judge, on examining under s. 435 or otherwise the record of any proceeding to report for the orders of the High Court the result of such examination. It is quite clear that the word "proceeding" which is used in s. 438 must be a proceeding as referred to in s. 435, that is to say, a proceeding before any inferior Criminal Court, and there is authority for this proposition. There was not in the present instance any 'proceeding' so as to empower the learned Sessions Judge to report under s. 438. The learned District Magistrate has given his opinion that he was acting in an executive and not in a judicial capacity and it has been held in several reported cases that the Court will not interfere where the Magistrate or other officer is acting in an executive and not in a judicial capacity. The question arose before a Bench of this Court in In the matter of Rahman Sirkar (1), where the High Court while considering that an order by a Magistrate professing to act under s. 17 of the Police Act of 1861 was illegal, refused to interfere, on the ground that the order was one of an executive nature. The point of that decision is not that the order was illegal but that the Court considered that it was an order of an executive nature with which this Court had no power to interfere. If an order under s. 17 of the Police Act is an executive order, it seems to me clear that an order of the nature now before us might be an executive order but would certainly not be a judicial order.

The learned Advocate-General, who opposes this reference, has referred us to ss. 25, 26 and 27 of the Police Act. Section 25 empowers a Police Officer to take charge of unclaimed property and to dispose of it under the orders of the District Magistrate. Section 26, empowers the Magistrate to detain the property and to issue a proclamation requiring any person who has any claim thereto to appear and establish his right within six months. Section 27, provides for confiscation of the property if no claimant appears. It has been suggested that possibly these sections were in the mind of the District Magistrate when he issued the proclamation to which I have already referred. The learned Sessions Judge in his report has stated that the real grievance of the petitioner is that though if the animal were impounded, which it is suggested would have been the correct procedure, the charges payable by him could not have exceeded Rs. 93, yet he was being ordered to pay Rs. 550 by the District Magistrate. The learned District Magistrate suggests that the Cattle Trespass Act does not apply. The only reference to the Cattle Trespass Act in the Criminal P. O. is in s. 4, sub-s. 1 (c), where 'offence' is defined as any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force including any act in respect of which a complaint may be made under s. 20, Cattle Trespass Act of 1851. No complaint has in fact been made in this case under s. 20 and it has also been pointed out to us that under s. 31, Cattle Trespass Act, the Local Govt. has transferred the powers of the District Magistrate under that Act to the District Board so that the District Magistrate has no longer power to act under the Cattle Trespass Act unless a complaint has been made under s. 20.

The other point which arises and which in my opinion, prevents this Court from interfering is that the order although the learned District Magistrate suggests that it was made in his executive capacity was not in my opinion, even an executive order. It was, it appears to me, merely advise. An inflated charge had been made by the captor. The owner objected to this strongly and the learned District Magistrate in the capacity apparently of an arbitrator gave an opinion which seems to me very reasonable as to the probable costs of capture and feeding of the elephant. The order was not enforceable and it is only when an order has been made, and for non-compliance of that order some penalty has been exacted that this Court will interfere. This proposition was stated very clearly by Jackson, J. in The Empress v. Surja Narain Das (2). The portion to which I refer is at p. 90. The learned Judge there says:

of orders by executive authorities with the view of preventing a breach of the peace or for similar purposes it has always been held and is now enacted in the existing Code, that the propriety of such orders is not a matter of question in that state of things for the appellate judicial authorities. It is when the executive officers seek to enforce those orders by the infliction of penalties that the Courts have to step in and see whether the orders made were with authority or not."

In the case to which I have referred in In the matter of Rohoman Sirkar (1), the Court refused to interfere upon an order made under s. 17, Police Act. But there are authorities to show that the Court has interfered under ss. 19, 28 or 29, Police Act, where the orders were not made in a judicial capacity but because persons had been convicted and fined. To sum up we are unwilling to interfere in this reference, because in the first place, the order of the District Magistrate was not a judicial order and secondly, because the order was not enforceable and no penalty had been exacted under it. The reference is rejected.

Khundkar, J.—I agree. To the reasons already given by my learned brother in the judgment just now delivered by him, I may add that I entertain considerable doubt whether the order in question is an order at all. It was submitted by the learned Advocate-General that at best it was an executive order; but no law, proclamation or other direction has been cited which gives the District Magistrate any power, executive or otherwise, to assess the proper sum of money which ought to be paid by the owner of an animal to the custodian thereof in circumstances similar to those which have happened in this case. The learned Magistrate was not acting under the Police Act, the Cattle Trespass Act, or even in pursuance of any rules framed or orders passed by the Govt. He seems to have been acting in the role of an arbitrator, more or less self-constituted. The order was as my learned brother has observed merely a piece of advice. It was not in any way enforceable and it was open to the parties to ignore it altogether. At the time when the so-called order was made the rights of the parties were regulated as indeed they are still by the civil law. That position has not in any way been altered or prejudiced by the Magistrate having said that the captor of the elephant would make the elephant over to the owner upon the latter depositing the sum which the Magistrate thought fair.

Execution proceedings are not terminated when the execution is stayed under O. XXI, r. 29, Civil P. When the stay order has ceased to operate it is not incumbent on the decree-holder to make an application to set execution proceedings in motion. Ex. S. A. from a decision of the Additional Civil Judge, Azamgarh, dated January 30, 1937.

Thom, C. J. and Ganga Nath, J.—This is an execution second appeal which raises an important point of law. A mortgage decree was passed on January 5, 1928. A final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5, Civil P. C., was passed in favour of the mortgagees on August 9, 1928. The decree-holders applied for execution of their decree on December 19, 1930. An objection was preferred to the execution application by the judgment-debtors under s. 47, Civil P. C. This objection was dismissed on August 15, 1931. Thereafter the execution application was transferred to the Court of the Collector. On November 6, 1931, one Mst. Tulsa, one of the judgment-debtors, filed a regular suit in which she sought to recover a sum of Rs. 550 on the basis of a receipt, upon which the aforesaid objection to the execution of the mortgage decree under s. 47, Civil P. C., had been preferred. She obtained an order from the Court staying the execution of the mortgage decree pending the result of her suit. Under O. XXI, r. 29, Civil P. C., the Court stayed the execution of the decree "till the disposal of this suit." This order was communicated to the Collector to whose Court the execution proceedings had been transferred. Upon receipt of this order, the Collector returned the record to the executing Court. The learned Munsif on receipt of the record ordered that the papers be filed and consigned to the record room. This order was passed on February 3, 1932.

Mst. Tulsa's suit failed. A final decree of dismissal was passed on February 14, 1933. On July 25, 1935, the decree-holders applied for execution of the mortgage decree against Mst. Tulsa and the other judgment-debtors. The application was opposed by the judgment-debtors who contended that it was barred by time. The learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellate Court has sustained the objection of the judgment-debtors. Following certain decisions to which he refers in the course of his order he has held that the application made on July 25, 1935 having been made beyond three years from the final disposal of Mst. Tulsa's suit it was barred by limitation. In appeal it was contended for the decree-holders that the application of July 25, 1935, should be regarded merely as a step taken by the decree-holders to inform the executing Court that the bar to the execution proceedings had been removed and that it should not be regarded as either a fresh application for execution or an application to revive execution proceedings.

The question whether it is necessary for a decree-holder to make an application for revival of execution proceedings after a bar imposed by the Court to these execution proceedings has been removed is one which has not been specifically considered by this Court. It was held by a Full Bench of this Court in Chhattar Singh v. Kamal Singh (1) that an application such as the application under consideration in this appeal, was not an application for execution but an application to revive execution proceedings and that it was not governed by Art. 181 of Sch. I, Lim. Act. It appears to have been assumed rather than decided that such a revival application was necessary. The Calcutta, Patna and Madras High Courts on the other hand have taken the view that it is not incumbent upon the decree-holder under the provisions of the Civil P. O. to make any application for revival of execution proceedings upon the removal of a bar to these proceedings. The opinion of these Courts has been that in such circumstances it is the duty of the Court to proceed suo motu. The matter was discussed at length in Krishtokaminee Debi v. Girishchandra Mandal (2). The only case in which the question now raised was considered by this Court was Prem Narain v. Ganga Ram (3). That case was disposed of by a Bench consisting of Sulaiman and Niamtullah, JJ. The question now raised was not discussed by Sulaiman, J., but Niamatullah, J., in the course of his judgment, observes:

"It is not in my opinion necessary that a formal application for reviving the proceeding should be made. It is the duty of the Court to proceed to conclusion in a matter pending before it, even though it may be to dismiss the application in default of prosecution. Assuming that an application to 'revive' proceedings is essential I have no doubt that the second application fulfils, in substance, all the requirements of an application for 'reviving' execution proceedings in abeyance. Where it is the duty of the Court to do something or to take some action Art. 181, Lim. Act, does not govern an application asking the Court to do such a thing or to take such action."

The learned Judge then proceeds to dispose of the question before the Bench for decision upon the assumption that Art. 181 was applicable. The expression of opinion above quoted by Niamatullah, J. is therefore clearly obiter. The question appears to us to be one of general importance which in our view should be considered and decided by a Full Bench. Let the record be laid before the Chief Justice for the constitution of a Full Bench to dispose of the appeal.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and Chaturbhuj Sahai, for the Respondent.

Judgment of the Full Bench

Thom, C. J.—This is a decree-holders' appeal in execution proceedings. The appellants obtained a final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5, in a suit upon the basis of a mortgage. They initiated execution proceedings. These proceedings were stayed in circumstances hereinafter set forth. More than three years after the bar imposed by the stay order had ceased to operate the appellants presented an application which has been described in the Courts below as an application for the revival of the execution proceedings. The application was dismissed on the ground that it was time-barred. The final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5, in favour of the mortgagees who are the appellants was passed on August 9, 1928. On December 19, 1930, the decree-holders presented an application for execution. One of the judgment-debtors, Mst. Tulsa, preferred an objection to the application under s. 47, Civil P. C. This objection was dismissed on August 15, 1931. Thereafter the execution Court directed that the application be transferred to the Court of the Collector for disposal.

On November 6, 1931, Mst. Tulsa filed a suit in the Civil Court and obtained an order on January 28, 1932, from the Court staying the execution of the mortgage decree pending the result of her suit. The Court stayed the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 29, Civil P. C., "till the disposal of this suit." This stay order was communicated to the Collector who thereupon returned the record to the execution Court. On receipt of the record the learned Munsif passed an order directing that the papers be filed and consigned to the record room. This order was passed on February 3, 1932. Mst. Tulsa's suit was dismissed on June 14, 1932. An appeal against the order dismissing the suit was dismissed on February 14, 1933. On July 25, 1935, that is more than three years after the dismissal of Mst. Tulsa's suit on February 14, 1933, the appellants, the decree-holders, presented an application praying that their original application be re-transferred to the Collector for disposal. This application was dismissed by the learned Munsif in the execution Court on the ground that it was barred under the provisions of Art. 181, Lim. Act. The Munsif's order has been upheld in the lower Appellate Court. The decree-holders have preferred a second appeal in this Court. If the order of the learned Munsif of February 3, 1932, directing the record to be consigned to the record room had the effect of terminating the execution proceedings then clearly the application of July 25, 1935 is time-barred. The application would then necessarily be a fresh application for execution and it was preferred more than three years after the bar had been removed by the dismissal of Mst. Tulsa's suit.

We are satisfied that the order of the Munsif directing that the file be consigned to the record room did not determine the execution proceedings. There is no warrant for such an order in the Civil P. C. It was in fact an administrative order by which directions were given for the custody of the file pending the result of Mst. Tulsa's suit. On the dismissal of Mst. Tulsa's suit, the execution Court, suo motu, could appropriately have recalled the application for execution from the record room and directed that it should be sent again to the Collector for disposal. The effect of such an order as was passed on February 3, 1932 has been considered in a number of cases in this Court. It is unnecessary to refer at length to the decisions in these cases. Reference may be made however to the cases in Mohammad Taqi Khan v. Raja Ram (4), Rama Kant v. Satya Narain (5), Qamar-ud-Din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (6). In the judgments in these and other cases, there is abundant authority for the view which we hold that an order "striking off" an application and consigning it to the record room does not terminate the proceedings in which the order is passed. The Courts below have not treated the application of July 25, 1935 as a fresh application for execution. They have nevertheless held that the application is one to which the provisions of the Lim. Act, and in particular Art. 181, Sch. I thereof, apply. In other words the Courts below have held that an application to set in motion execution proceedings which have been stayed by the execution Court pending the disposal of a suit is an application which, if not presented within three years of the disposal of the suit, that is from the date on which the stay order has ceased to operate, is barred by limitation.

Upon general principle, judicial authority apart, we are unable to agree with this decision. It is to be observed that there is no special provision in the Civil P. C. for such an application as was presented by the decree-holders to set in motion the execution proceedings which had been stayed pending the result of Mst. Tulsa's suit. The application was made in proceedings which were still pending and in our judgment in the absence of any special provision such an application cannot be barred by limitation. If such an application were subject to the provisions of Art. 181 of Sch. I, Lim. Act, the anomalous position might result of execution proceedings remaining pending in the execution Court whilst an application to continue these pending proceedings would fail. Whether the execution Court could, in such circumstances, dismiss the execution application for want of prosecution is at least doubtful. There is high authority of this Court however for the view which has been taken by the Courts below. In Ruddar Singh v. Dhanpal Singh (7), a Bench of this Court held that Art. 178, Sch. II, Lim. Act, 1-77, applied to such an application as the decree-holders in the present suit have made to revive execution proceedings. In Chhattar Singh v. Kamal Singh (1), a Bench of five Judges held that an application to revive execution proceedings which had been stayed was governed by Art. 181 of the Schedule of the Lim. Act of 1908. This decision was followed by a Bench of this Court in Nabban Begam v. Moti Begam (8). In Chhattar Singh v. Kamal Singh (1), the facts were that the application for revival was made within three years from the removal of the bar imposed by a stay order. The application was held therefore not to be time-barred, but it is clear from the judgment in the case that the Court accepted the proposition that Art. 181 of the Schedule of the Lim. Act applied to such an application.

There are a number of other decisions to which we do not consider it necessary to refer in detail. In none of the cases decided by this Court however has the question as to whether it was incumbent upon the decree-holder to make an application to set execution proceedings in motion been considered. It appears in every case to have been assumed rather than decided that it was the duty of the decree-holder to make an application after the stay order had ceased to operate and that the provisions of Sch. I, Lim. Act, applied to such an application. As Sulaiman, J. observed in his judgment in Chhattar Singh v. Kamal Singh (1):

"The application for revival not being a fresh application for execution cannot be governed by Art. 182. There is not however any special Article which would apply except the omnibus Art. 181. It has been held in several cases that this Article applies to such applications. When Art. 181 applies the period of limitation is three years from the date when the bar to the execution was removed."

(8) (1934) A L J 363; 148 Ind. Cas. 525; A I R 1934 All. 294; 6 R A 709.

The argument that the executing Court should have acted suo motu and listed the execution application for disposal on the removal of the bar to the execution does not appear to have been considered. It has been assumed but never specifically decided by this Court in the past that some Article of the Lim. Act must apply. All applications are not governed by the provisions of the Lim. Act. An application to expediate the hearing of an appeal for example is not governed by the provisions of the Lim. Act. An application to set in motion an execution application which has already been made within time and is still pending is in our judgment an application of a similar nature. In the present case, so far as the execution application was concerned, the decree-holders had done everything that was required of them. They had presented their application for execution within time. They had taken all the necessary steps in the execution Court. That Court had sent the application to the Collector for disposal since the property to be sold in execution of the decree was ancestral property. Nothing more was left for the decree-holders to do. It was for the Collector to have acted in accordance with the rules of Chap. XL of the Revenue Manual promulgated by the Local Govt. under s. 68, Civil P. O. Before the Collector could act in accordance with the provisions of these rules however he was directed by the execution Court to stay proceedings. He accordingly did so and returned the file to the execution Court. When the stay order ceased to operate it clearly was the duty of the execution Court to re-transmit the file to the Collector. If this had been done the Collector would have proceeded to dispose of the application in accordance with the aforementioned rules. It was in fact unnecessary for the decree-holders to have moved in the matter at all. No doubt in their own interests the decree-holders might have brought the fact that Mst. Tulsa's suit had been disposed of, to the notice of the execution Court by means of a minute, but there is no statutory provision under which it was incumbent on them to make an application and if therefore they did make an application clearly it was not governed by the provisions of the Lim. Act. It is true that this view is not in accordance with the opinions expressed in the decisions of this Court above referred to. But as we have already remarked the ques. tion as to whether it was incumbent upon the decree-holders to move when the bar imposed by the stay order had been removed and whether therefore the provisions of the Lim. Act applied at all to an application to set in motion proceedings which had been suspended was never considered by the Court. We do not consider therefore that the Court is bound to follow these decisions in an appeal where the question has been definitely and specifically raised for the first time. It is no doubt true that if the provisions of the Lim. Act do not apply to an application to set suspended execution proceedings in motion the disposal of these proceedings, it is possible, may be indefinitely delayed. This contingency however can be avoided if the execution Court refuses to stay proceedings sine die. The view which we take that Art. 181 of the Schedule of the Lim. Act does not apply to an application to continue execution proceedings which have been stayed has been accepted by the High Courts of Madras, Calcutta, Bombay, Patna and the Chief Court of Oudh. In this connexion we refer to the cases in Pattanayya v. Pattayya (9), Krishtokaminec Debi v. Girishchandra Mandal (2), Thana Zalalji Shet v. The Shop "Dhana Jawhri" (10), Banarsi Prasad v. Kirtyanand Singh (11), and Narain Baksh Singh v. Shiva Bhiku (12).

In the result we hold that the appellants' application is not time-barred. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the order of the lower Appellate Court is set aside. The appellants' application will be returned to the execution Court for disposal according to law.

Second Civil Appeal No. 238 of 1937

HAMILTON, J.

Mst. SHUBRATAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

SHABBIR ALI AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—
RESPONDENTS

Pre-emption—Improvement by vendee—Compensation, when can be granted—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 51—Costs—Plaintiff alleging true consideration to be much less than that found by lower Court—Defendant taking unreasonable defence—Parties ordered to bear their own costs—Order held good—Evidence—Presumption—Party's failure to go into witness-box—Presumption—Party pardanashin lady, effect.

Claim for compensation for improvements by a vendee when a pre-emption suit is filed, is based on s. 51 of the T. P. Act. The question whether or not a transferee believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property cannot be the subject of any hard and fast rules but should be decided on the merits according to the circumstances of each case. [p. 318, col. 2.]

What constitutes good faith is a question of fact to be inferred from the circumstances of each case; failure to make due enquiry does not constitute good faith. The vendee acts in good faith, i. e., under the honest belief that he has secured good title to the property in question, and is the rightful owner thereof, and for this belief there must be some reasonable grounds such as would lead a man of ordinary prudence to entertain it. The belief in good faith includes not only acting honestly but includes due enquiry. 6 Ind. Cas. 141 (6) and 107 Ind. Cas. 36 (7), relied on. [p. 320, col. 1.]

The existence of the right of pre-emption is well-known in the Province of Oudh, and it is a legitimate presumption to hold that the vendee would know of the existence of it. Where the vendee is not co-sharers in the village and even if he does not know all the details of the law of pre-emption he would certainly know that every co-sharer in the village would have the right of pre-emption and the vendee has not shown that he took any step whatsoever to assure himself that co-sharers would not pre-empt and makes improvements in property without waiting for the limitation for pre-emption to expire, he cannot be granted compensation, in a suit for pre-emption against him. Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (1), 146 Ind. Cas. 36 (2) and Nasib Ali v. Sahib Ali (3), explained. [p. 320, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where in a pre-emption suit the defendants wrongly alleged that the plaintiff was not entitled to pre-emption at all and claimed a further sum for improvements to which in law they were not entitled and the plaintiff did not claim pre-emption on the consideration recited in the deed which had been found to be the true consideration but alleged that the real consideration was less than half of what the Court found it to be:

Held, that in the circumstances when the lower Appellate Court ordered that parties should bear their own costs by which order the pre-emption decree of the trial Court was varied, it was impossible to say that in its order as to costs Court did not judicially exercise the discretion vested on him. [p. 318, col. 1.]

A party's failure to go into the witness-box raises a strong presumption against the truth of her case.

The fact of her being a pardanashin lady is not a sufficient excuse for her not getting herself examined even on commission. Mohammad Abbas v. Abdul Bari (5), relied on. [p. 320, col. 1.]

S. C. A. against the order of the District Judge of Lucknow, dated March 17, 1937.

Mr. Hargobind Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. P. Khare, for Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

Judgment.—A plaintiff in a pre-emption suit has appealed against an order of costs passed by the first Appellate Court and there are cross-objections by the defendants-respondents.

The plaintiff in the pre-emption suit was given a decree for pre-emption on payment of the sale consideration as recited in the deed, namely, Rs. 1,000, though he alleged that the real consideration was Rs. 419. The vendees claimed a further sum as money spent on improvements but this claim was not granted in the Courts below and it forms the subject of the cross-objection.

The appeal before me by the plaintiff pre-emptor is against the order of the lower Appellate Court that parties should bear their own costs by which order the decree of the trial Court was varied.

The learned District Judge found that the plaintiff wanted pre-emption on payment of Rs. 419 instead of Rs. 1,000, while, on the other hand, the defendants wrongly alleged that the plaintiff was not entitled to pre-emption at all and claimed a further sum for improvements to which in law they were not entitled. The learned District Judge refers to a number of unreasonable pleas raised by the defendants without specifying them, but I presume that the two that I have given are among them and are the most important. Had the plaintiff claimed pre-emption on the consideration recited in the deed which has been found to be the true consideration possibly the case would not have been defended at all. In the circumstances I find it impossible to say that in his order as to costs the learned District Judge did not judicially exercise the discretion vested on him, or to be more correct, I should perhaps say that he was correct in finding that the plaintiff should not have been given costs in the trial Court when he alleged that the real consideration was less than half of what the Court found it to be. I am not prepared to interfere with the order of the learned District Judge as to costs and the appeal stands dismissed.

The cross-objection raises a more complicated question. The plaintiff's suit for pre-emption was filed on May 16, 1936, the last day of limitation. In August 1935 the vendees started improving the property which consisted of a plot of land with a ruined house by, as alleged by them, raising the level with earth that was brought on donkeys and secondly by improving the foundation of the house or, at any rate, the lower part of it with new bricks which were plastered together by masons. The Courts below found it not proved that new bricks were purchased or that masons were employed and, therefore, found that there was no justification in fact for the claim of Rs. 50-6 for the bricks and Rs. 130-4-6 for the wages of masons. The Courts below, however, found that earth was put there to raise the site and consequently the vendees had incurred an expenditure of Rs. 20 for the earth and Rs. 161-8 for the labourers. The Courts below, however, found that the vendees could not recover this amount because of the decision in Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (10 O. C. 49) (1) which was to be preferred to Qaim v. Ghulam Din (A. I. R. 1933 Lahore, 540) (2). The Court below found that Sajjad Ali, the guardian of the minor vendees, must have known perfectly well that the property was liable to pre-emption, and, therefore, they could have waited for a year till the expiry of the period of limitation before making improvements.

There is a decision of a Single Judge of this Court reported in Nasib Ali v. Sahib Ali (1938 O. W. N. 281) (3) on the question of compensation for improvements by a vendee when a pre-emption suit is filed. It was pointed out there that compensation for improvements was based on s. 51 of the T. P. Act. The learned Judge referred to Qaim v. Ghulam Din (A. I. R. 1933 Lahore 540) (2) and also to another case reported in Narayanaswami Ayyar v. Ram Ayyar (57 I. A. 305) (4) and stated that it appeared to him that the question whether or not a transferee believed in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the property could not be the subject of any hard and fast rules but should be decided on the merits according to the circumstances of each case. With all respect I may say that I entirely agree with this opinion of the learned Judge. The facts in the case before him were that a riaya had a kachcha house and he began to rebuild it pucca when it fell down. After starting the reconstruction he took a sale deed of the site from the majority of the co-sharers, presumably because they objected to a riaya converting a kachcha house into a pucca one. A co-sharer who was living elsewhere brought a suit for pre-emption and the learned Judge held that as the sale was made by the majority of the co-sharers it was not to be wondered at if the defendant in the pre-emption suit entertained the belief in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to the site and he continued building the house. The learned Judge also mentioned the fact that the suit was brought in the twelfth month after the sale in favour of the respondent defendant vendee. On the facts one may say that if the defendant knew of the existence of the custom of pre-emption he knew that the persons entitled to pre-empt were the co-sharers and he did, attempt to prevent pre-emption by taking a sale deed from apparently as many of them as he could find in the village. He limited, therefore, at any rate to a considerable extent, the possibility of pre-emption and he could well think that a non-resident co-sharer would not want that site in preference to him. The learned District Judge preferred Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (10 O. C. 49) (1) to Qaim v. Ghulam Din A. I. R. 1933 Lahore, 540 (2), but he did not consider the facts in either case. In the Lahore case the sale was apparently by one co-sharer to another, for, the learned Judges pointed out that it was due to the fact that an exchange had been agreed upon but mutation was refused because one of the parties was not present before the Revenue Officer on the date fixed for attestation. The pre-emptor was a collateral of the vendor. Ghulam Din, vendee therefore, had justification for the belief, although it was an erroneous belief, that as the sale merely replaced an exchange it would not give rise to a pre-emption suit and, therefore, it was held that he built on the property believing in good faith that he was absolutely entitled to it. There is no reason to hold that the same opinion would have been arrived at by the learned Judges had there not been that incomplete exchange before, for the learned Judges were careful to point out the importance of the circumstance that there had been that exchange which only failed because of the action of the Revenue Officer. In Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (10 O. C. 49) (1) at 56 it was held that the vendee purchased certain villages at his own risk on a title from the vendor which he knew might be challenged by the appellant, and that title was not a perfect title and was to this extent defective that it was dependant upon a right of pre-emption vested in the appellant which he might or might not exercise as he thought fit. Section 51 of the T. P. Act was not referred to in this case although it was in the Lahore case, but the view adopted in Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (10 O. C. 49; (1) on the facts found could well have been held, had s. 51 of the T. P. Act been referred, since if the vendee knew that the title might well be challenged, he could not in good faith believe that he had obtained an absolute interest.

Considering the different facts I do not think it can be held that the decisions in Bindeshuri Singh v. Pandit Balraj Sahai (10 O. C. 49) (1), in Qaim v. Ghulam Din (A. I. R. 1933 Lahore 540), (2) or in Nasib Ali v. Sahib Ali (1938 O. W. N. 281) (3), are in any way in disagreement for the facts were different and consequently the findings were different.

Coming now to the facts of the present case, the learned Counsel arguing the cross-objection says that the vendor Imamuddin did in fact offer the land to the plaintiff in the pre-emption suit and she refused it so that after this the vendee would naturally believe that as against her at any rate they had an absolute interest. The learned Counsel argues that the finding of the learned District Judge that the uncorroborated statement of Imamuddin was insufficient contains a mistake in law because the learned Judge brushed aside the fact that the plaintiff did not appear in the witness-box to deny the statement of Imamuddin because she was a lady and could not be expected to come into the witness-box. He urges that the fact that the plaintiff is a lady does not affect the matter, and her failure to give a denial to Imamuddin should have had the result that Imamuddin should have been believed. The learned District Judge was evidently not aware of Mohammad Abbas v. Abdul Bari (1937 O. W. N. 1022) (5) where it was held that a party's failure to go into the witness-box raises a strong pre-emption (5) (1937) O W N 1022.

sumption against the truth of her case. The fact of her being a pardanashin lady is not a sufficient excuse for her not getting herself examined even on commission. It may be that on this decision the learned Judge should have believed Imamuddin had there been nothing else to cast doubt on his truthfulness. It has, however, been pointed out to me that the learned Civil Judge who tried the suit noted the fact that Imamuddin in examination-in-chief denied that he had a talk with one Juman about a sale of the property in suit and that in such a talk Juman offered him Rs. 400. On the next day in cross-examination he admitted that Juman had in fact offered him Rs. 400. I have been through the statement of Imamuddin and I must come to the conclusion that his statement that Juman had not offered him Rs. 400 was not true and was deliberate and not the result of any mistake or failure to understand any question. If Imamuddin, therefore, deliberately said that he had not offered it to Juman when he had, his statement that he did offer it to the plaintiff loses much of its value without corroboration. There was, therefore, sufficient reason to disbelieve the statement of Imamuddin that he offered it to the plaintiff.

What constitutes good faith is a question of fact to be inferred from the circumstances of each case but it has been held in various cases that failure to make due enquiry does not constitute good faith. In Kandarpanath Ghose v. Jogendranath Bose (12 O. L. J. 391) (6), the learned Judges stated that the vendee must have acted in good faith, i. e. under the honest belief that he has secured good title to the property in question, and is the rightful owner thereof, and for this belief there must be some reasonable grounds such as would lead a man of ordinary prudence to entertain it.

In Lachmi Prasad v. Lachmi Narain (A. I. R. 1928 All. 41) (7), it was held that the belief in good faith includes not only acting honestly but includes due enquiry.

The existence of the right of pre-emption is well known in the Province of Oudh, and it is a legitimate presumption to hold that a person like the vendee's guardian in the present case would know of the existence of it. The vendees were not co-sharers in the village and even if he did not know all the details of the law of pre-emption he would certainly know that every co-sharer in the village would have the right of pre-emption against his wards. He, I mean Sajjad Ali, the guardian of the minor vendees, has not shown that he took any step whatsoever to assure himself that co-sharers would not pre-empt. Once the statement of Imamuddin that he offered the land to the plaintiff is disregarded, we have only his statement that he approached one Juman. Sajjad Ali has not even stated that he enquired from his vendor whether any offer had been made to co-sharers. The position, in fact, in my opinion is this, that Sajjad Ali must have known that there was a custom of pre-emption here as in other villages and he did not take any step whatsoever to satisfy himself that the danger of pre-emption was in any way reduced by any action of his vendor, and, as I have said, the danger was great because any one of the co-sharers might exercise his right of pre-emption. The facts, therefore, are very different from the case reported in Nasib Ali v. Sahib Ali (1938 O. W. N. 281) (3) where the vendee did buy the land from a number of co-sharers and the suit for pre-emption was brought by a non-resident co-sharer from whom such action could hardly be expected. Under the circumstances, I am not prepared to hold that the vendee through their guardian can be said to have made the improvements believing in good faith that they had an absolute interest and consequently they are not entitled to any amount on account of improvements.

The learned Counsel supporting the cross-objection also urges that he is entitled to his expenditure on the stamp and registration fees. Even supposing that he would otherwise be entitled to a refund of these—and I do not say that he would, for such expenses can hardly be considered as the price or purchase money—he is certainly not entitled to them when he knew that there was a right of pre-emption against which he had taken no precaution.

Both the appeal and the cross-objection are therefore dismissed with costs.

SIVAPRASAD SOWCAR—APPELLANT

Madras Survey and Boundaries Act (IV of 1897), ss. 11, 12—Order of survey officer under s. 11 or of appellate authority under s. 12, if breaks continuity of adverse possession held by unsuccessful party—No boundary dispute—One claimant's name entered in register by survey officer as owner of holding—Other claimant, if can institute suit to establish his title as true owner—Res judicata—Applicability to decision of survey officer.

An order of the survey officer under s. 11, or of the appellate authority under s. 12 of the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act, in itself has not the effect of causing a break in the continuity of the adverse possession held by the unsuccessful party so as to preclude his making use of the period of his prior possession to make up the period of 12 years required by the Lim. Act, to complete his title. If the unsuccessful party remains in adverse possession of the disputed area for over 12 years his title is good irrespective of any order passed under the Act. 141 Ind. Cas. 307 (9) and 152 Ind. Cas. 462 (12), Overruled. Observation of Wadsworth, J., in 150 Ind. Cas. 543 (10), held, should be disregarded. [p. 329, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

There was no provision in the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act for the decision of any question of title unless it was in respect of land involved in a boundary dispute. Where there was no boundary dispute, but in making the survey the survey officer found that two persons were claiming title to the same holding, he would for the purposes of the register have to decide whose name should be inserted therein as the owner, but this in itself did not mean that the Act empowered the survey officer, or the appellate authority to decide who was in law entitled to the property under survey. There was no provision in the Act which could be read as operating in such circumstances to prevent A when B had been registered as the owner of a holding, from instituting a suit in a Court of competent jurisdiction to establish his title as the true owner. [p. 327, cols. 1 & 2.]

Per Krishnaswami Ayyangar and Somayya, JJ., (in order of reference).—The rule of res judicata cannot be applied to the decision of a survey authority under the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act. 74 Ind. Cas. 584 (4), relied on. [p. 323, col. 2.]

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 203 of 1934.

Order of Reference to a Full Bench

Krishnaswami Ayyangar and Somayya, JJ.—The plaintiff is the appellant. The property in dispute is a house in Allipuram, a suburb of Vizagapatam. The original owner was one Sekharamantri Appalaswami, the father of defendant No. 1 in the suit and respondent No. 1 in the second appeal. Sekharamantri Appalaswami was indebted to the father of respondents Nos. 2 to 5, one Kanti Mahanti Appalanarasayya. For the recovery of the debt, K. Appalanarasayya instituted a suit against Appalaswami and in execution of the decree obtained therein purchased the suit house on January 7, 1916, and obtained a sale certificate on July 2, 1920. Though he thus obtained a perfect title to the house, he never reduced it to possession, either by process in execution or otherwise. S. Appalaswami and after him his son respondent No. 1 have continued in undisturbed possession of the house. By the date of the suit, they had been in possession for over 15 years, a period sufficiently long to give them a prescriptive title under Art. 144, Lim. Act, against K. Appalanarasayya or anyone claiming under him, or indeed against all the world. The plaintiff derives his title to the suit house from K. Appalanarasayya. He had advanced money on a mortgage of the house to the latter. On that mortgage the plaintiff instituted a suit and obtained a decree. In execution the plaintiff himself purchased the house on September 6, 1929 and a sale certificate was issued to him on October 10, 1929. Resisted in obtaining possession by defendant No. 1, he filed an application to remove the obstruction, but the application was dismissed. Within one year of this adverse order, the plaintiff instituted the present suit to set aside the order, and to recover possession of the house. The claim is resisted by defendant No. 1, on the ground that the appellant's title assuming he had a good title has been lost by adverse possession. Seeing that on the findings of the Courts below respondent No. 1 and his father have been in continuous and exclusive adverse possession of the property, the appellant would prima facie be barred. Acting on this view the Courts below have dismissed the suit, overruling a contention of the appellant advanced with the object of getting over the bar of limitation.

To appreciate that contention a few facts are necessary. In 1922 there was a Town Survey of Vizagapatam and its suburbs, in one of which, namely, Allipuram, we have said that the suit house is situate. The site of the house was demarcated as No. 967 belonging to K. Appalanarasayya, who as we have already mentioned, had purchased the property in Court auction in 1916, and had accordingly a perfectly good title at the time. This survey number as well as certain others formed the subject-matter of a survey dispute, as shown by the order dated November 29, 1922 of the appellate survey authority in land complaint Appeal No. 126-F. B. It may at this stage be mentioned that the survey was conducted under the provisions of the Survey and Boundaries Act (IV of 1897). It is found from the the appellate order aforesaid that the appellant was one Mantri Lakshminarasimham. There were four respondents and two of them were K. Appalanarasayya and S. Appalaswami. It looks as if Survey No. 967 was claimed by the appellant as against K. Appalanarasayya and it does not appear that there was any dispute between K. Appalanarasayya and S. Appalaswami inter se as regards the suit house. The former produced his sale certificate of 1920, and on its strength he was recognized as the owner, and registered as such. The latter whose adverse possession was at the time only six years old could not with any chance of success object to the title of the former and for that reason apparently, acquiesced in the decision without raising any objection then or thereafter either within the time limited by s. 13 of the Act or even afterwards. The survey order accordingly became final under s. 12 (3) and conclusive under s. 13.

It is contended for the appellant that the survey decision by reason of its statutory attributes has the effect of dissipating and putting an end to the prior title if any, in the unsuccessful party, inclusive of such growing but immature right arising out of a possession for less than the statutory period. There can be no doubt, that such a possession is not to be treated as carrying no legal consequence, as the law invests the possessor with certain limited rights not only as against a stranger but even against the true owner. On the argument of the appellant the period of adverse possession prior to the order must be ignored altogether, and is not to be tacked on to the later period. The order of the survey authority, it is urged, has the effect in law of interrupting the continuity of the possession, and creating or recognizing on its date a complete title, which can only be displaced by a fresh period of adverse possession for the statutory period to be counted from the date of the order. This is a question on which there has been a divergence of judicial opinion due to a decision of a Division Bench in Azhagerumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1) which strikes a note, it seems to us, different to that involved or expressed in the other cases of this Court including the Full Bench decision in Muthirulandi Poosari v. Sethurama Iyer (2). We shall revert to this question a little later.

It is to be observed that the finality attached by s. 12 (3) of the Act to a survey officer's decision, is a finality only for the purposes of the survey operations, and the survey records compiled as a result of those operations. It has no further efficacy and does not affect title in particular; vide Chinna Venkatrayudu v. Ramamurthi (3). But the provisions of s. 13 have a more far-reaching effect and it is settled that if a case fell within the section, and the suit contemplated by it is not instituted within the time limited, the survey order becomes decisive of even a question of title. But to have this consequence it must be clearly shown that the conditions of the section have been fully satisfied. In the present case we are of opinion that they are satisfied. Section 13 is as follows:

"Any party to a boundary dispute before the survey officer, and any party to an appeal preferred under s. 12 or to whom notice of such appeal is given, and any person claiming under any such party, deeming himself aggrieved by the order of the survey officer or by the decision of the appellate authority, as the case may be, may, subject to the provisions of Parts II and III, Lim. Act, 1877, institute, within the period of one year from the date of such order or decision, a suit to establish the right which he claims in respect of the boundary of the property surveyed: Provided that, subject to the result of such suit, if any, such order or decision shall be conclusive as between the parties to the dispute or to the appeal, including those to whom notice of such appeal has been given and those claiming under such parties or any of them."

The section makes it obligatory on the following descriptions of persons who deem themselves aggrieved by the order, to institute a suit within the period of one year to establish their claim on pain of being forever precluded from agitating it by suit or otherwise. They are: (i) a party to a boundary dispute, (ii) a party to an appeal preferred under s. 12, and (iii) a person though not impleaded as a party to the appeal has yet had notice of the appeal served on him.

(2) 42 M. 425; 50 Ind. Cas. 43; A. I. R. 1919 Mad. 779; 36 M. L. J. 356; 9 L. W. 323; 25 M. L. T. 293; (1919) M. W. N. 226 (F. B.).

(3) 44 M. 340; 61 Ind. Cas. 986; A. I. R. 1921 Mad. 63; 40 M. L. J. 148; (1921) M. W. N. 117; 13 L. W. 451.

The effect of the section is to treat class (iii) as on the same footing as class (ii), as service of the notice of appeal makes them in fact, though not in form, parties to the appeal. If we refer to s. 12, it is clear that a right of appeal is conferred on a registered holder the boundaries of whose holdings are affected by the order of the survey officer. If the boundary is before the officer, the order settling the dispute is made conclusive as between the disputants by force of s. 13 unless challenged by suit. Even where no dispute had been brought up before the officer, and the officer had merely directed the boundary to be laid down as pointed out by the registered holder or his agent, a right of appeal is given to a neighbouring holder on the issue of the notification contemplated by s. 11 (4). In this case, notice is directed by s. 12 (1) (c) to issue "to all registered holders, the boundaries of whose holdings may be affected by the proceedings in appeal." Both classes of persons, namely, those originally impleaded by the appellant, and those others to whom notice is issued by reason of the fact that the boundaries of their holdings may be affected by the result of the appeal are bound by the order passed by the appellate authority. This is the language of s. 13.

In the present case, both K. Appalanarasayya and S. Appalaswami were made parties to the appeal at the outset and we must presume that notice went to the latter in the appeal, and he was aware of the proceedings when they went on, and of the result after they ended. It is clear that the interests of these two individuals conflicted, as Appalaswami was holding possession adversely to K. Appalanarasayya though it is equally clear that no actual conflict or dispute between them was brought up for determination by the appellate authority. On the contrary it is the claim of the appellant alone who apparently set up a right as against K. Appalanarasayya or perhaps even against all the respondents as a body, that was determined by the order. If the rule of res judicata as between co-defendants, is to be applied, we should be inclined to hold that the order in question cannot be taken to have conclusively determined the question of title as between the two respondents, namely, K. Appalanarasayya and S. Appalaswami as the adjudication on the point was not necessary for giving relief to the appellant. None of the respondents had a case which can be said to have been common to him and the appellant, so that the decision could be said to have settled a dispute latent at least in character as between the respondents though it did not come up in a practical form before the survey authority. Even apart from this consideration it seems to us that we shall not be warranted in applying the rule of res judicata to the decision of a survey authority under the Act especially after the pronouncement on the point by the Privy Council in Radhakrishna Iyer v. Sundaraswamier (4) where their Lordships cited with approval the following passage in the judgment of the High Court, namely :

"The answer is that the general doctrine of res judicata is not in question, but the application of the special rule stated in s. 52 (3), Estates Land Act . . ."

The language of the section has therefore to be construed without reference to the body of rules evolved in relation to the doctrine of res judicata as applied to the decision of a Civil Court. From this standpoint it is only necessary to enquire whether K. Appalanarasayya and S. Appalaswami were parties to the appeal within s. 13, and not whether there was any active contest between them. Once it is shown, as it has been shown in this case, that S. Appalaswami was a party, the order is conclusive against him even though he had not actively resisted K. Appalanarasayya's claim. There is no hardship or injustice involved in this view being accepted. For it is difficult to imagine that a person being a party to the appeal and not realizing the nature or the consequence of a decision, if it went against him. If in spite of this knowledge, he chooses to keep quiet without questioning it by suit, he must take a consequence for which he alone is responsible.

It therefore becomes necessary to decide for the disposal of this second appeal the question to which we have adverted above. It will be enough to refer to three decisions of this Court to indicate the reason which has prompted us to refer the consideration of the question to a Full Bench. We may at once say that our inclination is to interpret the Full Bench decision in Muthirulandi Poosari v. Sethurama Iyer (2) in favour of the appellant, that is to say in support of the view that the adverse possession of the unsuccessful claimant during the period anterior to the decision of the survey authority is to be ignored as of no legal consequence. In the case before the Full Bench, the plaintiffs whose title to the property in dispute had been established by a decree of the Civil Court in 1900 continued in undisturbed possession till 1913 when on account of the defendants attempting to interfere with their possession they instituted the suit for an injunction against them. It appeared that some time between 1904 and 1906 in the course of a survey conducted under the Act, the survey officer had passed an order demarcating the land as belonging to the defendant's father in spite of the plaintiff's opposition. The possession of the property however continued with the plaintiffs undisturbed by the defendants notwithstanding the survey order. The District Judge reversed the judgment of the District Munsif who had decided in favour of the defendants and held, following Krishnamma v. Acharyya (5) that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed as the demarcation of boundaries by the survey officer did not interfere with plaintiffs' continued enjoyment from even before the date of the order. A second appeal was preferred and came before Phillips and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ., who considered it necessary to refer the following question to the Full Bench, viz:

"When a plaintiff's claim has been disallowed under the Survey and Boundaries Act IV of 1897, but he has been in possession of the property, does the decision of the survey officer operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession."

This reference was rendered necessary as in the view of the referring Judges the decision in Krishnamma v. Acharyya (5) was felt to be of doubtful authority. In his order of reference, Phillips, J., expressed his inability to accept the contention based on this decision that the plaintiffs' title could be supported on the strength of their adverse possession. If their possession both prior and subsequent to the survey order were taken into account, it was for more than the required duration, and the argument would have prevailed. But the learned Judge was of opinion that such addition was not permissible, as the survey officer's order had the effect of interrupting the continuity of the possession which the plaintiffs had held. The other referring Judge, Seshagiri Ayyar, J., appears to have shared the same opinion as in any other view it is not possible to understand his observation that the defendants acquired a title to the property on the date of the survey officer's demarcation. The italics are ours and the words italicized involve the proposition that the survey order had the effect of creating a new title requiring to be displaced by a sufficient period of adverse possession to commence after its date.

The question propounded for answer by the Full Bench did not in terms expressly refer to the point adverted to above. Nonetheless it is clear that the prior possession of the unsuccessful party which had continued undisturbed even after the order was obviously the ground of the doubt which called for solution. The answer was given by Wallis, C. J., on behalf of the Full Bench in a somewhat terse statement that the order

"if not reviewed by the appellate authority or questioned by suit as provided in the section was conclusive as to the rights of the parties, and nonetheless so because the unsuccessful party who was in possession at the date of the order was not subsequently ousted from possession."

There is no specific mention here of the effect of the survey order on the running of adverse possession, but it is equally certain that there is nothing to suggest a dissent from the opinion of the referring Judges. The continuance of the possession in the unsuccessful party was held not to affect the conclusiveness of the order against him. When the second appeal came again before the Division Bench after the return of the answer by the Full Bench, the Court reversed the judgment of the District Judge, and negatived the claim of the plaintiffs. This result could have been arrived at only on the footing that the Full Bench had sanctioned the view of the referring Judges, viz., that the survey officer's order brought about a break in the continuity of the adverse possession which should therefore be dated as from the date of the order and not earlier. It was in this sense Devadoss, J. understood the principle underlying the section, as interpreted by the Full Bench, and we think there is a great deal of force in it as the opposite view would tend to detract from the conclusiveness of the order, enacted by the section. His judgment was, however, upset on appeal under the Letters Patent, by a Bench of two Judges, Reilly and Ananthakrishna Ayyar, JJ. who took a different view of the ruling, supporting themselves by a pronouncement of Ramesam, J. in Kuppuswami v. Venkataswami (6) and also by an unreported decision of Benson and Krishnaswami Ayyar, JJ. in S. A. No. 1102 of 1900. They observed:

"Neither the decision of the survey officer, nor the planting of stones in accordance with it in proceedings under the Act ipso facto dispossesses any party, nor could it make a legal break in existing possession so as to render ineffective for purposes of limitation any adverse possession running at its date."

To our mind it appears, if we may say so with respect, that this expression of opinion is contrary to the view of the Full Bench, whatever merit there may be in the reason adduced by the Court, namely that it would be very extraordinary if the survey officer's decision could have an effect denied to the decision of a Civil Court as in Subbayya Pandaram v. Mohammad Mustapha Maracayar (7) and Singaraivelu Mudaliar v. Chockalinga Mudaliar (8). In a later decision reported in Ramamurthi v. Narayana Gajapati Raju (9), the view which prevailed in Azhagaperumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1), was not accepted. The matter first came before Spencer, J. sitting as a single Judge in Second Appeal, from whose decision a Letters Patent Appeal was preferred which came up before a Division Bench composed of Waller and Pandalai, J.J. who differed. The main question on which the difference of opinion arose was as to what should be considered as a boundary dispute within the meaning of the Act. With reference to the point now under consideration after referring to the Full Bench decision, Waller, J., expressed himself emphatically as follows:

"The referring Judges in that case were definitely of opinion that the decision of the survey officer made a break in the adverse possession and that the period before the decision could not be tacked on to the period after it, so as to make the adverse possession continuous. And the Full Bench did not dissent from their opinion."

Pandalai, J. favoured the other view, accepted in Azhagaperumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1), holding that a survey officer's decision as to boundary does not have the legal effect of terminating the possession of the man who was in possession or of breaking the running of his possession for purposes of limitation. On a reference to a third Judge, Wallace, J., endorsed the opinion of Waller, J. in preference to that of Pandalai, J. and animadverted on the contrary decision of the Division Bench, as not in accordance with the effect of the Full Bench ruling which, according to him decision that the successful party is in possession even though the unsuccessful party was really in possession, and that the decision estops the unsuccessful party from urging later on that he was in possession."

"held that the decision of a survey officer is a (7) 46 M 751; 74 Ind. Cas. 492; A I R 1923 P O 175; 50 I A 295; 21 A L J 730; 45 M L J 588; 25 Bom. L R 1275; 18 L W 903; (1924) M W N 65; 28 O W N 493; 2 Pat. L R 104; 33 M L T 285; 40 O L J 20 (P O).

An attempt at reconciliation of the conflicting views has been made by Wadsworth, J. in Tallapragada Achutharamaya v. Ayyagari Soorappayya (10), in which he has also endeavoured to support the decision in Azhagaperumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1), by suggesting that the survey officer in that case had not determined any question of possession. According to the learned Judge, the survey officer's decision can be regarded as final only to the extent to which it purports to decide the rights of the parties, the governing factor being the actual decision. On this view it will be necessary in every case to enquire whether the decision of the survey officer was based on possession or on title. If it is based on an adverse finding against the title of the unsuccessful party on a mere consideration of the documentary evidence of ownership, that finding should not according to the learned Judge, stand in the way of his adding up his possession anterior as well as posterior, so as to make up the period required by the Lim. Act, for a prescriptive title. With very great respect, we feel that the survey officer is not called upon to give an express decision on either title or possession. The Court is merely called upon to interpret the conclusiveness attributed to a demarcation of boundary by an officer charged with the duty of deciding a question of boundary only. An analysis of the basis of his decision, leading to a difference in the effect of the decision on the rights of the parties does not appear to be warranted by anything in the language of the section. We regret to say that we are not convinced of the correctness of the reasoning either on which the learned Judge has supported the decision in Azhagaperumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1), as not being really inconsistent with the Full Bench ruling. However that may be, we think that the time has arrived for the conflict of opinion noticed above being resolved by a reference to the Full Bench of the following question:

"Whether the order of a survey officer under s. 11, or of the appellate authority under s. 12, Mad. Act IV. of 1897 has the effect of causing a break as on the date of the order, in the continuity of the adverse possession held by the unsuccessful party, so as to preclude his making use of the period of his prior possession to make up the period of twelve years required by the Lim. Act to perfect a title by adverse possession."

OPINION

Leach, C. J.—A person named Kantimahanti Appalanarasayya obtained a decree against one Sekharamantri Appalaswami and in execution of that decree attached immovable property belonging to the latter in Allipuram, a suburb of Vizagapatam. The property was sold at a Court-auction on January 7, 1916 and the decree-holder became the purchaser, the sale certificate being issued to him on July 2, 1920. Appalanarasayya took no steps to gain possession of the property which remained with the judgment-debtor. In the year 1922 a re-survey of all the properties lying within the boundaries of Vizagapatam took place. The property which was the subject of the Court-auction was registered as Survey No. 967. Notwithstanding that Appalanarasayya had made no attempt to obtain possession of this property he claimed it as his, and although the survey officer's order has not been produced it would appear that he was registered as the owner and that Appalaswami as the owner of an adjoining area marked as Survey No. 999. The Court has been given to understand that before the sale Appalaswami was the owner of both the arrears. The survey officer's order was passed under the provisions of s. 11, Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act, 1897. An appeal from the order was preferred under the provisions of s. 12 of the Act and the appellate authority passed an order in these terms:

"The complaint in respect of S. Nos. 967 and 999 relate to wrong registration and as such does not fall within the scope of the Boundary Disputes Act of IV 1897. The present registry in the names of Kantimahanti Appalanarasayya and Sekharamantri Appalaswami respectively is confirmed."

It is common ground that there was no dispute as to the boundaries of the respective properties. The only dispute was whether Appalanarasayya or Appalaswami's name should be registered as the owner of S. No. 967. In 1926 Appalanarasayya mortgaged S. No. 967 to the appellant in the appeal out of which this reference arises. The appellant filed O. S. No. 299 of 1927 of the Court of the District Munsif of Vizagapatam to enforce his mortgage. He obtained a decree and the property was sold by the Court on July 6, 1929, the purchaser being the appellant to whom a sale certificate was granted on October 10, 1929. Appalaswami, who was in possession and had remained in possession throughout, refused to deliver the property to the appellant and Appalaswami's possession having been established the appellant's application was dismissed. Within one year of the order of dismissal the appellant instituted the present suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Vizagapatam for a decree for possession. At the date of the suit Appalaswami had been in adverse possession of the property continuously for fifteen years, unless the orders passed under the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act, 1897 operated to create in law a break. The District Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the orders passed in the survey proceedings did not disturb the continuity of Appalaswami's possession. On appeal the Subordinate Judge concurred in this decision. A second appeal was then filed to this Court and came before Krishnaswami Ayyangar and Somayya, JJ. In view of the conflict which exists in the authorities the learned Judges have referred the following question to a Full Bench:

"Whether the order of a survey officer under s. 11, or of the appellate authority under s. 12, Mad. Act IV of 1897 has the effect of causing a break as on the date of the order, in the continuity of the adverse possession held by the unsuccessful party, so as to preclude his making use of the period of his prior possession to make up the period of twelve years required by the Lim. Act to perfect a title by adverse possession?"

This Bench has been constituted to answer the question. Before turning to the authorities it is necessary to examine in some detail the provisions of the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act, 1897. That Act has been replaced by the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act, 1923, but as the survey proceedings took place under the old Act regard can only be had to the provisions of the former Act. I may in passing mention that so far as this case is concerned, there is no material difference between the two Acts. The Act of 1897 was an Act relating to survey of lands and settlement of boundary disputes and its provisions can only have application to such matters. Section 11 (1) provided that if, at the time of survey, a boundary was undisputed the survey officer might order that the boundary should be laid down as pointed out by the registered holder or his agent. Sub-s. (2) said that if the registered holder was not present, or if the boundary was disputed, the survey officer should order it to be laid down, as nearly as might be, in accordance with the village records, or as ascertained from the village officers and from such other evidence as the survey officers might be able to procure. Sub-section (3) said that the order passed by the survey officer in the case of any dispute under sub-s. (2) should be recorded in writing and the purport thereof communicated forthwith to the parties to the dispute a copy of the order being furnished to them on their application and at their cost. Sub-section (4) said that when the survey of a village or other defined local area forming part of the land under survey had been completed in accordance with the orders passed under sub-ss. (1), (2) and (3), the survey officer should notify the fact as soon as practicable thereafter. Section 12 provided for appeals against orders under s. 11. Sub-section (3) of that section said that the order of the survey officer, or, in the event of an appeal being filed, the decision of the appellate authority, should be final, and there should be no further appeal from such decision. But s. 13 allowed the matter to be carried further by a suit. It said that any party to a boundary dispute before the survey officer, and any party to an appeal preferred under s. 12 or to whom notice of such appeal was given, and any person claiming under any such party, who deemed himself aggrieved by the order of the survey officer or by the decision of the appellate authority, as the case might be, might, subject to the provisions of the Lim. Act, institute within a period of one year from the date of such order or decision, a suit to establish the right which he claimed 'in respect of the boundary of the property surveyed,' provided that, subject to the result of the suit, if any, the order or decision should be conclusive. To this section was added an explanation in these words;

"Where parties litigate bona fide in respect of boundaries of property claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such boundary dispute shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to claim under the parties so litigating."

There was no provision in the Act for the decision of any question of title unless it was in respect of land involved in a boundary dispute. If there was a boundary dispute the Act provided the machinery for its settlement and the survey officer's order demarcating the boundaries was final subject to an appeal under s. 12 or to the decision in a suit under s. 13. When it was a matter of a boundary dispute the survey officer had to decide where the boundary should lie and if he decided that the piece of land in dispute fell within the boundary of one of the opposing parties his order did affect the title to that particular piece of land. Where there was no boundary dispute, but in making the survey the survey officer found that two persons were claiming title to the same holding, he would for the purposes of the register have to decide whose name should be inserted therein as the owner, but this in itself did not mean that the Act empowered the survey officer, or the appellate authority to decide who was in law entitled to the property under survey. I can find no provision in the Act which can be read as operating in such circumstances to prevent A, when B had been registered as the owner of a holding, from instituting a suit in a Court of competent jurisdiction to establish his title as the true owner.

In Kuppuswami v. Venkataswami (6), Courts-Trotter and Ramesam, JJ. held that where the survey officer had found that the plaintiffs were in possession and no suit had been filed under s. 13 of the Act of 1897 the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession, even though the defendants had as a matter of fact been in possession for over the statutory period of twelve years part of which was before and the remainder was subsequent to the decision of the survey officer. Courts-Trotter, J. had no doubt that the survey officer's order was wrong but he considered that the case was governed by the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Muthammal v. Secretary of State (11). I am unable to share the opinion that the Full Bench decision had application. In the Full Bench case Wallis, C. J. and Ayling and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ. applied the doctrine of res judicata in these circumstances. A boundary settlement officer had decided under the Boundaries Act of 1860 that certain land did not fall within the boundaries of a mitta and had never formed part of the mitta. No suit was brought by the mittadar to contest this finding under s. 25 of the Act. The Full Bench considered that the ground of the decision as well as the actual decision was res judicata in a subsequent suit instituted by the mittadar to recover the lands as having formed part of the mitta or in the alternative for a deduction of the peshkush of the mitta. This dispute can only be regarded as a boundary dispute and the decision of the Full Bench is not in point in the present case, nor was it in point in Kuppuswami v. Venkataswami (6). The Privy Council in Radha Krishna Iyer v. Sundaraswami (4) held in a case arising out of the Mad. Estates Land Act of 1908 that the doctrine of res judicata did not apply to a suit under that Act, although the Board recognized that a statute might embody a special rule which operated as a bar to the same question being re-agitated in subsequent proceedings, and some day Muthammal v. Secretary of State (11) may have to be reconsidered in the light of the ruling of the Privy Council in the case under the Mad. Estates Land Act, but it is not necessary to dwell on the question here. Before leaving Kuppuswami v. Venkataswami (6) I may mention that in his judgment in that case Ramesam, J. indicated that in his opinion the decision in Muthirulandi Poosari v. Sethurama Iyer (2) to which I shall next refer did not prevent a plea of adverse possession being raised subsequent to the decision of the survey officer.

In Muthirulandi Poosari v. Sethurama Iyer (2) Wallis, O. J., and Ayling and Kumaraswami Sastri, JJ. held that an order passed by a survey officer under s. 11 of the Act of 1897 on a dispute arising between two parties with regard to the boundary of a certain property was conclusive as to the rights of the parties if not set aside either on appeal or by a suit brought within one year, and it was nonetheless so, because the unsuccessful party who was in possession on the date of the order was not subsequently ousted from possession. The dispute merely related to the boundary of the two holdings and therefore fell within the four corners of the Act. The statement that the decision was nonetheless conclusive as to the rights of the parties, because the unsuccessful party who was in possession at the date of the order was not subsequently ousted from possession carried the decision no further. The Court was not considering whether one of the parties had obtained a title to an area by adverse possession.

In my opinion the correct view of the scope of the Act was taken by Reilly and Ananthakrishna Ayyar, JJ., in Azhagaperumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1). There it was said that the decision of a survey officer for the planting of stones for the demarcation of the boundary does not ipso facto dispossess any party, nor make any legal break in existing possession so as to render ineffective for purposes of limitation any adverse possession running at the date of the decision. In that case it was argued that the judgment in Muthirulandi Poosari v. Sethurama Iyer (2) ran contrary, but this argument was rejected by the learned Judges and the opinion of Ramesam, J. in Kuppuswami v. Venkataswami (6) was accepted as supporting their decision.

There are two cases which conflict with the decision in Azhagaperumal Pillai v. Rasa Pillai (1). The first is Ramamurti v. Narayana Gajapati Raju (9) and the second is Seetharamaraju v. Narayanaraju (12). In the first case in the course of a survey, a dispute arose whether a certain field lying wholly within the boundaries of a zamindari should be demarcated as an inam or as part of the ryoti land of the zamindari. The zamindar claimed the land as ryoti land and the inamdār as his mirasi inam. The survey officer demarcated the land as mirasi inam, and his decision was upheld on appeal. The zamindar did not file a suit under s. 13 of the Act but in a suit brought subsequently by the inamdār against the zamindar the question of title was raised. The appeal was heard by Waller and Krishnan Pandalai, JJ. Waller, J. was of the opinion that the dispute was a boundary dispute within the meaning of the Act, that the survey officer had jurisdiction to decide the dispute and that as the zamindar did not file a suit within a year under s. 13 to get the decision set aside it had conclusively decided that the land was Govt. service inam and not part of the zamindari. Pandalai, J. held that the Act did not preclude the institution of the suit. He observed:

"In my opinion when two people dispute title to an ascertained and definite piece of land or to subordinate interests therein, the dispute cannot in any proper sense be described as a boundary dispute though as a result of the disputed title being settled, the boundaries of the property of one or other of the disputants may be accordingly shifted. If there was a real boundary dispute I can understand that a question of title depending solely on the boundary may become concluded as a necessary logical consequence but not by virtue of the Act. But if there was no such dispute, it cannot be inferentially introduced into a dispute about title and then held to be inferentially decided under the Act so that the question of title becomes concluded by a further inference. There was, in my opinion, no boundary dispute in the proper sense before the Assistant Superintendent of Survey, and his order, Exs. G and 23, being one on a matter beyond his jurisdiction could not become conclusive under the Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act."

As the result of the disagreement the appeal was referred to a third Judge, Wallace, J., who agreed with Waller, J. Wallace, J. refused to accept the argument that there could not be a boundary dispute unless there was a dispute between two estates or between Govt. and an estate regarding the physical boundary of some piece of land contiguous to both, that is a dispute as to "when, where and how" the boundary between both should run, but that if the dispute involved on one side or the other the whole of the contestant's property there could not be any boundary dispute, because the boundary of the disputed portion was not itself in dispute. The learned Judge said that he could see no principle in such a contention. I cannot agree. In my opinion the judgments of Wallace and Waller, JJ. are contrary to the scheme and the provisions of the Act. The Act was never intended to vest in the survey officer or in the appellate authority power to decide a pure question of title when the boundaries were accepted by both sides, which was the case in Ramamurti v. Narayana Gajapati Raju (9). The decision in Seetharamaraju v. Narayanaraju (12) was given by Butler, J. who followed Ramamurti v. Narayana Gajapati Raju (9). These two cases therefore stand or fall together.

The only other case which calls for mention is Tallapragada Achutharamayya v. Ayyagari Soorappayya (10). There, Wadsworth, J. endeavoured to reconcile the two conflicting views but I consider that they are too divergent for reconciliation. The learned Judge read the judgment of the Full Bench in Muthirulandi Poosari v. Sethurama Iyer (2) as laying down the rule that the survey officer's decision under s. 11 of the Act of 1897 is conclusive as to the rights of the parties, but he said that it was apparent that the survey officer's decision could only be final to the extent to which it purported to decide those rights. If the survey officer decided that the unsuccessful claimant was not in possession, the learned Judge considered that it would not be open to the unsuccessful claimant to contend that he had acquired a title by adverse possession. On the other hand, if the survey officer merely on a consideration of the documentary evidence of ownership gave an adverse finding regarding title Wadsworth, J. saw no reason why that finding should bar the unsuccessful claimant from contending in subsequent proceedings that at the time of the survey officer's order he had trespassed successfully on the land in question and that his unlawful possession continued and was openly hostile to the real owner, taking into consideration possession before and after the survey officer's order. The governing factor was what the survey officer actually decided; the unsuccessful claimant could not go behind that. I have already indicated what my reading of the Act is and I cannot regard these statements of Wadsworth, J. as embodying a correct interpretation of the law.

The answer which I give to the reference is that an order of the survey officer under s. 11, or of the appellate authority under s. 12 of the Act, in itself had not the effect of causing a break in the continuity of the adverse possession held by the unsuccessful party so as to preclude his making use of the period of his prior possession to make up the period of 12 years required by the Lim. Act to complete his title. If the unsuccessful party remained in adverse possession of the disputed area for over 12 years his title was good irrespective of any order passed under the Act. As my learned brothers are in agreement with me the majority decision in Ramamurti v. Narayana Gajapati Raju (9) and the decision of Butler, J. in Seetharamaraju v. Narayanaraju (12) must be overruled. It follows that the observations of Wadsworth, J. in Tallapragada Achutharamayya v. Ayyagari Soorappayya (10) which are in conflict with the answer given to the reference should also be disregarded. The costs of the reference will be made costs in the appeal.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—After the fuller and more elaborate discussion of the question before the Bench as now constituted I feel that the opinion expressed by my Lord is the better and sounder one. In the order of reference I had expressed an inclination in favour of the other view which on further consideration, I agree, is not maintainable on general principles no less than on the language of the statute. It is difficult to support a view of the law which attributes to the decision of a survey authority, a higher efficacy than that which is annexed to the decision of a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction as per Subbayya Panikaram v. Mohamad Mustapha Maracayar (7). To have this consequence, language must be much more clear than what we have. I may add that my former inclination towards the opposite construction was in a large measure the outcome of the limitation imposed on me as a member of a Division Bench, bound by the opinions expressed by other Benches and the legal consequences which might be regarded as flowing out of them. I now feel no doubt that the correct decision is the one now given expression to by my Lord, and I have no hesitation in preferring it to the other.

Patanjali Sastri, J.—I agree with the judgment of my Lord and have nothing material to add.

Final Judgment.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—In view of the answer given by the Full Bench, this second appeal is dismissed with costs of respondent No. 1.

Grant—Construction—Grantor creating annuity in favour of his daughter and her lineal descendants—Some lineal descendants of daughter dying without leaving lineal descendants—Annuity held could be claimed by lineal descendants of daughter that might be living—Shares to be calculated on principle of per stirpes—Hindu Law—Succession—Brothers—Dayabhaga School.

A person executed a document creating an annuity in favour of his daughter and her lineal descendants, which contained a clause providing that none but the lineal descendants of the grantee would be entitled to have this allowance and that the daughters and other agnatic relations of the said daughter would not be entitled to the allowance. Some of the lineal descendants of the daughter who enjoyed the annuity themselves died without leaving any lineal descendants:

Held, that it was not the intention of the donor that the shares of these persons would lapse and revert back to the grantor and his heirs, if the other lineal descendants of the original grantee are alive. The annuity could be claimed by the lineal descendants of the original grantee who may be living at any particular time and the shares amongst them should be calculated on the principle of per stirpes and not per capita.

The principle of law according to the Dayabhaga School is that if a brother dies leaving another brother who was living jointly with him that would not entitle the joint brother to have preference over a separated brother unless the former could be said to have re-united.

A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, Third Court, Mymensingh, dated June 28, 1937.

Dr. Basak, Messrs. Ramaprosad Mookerjee and Abdul Quasem, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jatindra Mohan Choudhury and Gobinda Mohan Roy, for the Respondents.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This appeal is on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and it arises out of a suit commenced by three plaintiffs for recovery of a sum of Rs. 1,763 odd annas alleged to be due as two-thirds share of certain annuities payable for the years 1336 to 1342 B. S. under the terms of a deed executed by the predecessor of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. There was also a prayer for declaration of a charge in respect of the amounts decreed upon the estate left by the grantor.

Now, the facts are not disputed. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 represent the estate of one Bhairab Chandra Choudhury, who created an annuity in favour of his daughter Shiba Sundari and her lineal descendants by a document executed on February 7, 1856. The material portion of the document stands as follows:

"You are my daughter and I being pleased very much with you, I wanted to give you some immovable property for defraying the expenses of your food and clothing but that not being possible now, I am creating this mashokara in your favour fixing a sum of Rs. 41 and annas odd per month or Rs. 500 a year as your allowance. In my absence you will be entitled to realise this amount together with your sons, grandsons and other heirs of your body from my heirs and successors."

Then there was a clause providing that none but the lineal descendants of the grantee would be entitled to have this allowance and that the daughters and other agnatic relations of the said daughter Shiba Sundari would not be entitled to the allowance. It appears that Shiba Sundari enjoyed the annuity during her lifetime and she died leaving behind her four sons, to wit, Mahendra, Prasanna, Harendra and Narendra. Of these four sons, Harendra died first without leaving any wife or issue and Narendra, the fourth brother, is alleged to have separated from the other two, who continued to live together in common mess. Mahendra died next leaving a widow named Rashmoni. After that Narendra died and his son Surendra has been made a pro forma defendant in this suit. Prasanna died last and his two sons were Ramesh and Suresh. Both these brothers are dead. Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are the two sons of Suresh and plaintiff No. 3 is the widow of Ramesh. The three plaintiffs claim two-thirds share of the annuity as representing the line of Prasanna who is alleged to have got besides his own one-third share the other third share of Mahendra after the death of the latter. The defence of the contesting defendants was that no charge was created by the deed and none could be declared by the Court. It was contended further that the annuity being descendible only to the lineal heirs of the grantee the shares of Harendra, Mahendra and Ramesh must have lapsed and reverted back to the grantor and his heirs. In other words, the contention was that the plaintiffs were entitled to only one-eighth share in the annuity created in favour of Shiba Sundari.

The trial Court gave the three plaintiffs a money decree against the contesting defendants but refused their prayer for declaration of a charge. On appeal the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that plaintiff No. 3 was not a lineal descendant of the grantee and was therefore not entitled to have any share in the annuity and consequently the decree would be in favour of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 alone. The Subordinate Judge however was of opinion that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 would be entitled to have two-thirds share of the annuity claimed, inasmuch as the share of Mahendra would devolve upon Prasanna after the death of the former, Prasanna being his undivided brother whereas Narendra had already separated from him. It is against this decision that the present second appeal has been preferred. Dr. Basak, who appears in support of the appellants, has raised before us a two-fold contention. In the first place he has argued that the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief whatsoever inasmuch as the grant fails altogether after the death of Shiba Sundari, the donor having attempted to create, after her death, a line of succession which is repugnant and contrary to Hindu Law. The second argument which he has put forward in this, that the shares of Harendra, Mahendra and Ramesh must be deemed to have gone back to the grantor and his heirs and consequently the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 are not entitled to get more than one-eighth share of the amount claimed.

Now, so far as the first ground is concerned, it is not disputed that no such case was made in the written statement of the contesting defendants; on the other hand, the case made therein was that the deed was a valid and operative one and on a proper construction of its terms no charge could be declared and the shares of these lineal descendants of the grantee as did not leave any lineal descendants behind them would go back to the heirs of the grantor. It is also not disputed that this point was not raised either in the trial Court or in the Court of Appeal below. Dr. Basak however says that he is entitled to raise this point as a pure point of law in second appeal. It appears to me that there are considerable difficulties in his way. It transpires from the records that after the death of Shiba Sundari her sons did institute several suits for the purpose of recovery of this maintenance allowance from the predecessors of the defendants. These suits culminated in decrees and some of them have been made exhibits in this case. If, as Dr. Basak contends, the gift failed altogether after the death of Shiba Sundari, it was open to the defendants' predecessors to contend in those suits that no annuity was payable to the plaintiffs. As this was a ground of defence which was open to the defendants but which was not raised, I think, the principle of constructive res judicata can very well be invoked in their favour. Mr. Chowdhury, who appears for the respondents, has further contended before us that grants of this description which rank in Hindu Law as nibandha or corrody do come within the exceptions to the principle enunciated in Tagore v. Tagore (1), which were indicated in the very judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee. He has argued that nibandha or corrody amounts to creation of what is called an incorporeal right and it is a species of property which is recognized in Hindu Law. He says therefore that if the intention of the transferor to create a nibandha is apparent from the deed itself and his clients do come within the category of persons sought to be benefited by it, they are entitled to have the annuity even though they do not come in as the heirs of the original grantee. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon a decision of this Court, viz. Jatindra Mohan Mandal v. Ghanshyam Chowdhury (2). The point may have some substance in it which I need not decide in the present case and I am only referring to this argument for the purpose of showing that these and other answers were available to the plaintiffs, if, as a point of fact, the contesting defendants had cared to raise this question in the proper place and at the proper time. Another question of fact might have to be investigated viz. as to which of the descendants of Shiba Sundari were alive at the date of the grant. In view of these circumstances I do not think it proper that the defendants-appellants should be allowed to raise this point for the first time in second appeal.

The only other point which has been raised by Dr. Basak relates to the share of the plaintiffs. Now, as the deed states, none who is not a lineal descendant can have any interest in the annuity. Neither Rashmoni, the widow of Mahendra, nor Satadalbasini, the widow of Ramesh, can therefore lay any claim to this allowance. The question therefore arises as to whom would the shares go if some of the lineal descendants of the grantee who enjoyed the annuity themselves died without leaving any lineal descendants behind them. In my opinion, reading the document as a whole, the only proper inference seems to be that it was not the intention of the donor that the shares of these persons would lapse and revert back to the grantor and his heirs, if the other lineal descendants of the original grantee are alive. The position therefore is this: the annuity could be claimed by the lineal descendants of the original grantee who may be living at any particular time and the shares amongst them, in my opinion, should be calculated on the principle of per stirpes and not per capita. In the present case Prasanna was entitled undoubtedly to one-third share and this interest has devolved upon plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2.

So far as Mahendra's share is concerned, I am unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court that it would go to Prasanna and not to Prasanna and Narendra jointly. The reason assigned is that Prasanna was at that time living together with Mahendra whereas Narendra had already separated. The principle of law according to the Dayabhaga School seems to be that if a brother dies leaving another brother who was living jointly with him that would not entitle the joint brother to have preference over a separated brother unless the former could be said to have re united. In the present case there is no evidence or suggestion whatsoever that there was any re-union between Prasanna and Mahendra and in these circumstances I am unable to say that Prasanna would have a preferential right of succession to the interest of Mahendra to the exclusion of Narendra. In these circumstances, I would vary the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court to this extent: that plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 will be entitled to get half of the annuities and not two-thirds as claimed. They would therefore be entitled to recover Rs. 1,836-15-8 together with the costs of both the Courts below. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 919 of 1937

October 16, 1939

IQBAL AHMAD, J.

HAR PRASAD—DEFENDANT—

versus

SITA RAM—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 52—Subsequent mortgagee in execution of his decree for sale obtained on his mortgage purchasing property himself and suing for possession transferee pendente lite—Whether entitled to unconditional possession—Liability to reimburse transferee in respect of prior mortgages redeemed by him.

It may be assumed that a transfer in contravention of the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, is only voidable and not void, but even then there is no analogy between a suit for possession by a decree-holder against a transferee pendente lite and a suit by Hindu reversioner for possession of property alienated by a widow. Even though s. 52 does not operate to annul a transfer pendente lite it renders the transfer subservient to the rights of the parties to the action as determined by the judgment or decree passed in the action. In other words, unlike a transfer by a Hindu widow there is a statutory prohibition against transfers pendente lite so as to affect the right of either party to the action.

Consequently where a subsequent mortgagee who in execution of a decree for sale obtained on the basis of the subsequent mortgage has purchased the mortgaged property, brings a suit for possession against a usufructuary mortgagee pendente lite who redeemed certain prior mortgages, the mortgagee decree-holder is entitled to an unconditional decree for possession of the property. To put the matter in another way, he is, in view of the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, entitled to ignore the usufructuary mortgage executed pendente lite and the transferee cannot, therefore, rely on that mortgage and claim reimbursement with respect to the earlier mortgages that he redeemed in his capacity as a usufructuary mortgagee.

Mr. S. K. Mukerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jagnandan Lal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The contest in the present appeal is between a subsequent mortgagee who in execution of a decree for sale obtained on the basis of the subsequent mortgage purchased the mortgaged property and a transferee pendente lite who redeemed certain prior mortgages and held the same up as a shield against the claim of the subsequent mortgagee auction-purchaser in a suit for possession of the mortgaged property. The transferee pendente lite succeeded in the trial Court but the lower Appellate Court passed an unconditional decree for possession in favour of the subsequent mortgagee auction-purchaser. In order to appreciate the respective contentions of the parties, it is necessary to briefly state the facts. One Girdhari Lal was the owner of the property in dispute. On May 25, 1916 he (Girdhari Lal) executed a simple mortgage with respect to the property in dispute in favour of one Banarsi Das. Again, on June 11, 1917, he executed a simple mortgage in favour of Har Prasad defendant-appellant. Then on May 30, 1918, Girdhari Lal executed a third simple mortgage in favour of Sita Ram plaintiff-respondent. Sita Ram put his mortgage of 1918 into suit and obtained a final decree for sale in the year 1922.

Before Sita Ram put his decree into execution Girdhari Lal on September 27, 1926 executed a simple mortgage in favour of Har Prasad in lieu of the mortgage of 1917. In other words, this mortgage of 1926 was in renewal of the mortgage of 1917. Finally, on April 10, 1928, Girdhari Lal executed a deed of usufructuary mortgage in favour of Har Prasad. The consideration of this usufructuary mortgage was the amount due on the basis of the mortgages of 1916 and 1926. Har Prasad thereafter redeemed the simple mortgage of 1916. In execution of his decree for sale Sita Ram purchased the property in dispute on August 2, 1930, and when he proceeded to take possession of the property he was resisted by Har Prasad, the usufructuary mortgagee. Sita Ram then filed the suit giving rise to the present appeal for possession of the property in dispute. Har Prasad contested the suit inter alia on the ground that in consequence of the facts stated above he was subrogated to the position of the mortgagees of 1916 and 1917 and that Sita Ram could not be granted a decree for possession without redeeming these mortgages. This contention as already stated, was overruled by the lower Appellate Court and in my judgment rightly.

The mortgages of 1916, 1917 and 1926 were simple mortgages and the only remedy of Har Prasad under those mortgages was to sue for sale of the mortgaged property. Har Prasad was not entitled to possession of the mortgaged property under any one of those three mortgages. It was only by virtue of the usufructuary mortgage of 1928 that Har Prasad acquired possession of the mortgaged property. This usufructuary mortgage however offended against the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, which inter alia provides that during the pendency of any suit or proceeding in which any right to immovable property is directly and specifically in question, the property cannot be transferred by any party to the suit or proceeding so as to affect the rights of any other party thereto under any decree or order which may be made therein. The explanation added to s. 52, T. P. Act, makes it manifest that lis pendens continues till the decree obtained in the suit is completely satisfied or discharged or the execution of the same becomes barred by limitation.

By the auction-purchase made by him Sita Ram became entitled to the possession of the property in dispute and this right could not be adversely affected by the usufructuary mortgage for the simple reason that that mortgage was made during the pendency of the suit for sale brought by Sita Ram. Sita Ram was, therefore, entitled to the possession of the property untrammelled by the usufructuary mortgage of 1928. It is however contended by the learned Counsel for Har Prasad that, as a transfer pendente lite is not void but only voidable, Sita Ram ought to be put to terms and should not be allowed to take possession of the property without paying the amount due on the basis of the mortgages of 1916 and 1926. In this connection it is pointed out that Sita Ram's suit is analogous to a suit by a Hindu reversioner for possession of property transferred by a Hindu widow and it is said that as the reversioner is liable to reimburse a transferee with respect to encumbrances discharged by the transferee Sita Ram must also be called upon to redeem the mortgages of 1916 and 1926. I am unable to agree with this contention.

It may be assumed that a transfer in contravention of the provisions of s. 52, T. P.

Act, is only voidable and not void, vide Jagannatha Kone v. Ramchandra Naidu (1) and Mathura Prasad v. Ghansham Das, 132 Ind. Cas. 767 (2) but even then there is no analogy between a suit like the present and a suit by a Hindu reversioner for possession of property alienated by a widow. A Hindu reversioner is entitled to possession of the property of the last male holder subject to the liability to discharge encumbrances validly created on that property. If a transferee from a widow has already discharged certain valid encumbrances the reversioner can be granted a decree for possession conditional on the payment of the amount spent by the transferee in redeeming the valid encumbrances for the simple reasons that the liability to redeem those encumbrances rested on the shoulders of the reversioner.

But in a case which attracts the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, the position is entirely different. Even though s. 52 does not operate to annul a transfer pendente lite it renders the transfer subservient to the rights of the parties to the action as determined by the judgment or decree passed in the action. In other words, unlike a transfer by a Hindu widow there is a statutory prohibition against transfers pendente lite so as to affect the right of either party to the action. It follows that Har Prasad cannot by virtue of the usufructuary mortgage jeopardise the right of Sita Ram to possession of the property, which right Sita Ram acquired by virtue of the decree in the suit for sale brought by him. That being so Sita Ram is entitled to an unconditional decree for possession of the property in dispute. To put the matter in another way, Sita Ram is, in view of the provisions of s. 52, T. P. Act, entitled to ignore the usufructuary mortgage of 1928. Har Prasad cannot, therefore, rely on that mortgage and claim reimbursement with respect to the two earlier mortgages that he redeemed in his capacity as a usufructuary mortgagee. For the reasons given above, I hold that Sita Ram's suit was rightly decreed by the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is granted.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Execution application not made within 12 years—Court, if can allow amendment to enable decree-holder to proceed.

Where an application has not been properly made within the 12 years' period provided in s. 48, Civil P. O., no amendment can be allowed which would have the effect of depriving the judgment-debtor of putting forward the plea of limitation. But in special and exceptional circumstances the Court has discretion to order such amendments in order to enable the decree-holder to proceed further with execution.

A. against an order of the Sub-Judge, Berhampur, dated October 30, 1935.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and D. Ramaswami Ayyangar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. V. Rajamannar and K. Subba Rao, for the Respondents.

King, J.—The appellant here is the decree-holder in O. S. No. 68 of 1921. In 1926 the appellant filed an execution petition seeking to attach certain property and obtain orders of attachment. That execution petition was recorded in 1927 with a direction to the appellant to apply by separate application for sale of the attached property. A subsequent application, E. A. No. 49 of 1928, was made in March 1928 and was ordered in July to be "struck off the file to be restored when applied for after the stay is raised," an order having been received from the High Court, where a civil miscellaneous appeal has been filed, to stay execution shortly before this. Unfortunately the disposal of the civil miscellaneous appeal occupied several years, and it was not until April 27, 1934, that the judgment of the High Court was delivered. That judgment runs as follows:

"The only question for decision is whether the attachment of the several items made on February 2 and 3, 1926, is according to law. So far as the superstructure of the houses described in Items Nos. 4 to 6 are concerned, no objection to the validity of the attachment is raised before us and the attachment thereof must be held to be lawful. As regards the other items and the land on which the superstructure stand, they were undoubtedly unenfranchised Dorathanam service inams on the dates of the attachments and therefore not liable to attachment. In this view of the case it is unnecessary to decide whether the subsequent order of Govt. directing the resumption of the inams was a completed and effective resumption. The attachment of Items Nos. 1 to 3 and of the lands on which the houses are situate must be set aside and the appeal allowed to this extent."

About six months after the judgment had been delivered, the appellant applied in E. A. No. 256 of 1934, praying for the restoration of E. A. No. 4 of 1926 to file and for ordering attachment for the second time of the property which had been attached in 1926 and the attachment of which, as we have just seen had been set aside by the High Court. The learned Subordinate Judge of Berhampore in his order dated October 17, 1935, refused to grant this part of the appellant's application but permitted him to continue the petition, E. P. No. 49 of 1928, with respect to those items of property the attachment of which had been declared valid by the High Court. This is therefore an appeal by the appellant against that part of the learned Subordinate Judge's order which is against him. The learned Subordinate Judge has recognized the right of the appellant to make this application in 1934 even though the 12 years period laid down in s. 48 of the Code had already expired, and there is no serious contest before us that one if not two execution petitions were not still pending from 1926 to 1928, as there had been no final order disposing of them. The only questions therefore which have to be decided are: (1) whether the High Court in its judgment in O. M. A. No. 234 of 1928 has in effect dismissed these execution petitions so that with respect to the items with which we are now concerned it is impossible to regard them as any longer continuing or being regarded as valid; and (2) whether the circumstances of this case are such that we ought to permit such amendment of these petitions as may be necessary in order to enable the appellant to proceed further with his execution.

On the first point we think considerable difficulty might arise if we consider only execution application No. 4 of 1926, but we are of opinion, that if E. P. No. 49 of 1928 is taken into account there can be nothing in the judgment of the High Court in O. M. A. No. 234 of 1928 which in any way relates to the prayers in that petition. All that the High Court said was that an attachment effected in February 1926, was invalid. In 1928, the appellant applied for the sale of properties which had been attached in 1926. The High Court has said nothing as to whether if a prayer had been inserted in the petition in 1928 for the attachment of those properties and the attachment had been effected accordingly that attachment would or would not have been valid. That matter, as we read the judgment of the High Court, has been left open. The appellant's learned Counsel has therefore requested us to permit him to amend E. P. No. 49 of 1928 by asking for the attachment of the properties now in dispute, a request which he did not make in 1928 itself because at that time an attachment was already in force.

The second question which we have to decide is whether in the special circumstances of this case we should permit such an amendment to be made. It has been argued by Mr. Subba Rao, for the respondent, that we have no discretion in this matter and that once it is discovered that an application has not been properly made within the 12 years period provided in s. 48, no amendment can be allowed which would have the effect of depriving the respondent of putting forward the plea of limitation. The authorities however which he has brought to our attention on this point do not go so far as to say that there is no discretion left to the Court. They lay down the very salutary rule that ordinarily an amendment should not be allowed which would have the effect of depriving the respondents of putting forward such a plea. They do not say that in special circumstances the Court is powerless to order such amendments. We are clearly of opinion, that the circumstances in this case are so exceptional as to justify the amendment proposed. In 1926 the appellant obtained the attachment of these properties. No doubt it has since been decided that that attachment was illegal. But the matter was obviously a disputed one upon which the attaching Court itself took a different view. Then when the appellant attempted to have the property which had been attached sold in 1928 his attempt was frustrated by an order of stay issued by this Court. By that time proceedings to resume the inams had been taken by the Govt. and it is the contention of the appellant that had attachment not already been effected he might have validly applied in 1928 for the attachment of these properties. But for the whole of the period 1928 to 1934 he could take no such action owing to unfortunately long continued pendency of the appeal in the High Court. He took no steps after the appellate judgment had been delivered within a reasonable time, and although he appears to have asked specifically only for the revival of the earlier petition No. 4 of 1926 the learned Subordinate Judge himself has decided that the proper petition to be revived for the limited purpose which he was prepared to concede was E. P. No. 49 of 1918. Although until the actual hearing of this appeal there has been no explicit request either to the Court below or to this Court for the granting of the amendment which is now proposed, we think in all the circumstances that the amendment should be allowed. It appears that E. P. No. 49 of 1928 has by this time been dismissed as it was not seriously pressed with regard to the comparatively unimportant properties against which it was allowed to proceed. We direct that the application be restored to file and that the petitioner-appellant be allowed to amend it by asking for the attachment of the properties which are the subject-matter of this appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge will then proceed to dispose of E. P. No. 49 of 1928 according to law. We direct in the peculiar circumstances of this case that each party bear his own costs of this appeal. It is of course clear that this judgment has in no way decided the question whether these properties are or are not liable to attachment.

Order accordingly.

Civil Revision No. 256 of 1938

October 6, 1939

MULLA J.

DAL SINGAR KOERI—PLAINTIFF

—APPLICANT

CHANDI SINGH AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 14—Suit on mortgage—Cause of action, how determined—Striking out relief for sale of property, whether changes cause of action—Plaint returned after amendment to proper Court—Plaintiff, if entitled to benefit of s. 14—Want of jurisdiction, if should exist at date of suit, for applicability of s. 14.

"Cause of action" and "relief" are quite distinct and the question whether two proceedings are based upon the same cause of action or different causes of action cannot be decided upon the terms of the reliefs claimed in either proceeding:

A suit based upon a mortgage deed is essentially a suit to recover a loan and the cause of action for such a suit is the failure of the defendant to discharge the loan. A mortgagee in a suit founded upon a simple mortgage proceeds on the same cause of action whether he claims only to recover the loan advanced by him or presses also for the additional relief to enforce the charge in his favour. Where the plaintiff based on a mortgage deed after deletion of relief as to sale is returned from regular side for presentation to the Small Cause Court the plaintiff is entitled to the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act.

The want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature referred to in s. 14 need not be in existence at the very institution of a suit. All that the law requires for the applicability of s. 14 is that the Court in which the previous proceeding is prosecuted should be unable to entertain it from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. Want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature may arise at any stage of a suit or proceeding and if upon that basis the Court in which the suit or proceeding is being prosecuted arrives at the conclusion that it cannot entertain it and makes an order accordingly the condition laid down in s. 14 is sufficiently fulfilled.

O. R. against the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Azamgarh, dated April 30, 1938.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. L. M. Roy, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is a plaintiff's application in revision under s. 25, Small Cause Courts Act, against a decree passed by the learned Munsif of Azamgarh in the exercise of Small Cause Court jurisdiction dismissing a suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. The relevant facts of the case may briefly be stated as follows: The applicant Dalsinger Koeri and Kharpattu Koeri who appears as opposite party No. 2 in the present case held a simple mortgage from the opposite party No. 1, Chandi Singh, for Rs. 55. The mortgage deed was executed on January 30, 1932 but was not registered. The omission to register the deed was presumably due to a mistaken belief that the value of the mortgage being less than Rs. 100 no registration was necessary. On January 29, 1938 the applicant and Kharpattu Koeri instituted a suit on the basis of that mortgage in the Court of the learned Munsif at Azamgarh on the regular side.

There is no contest that the suit was within time on that date inasmuch as the mortgage deed provided for a period of three years for repayment of the loan. The relief claimed in the suit was the usual one that a decree for the principal and interest due under the mortgage deed may be passed in favour of the plaintiffs and in case of the defendant failing to discharge that amount the property mentioned in the mortgage deed may be sold. It is quite obvious that this relief consisted of two distinct portions (1) that a decree should be passed for the whole amount due under the mortgage on account of principal and interest and (2) that the property which was the subject of the charge under the deed should be sold to satisfy that amount in case the defendant failed to discharge it. It is admitted that there was a clear personal covenant in the deed of mortgage upon which the suit had been brought and the plaintiffs were therefore clearly entitled to a personal decree against the defendant on the basis of the loan. In the written statement filed by the defendant he raised the plea that the deed in suit not being registered could not operate as a mortgage deed. This plea was obviously sound and the plaintiffs consequently got the plaint amended by scoring out the relief to sell the property covered by the mortgage. It was then found that the valuation of the suit being within the cognizance of the Court of Small Causes the learned Munsif had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit on the regular side. He accordingly directed the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court. This order was passed on March 19, 1938, and the plaint was actually returned to the plaintiffs on March 24, 1938. On the same date the plaint was presented in the same Court on the Small Cause Court side. When the suit proceeded to trial the defendant raised the plea, amongst others, that the suit was barred by limitation. The learned Munsif has allowed this plea to prevail and has consequently dismissed the suit though he has rejected all the other pleas taken by the defence. Hence the present application in revision. The substance of the argument on behalf of the applicant is that the learned Munsif has erred in law in holding that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the benefit of s. 14, Lim. Act. The learned Munsif arrived at that conclusion for reasons which may best be set out in his own words as follows:

"I do not think that s. 14 has application to the facts of this case. It is only when the previous Court is unable to entertain the suit for want of jurisdiction or some cause of a like nature and when the cause of action in both Courts is the same that s. 14 comes into play. Here neither of the two essentials exist. Cause of a like nature should be one ejusdem generis with want of jurisdiction. A defect in the title deed would not be covered by the expression. Similarly, a cause of action to enforce security is different from one on a personal covenant. Suit is therefore dismissed as time-barred."

All that is necessary therefore is to examine the position taken by the learned Munsif and to see if that is right. Now s. 14, Lim. Act, runs as follows:

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in Court of Appeal against the defendant shall be excluded where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it."

The learned Munsif appears to have arrived at the conclusion that the last part of this section did not apply to the facts of the present case inasmuch as the previous proceeding in the Court of the learned Munsif on the regular side was based upon a different cause of action from that upon which the later proceeding in the same Court on the regular side was founded and also because the Court on the regular side had jurisdiction to entertain the suit as it was initially framed and the want of jurisdiction having arisen only upon an amendment of the plaint it was not possible to hold within the meaning of s. 14 that the previous proceeding was prosecuted "in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it." Upon a careful consideration of the terms of s. 14, and the facts of the case, I have arrived at the conclusion that the learned Munsif has gone wholly wrong in appreciating the true significance and scope of the provision contained in s. 14 and has consequently misdirected himself. So far as the first point is concerned, I fail to see how it is possible to urge with any force that the proceeding on the Small Cause Court side was founded upon a cause of action different from that upon which the proceeding on the regular side was based. A suit based upon a mortgage deed is essentially a suit to recover a loan and the cause of action for such a suit is the failure of the defendant to discharge the loan. The learned Munsif appears to have confused "cause of action" with "relief." In a suit based upon a simple mortgage the plaintiff can claim two reliefs; firstly, that a decree should be passed in his favour for the amount due under the deed, and secondly, that the property covered by the charge should be sold. The right to sell the property covered by the charge is only an additional relief to which the plaintiff is entitled under the deed. Both the reliefs however flow from the same cause of action, namely the failure of the defendant to repay the loan. The plaintiff in a suit founded upon a simple mortgage proceeds on the same cause of action whether he claims only to recover the loan advanced by him or presses also for the additional relief to enforce the charge in his favour. The distinction between "cause of action" and "relief" is clarified by sub-s. (2) of s. 14 which is applicable to applications alone and runs in the following terms:

"In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application the time during which the applicant has been prosecuting with due diligence another civil proceeding whether in a Court of first instance or in Court of Appeal against the same party for the same relief shall be excluded where such proceeding is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature is unable to entertain it."

The question whether two proceedings are based upon the same cause of action or different causes of action cannot be decided upon the terms of the reliefs claimed in either proceeding. It may easily be conceived that the relief claimed on both proceedings might be identical but the cause of action may be wholly different. In the present case I do not find any justification for holding that the proceeding on the Small Cause Court side was based upon some cause of action different from that upon which the proceeding on the regular side was founded. Turning now to the other point I find that the learned Munsif laboured under the misapprehension that the want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature referred to in s. 14 must be in existence at the very institution of a suit. There is nothing in the terms of s. 14 to justify that conclusion. All that the law requires that the Court in which the previous proceeding is prosecuted should be unable to entertain it from defect of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature. Want of jurisdiction or other cause of a like nature may arise at any stage of a suit or proceeding and if upon that basis the Court in which the suit or proceeding is being prosecuted arrives at the conclusion that it cannot entertain it and makes an order accordingly the condition laid down in s. 14 which is under consideration is sufficiently fulfilled. In the present case want of jurisdiction arose when the plaintiffs got their plaint amended by scoring out a portion of their relief. The Court was then unable to entertain the suit and had to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. That was a sufficient fulfilment of the condition laid down in s. 14. The learned Munsif seems to think that it was the non-registration of the mortgage deed in suit which brought about want of jurisdiction and such defect does not fall within the purview of "other cause of a like nature" as contemplated by s. 14. This is, to my mind, wholly beside the point.

It was only the pecuniary value of the claim after the amendment of the plaint which placed it beyond the jurisdiction of the learned Munsif on the regular side in consequence of the provision contained in sub-s. 2 of s. 15, Prov. Small Cause Courts Act. If we suppose for a moment that the value of the claim was high enough so that it could be entertained by the learned Munsif on the regular side no question of want of jurisdiction could possibly arise and the learned Munsif on the regular side could not have refused to entertain the suit. It has been repeatedly held by various Courts that s. 14 ought to be liberally construed and in my judgment the interpretation put upon the section by the learned Munsif in the present case is against the letter as well as the spirit of the law. The result therefore is that I allow this application in revision and setting aside the decree passed by the learned Munsif decree the plaintiffs' suit with costs in all the Courts.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 63—Agreement to remit—Consideration is necessary.

Where the decree-holder has actually remitted a portion of the debt due to him and not merely promised to remit it, no consideration is necessary. Mr. R. Desikan, for the Appellants.
Sir A. Krishnaswami Iyer, Advocate-General, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—Appellant relies upon the case in Rama Narasu v. Venkatarreddi (1), but in that case it is pointed out that the promise made by the judgment-debtor was (1) 56 M 198; 141 Ind. Cas. 429; A I R 1933 Mad 28; 63 M L J 598; (1932) M W N 840; 36 L W 558; Ind. Rul. (1933) Mad. 132.

consideration. Here a promise to pay only a part of what is legally due, can afford no consideration for any promise by the decree-holder. Appellant then relies on s. 63, Contract Act, and contends that no consideration is necessary. That is no doubt true if the decree-holder has actually remitted a portion of the debt due to him and not merely promised to remit it. Actual remission is not completed until he accepts the part payment in full satisfaction: see Illus. (b), (c), (d) and (e) to the section. Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 7—Expression “evidenced by such document”, meaning of—“Document” in expression “based on document” can be used in two ways—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 67-A—Whether retrospective—Mortgage—Priority—Subsequent mortgage in favour of another, of some properties covered by earlier mortgage—Yet subsequent mortgage in favour of earliest mortgagee to pay balance due on first mortgage with additional security and lower rate of interest—Suit by first mortgagee within 12 years of due date under third mortgage but beyond that due under first mortgage—Later mortgages held not entitled to priority and suit not barred by limitation.

The meaning of the clause “evidenced by such document” in s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, is that the Court should, in every case, look to the document on which the loan is based in order to find out the loan advanced. If the loan is based upon a single document, then the Court will ascertain from that document what is the amount of loan mentioned in it, always bearing in mind the definition of the word ‘loan’ which covers an engagement to fulfil a previous obligation; where the loan is evidenced by a series of letters or other documents like *bahi khata*s or based on as evidenced by the handnote which for some purposes may be inadmissible in evidence, nevertheless, a Court must refer to them for the purpose of s. 7 to find out what the loan was in order to apply the rule of Damdapat adopted by Legislature with the limitations provided by the Act. [p. 341, col. 1.]

Section 7 of the Act deals with two kinds of loan, a loan advanced and a loan based on a document. Under the second heading it takes into consideration two kinds of documents on which loan may be based, one kind may evidence the loan and the other which may not evidence the loan, but may be utilized to find out the amount mentioned in it. The document in the expression “based on a document” can be used in two different ways, in one case evidencing a loan and in another case simply mentioning a loan. The section cannot be interpreted to contemplate, that the same document may relate to two different amounts. [p. 345, cols. 1 & 2.]

After executing a mortgage in 1912, the mortgagor executed in 1916, another mortgage in favour of another person by hypothecating some of the properties comprised in the mortgage of 1912. Again in 1922, he executed mortgage in favour of the first mortgagee, the amount secured by this mortgage being the balance then due to the first mortgagee under the earlier bond of 1912. In this mortgage, the mortgage of 1912, was specifically referred to and it was stated that the properties of the mortgage of 1922, were subject to the mortgage of 1912. In the mortgage of 1922, additional security was given and there was stipulation to pay lower rate of interest. A suit was brought within 12 years of the due date of payment of the bond of 1922, but more than 12 years of the due date of payment of the bond of 1912:

Held, that by the mortgage of 1922, the mortgagee never gave up his security under the bond of 1912, and the effect of the mortgage of 1922, was merely to substitute the covenant to pay the mortgage amount on the due date stated in this bond in place of the covenant to pay as stated in the bond of 1912. The suit was, therefore, a suit on the bond of 1922, and the right of the mortgagee, so far as the property stood charged in the bond of 1912, had never been given up; charge could still be enforced and was always enforceable so long as the full amount secured was not repaid. Consequently the suit on the bond of 1922, was not barred by limitation, the mortgage bond of 1912, was kept alive, and the claim of priority by the later mortgagees must fail. 38 Ind. Cas. 240 (1), relied on. [p. 342, col. 2; p. 344, col. 1.]

[Case-law discussed.]

A. from the original decree of the Sub-Judge, Monghyr, dated February 26, 1936.

Messrs. K. Sahai and R. S. Chatterji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. N. Rai and K. K. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 who are the mortgagors and are appellants Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 in this Court, as well as by defendant No. 27, who is a subsequent mortgagee, against the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Monghyr dated February 26, 1936, decreeing the suit which was instituted by the plaintiffs-respondents to enforce a mortgage bond dated August 31, 1922 in the following circumstances: On April 27, 1906, the father of the principal appellants, who will be hereinafter referred to as the mortgagors, executed a mortgage bond in favour of the plaintiff and his sons to secure a sum of Rs. 800. A sum of Rs. 200 was paid back later on by the mortgagor to reduce his liability but the major part remained unpaid. On October 11, 1912 the mortgagors executed another mortgage bond in favour of the same mortgagees to secure a sum of Rs. 1,391 stipulating to pay compound interest at Rs. 1-2-0 per cent. per mensem. The amount due under the earlier bond had come up to Rs. 1,241 and a sum of Rs. 150 was taken in cash by the mortgagors. On May 29, 1916 the mortgagors executed another mortgage—a usufructuary mortgage—for a sum of Rs. 900 in favour of defendant No. 27, an appellant before us. The property covered by this usufructuary bond is included in the properties given in the mortgage of the earlier bond of 1912. The mortgagees of 1916 paid the sum of Rs. 900 to the earlier mortgagees as stipulated in the mortgage of 1916. On August 5, 1920, the mortgagors gave a sudhbharna to the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 1,500, some property which was also given in security in the earlier bond of 1912. This bond is Ex. 3, and by it the mortgagor stipulated to pay the whole amount of Rs. 1,500 in one lump sum in Baisakh 1394; the possession of the mortgaged properties was for a fixed period of seven years.

The amount of Rs. 1,500 was arrived at by calculating the dues of the mortgagee of this bond under another bond of Rs. 888 and the balance of Rs. 612 was paid in part payment of the liability under the bond of 1912 which is Ex. 2 in the case. On August 31, 1922 the mortgagors again executed a mortgage bond, the bond in suit, for Rs. 2,000 stipulating to pay interest at 13 annas per cent. per mensem to be compounded. The whole of the amount secured by this document was the balance then due under the bond of 1912. In this bond, which is Ex. 2 (a) in the case, it is stated that the amount of Rs. 2,000 is the balance of the principal and interest after deduction of the payment towards the bond of October 11, 1912, that the bond is being executed on account of previous dues and the amount will be paid on Baisakh 30, 1330 Fasli. It is also stated in the bond that the mortgaged properties under this document are not subject to any other encumbrance than that under the bond of 1912 and another usufructuary bond of 1905. The properties given in security consist of all the properties which were given under the bond of 1912, but there are additional properties also. The present suit was instituted on April 27, 1935, that is to say within 12 years of the due date of payment of the bond of 1922, but beyond 12 years of the due date of the payment of the bond of 1912 which was renewed as aforesaid by giving additional security in 1922 and with a stipulation to pay a lower rate of interest. It is unnecessary to state the different defences taken in the Court below as the matter in controversy before us has resolved itself into two questions of law: one concerning the application of the provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1939 and the other concerning the priority of defendant No. 27.

The learned Subordinate Judge held that the bond in suit was a valid document, that the plaintiffs never agreed to release the property given in security to defendant No. 27, that the bond of 1912 was not fully satisfied by the payment by defendant No. 27 in 1916 and therefore his claim for subrogation was negatived. He also held that the usufructuary mortgage bond of the year 1920 in favour of the respondents, which covers the properties included in the bond of 1912, was executed with the full knowledge and consent of the mortgagors. He also negatived the contention of the defendant that the stipulation to pay compound interest at 13 annas per cent. was excessive. The plea of limitation was not pressed and was overruled by the learned Subordinate Judge. In appeal it is argued that having regard to s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders Act, this Court should not pass any decree for a sum larger than Rs. 1,391, the amount stated in the bond of October 1912, and that from the interest due on this amount, a deduction should be made of the sum of Rs. 1,512 which was admitted or proved to have been paid towards the bond of 1912 from time to time in lieu of interest. In other words, the contention is that a decree for mortgage amount should be passed not exceeding Rs. 1,391 if there are no other obstacles in the way of the plaintiffs. I do not agree with this contention. The wording of s. 7 is clear. A Court has to find out in each case where the loan is based upon a document what is the exact amount of the loan stated in the document. The word 'loan' has been defined in the Act to include a transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability.

Applying these tests, I am satisfied that the amount of loan advanced in the present case for the purposes of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, is the amount stated in the document of 1922; 'the loan' is based upon that document. That amount, I find is Rs. 2,000. The plaintiffs are therefore entitled to a decree for this amount and to a decree for interest for a sum not larger than Rs. 2,000 as no payment has been proved to have been made after the execution of this bond. But it was argued by Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellants that the wording of s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders Act, justified him in urging that although the amount of Rs. 2,000 is mentioned in the document upon which the loan is based, nevertheless the document evidenced the loan of Rs. 1,391 originally advanced in 1912 which swelled up to Rs. 2,000 in 1922. The argument is based upon the last few words of s. 7 which run as follows: "If the loan is based on a document, the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document."

As the matter was of first impression, we had the assistance of the learned Advocate-General, who very kindly, came to assist us at our request. The learned Advocate-General submitted that the words "evidenced by such document" can only apply to a case where the loan is evidenced by bahi khata and the loan is based upon it and that in such cases the Court must find out from the bahi khata the amount evidenced thereby. On a careful consideration of the argument advanced, I am of opinion that the meaning of this clause (though somewhat obscurely worded) is that the Court should, in every case, look to the document on which the loan is based in order to find out the loan advanced. If the loan is based upon a single document, then the Court will ascertain from that document what is the amount of loan mentioned in it, always bearing in mind the definition of the word 'loan' already pointed out, which covers an engagement to fulfil a previous obligation; where the loan is evidenced by a series of letters or other documents like *bahi khata*s or based on as evidenced by the handnote which for some purposes may be inadmissible in evidence, nevertheless, a Court must refer to them for the purpose of s. 7 to find out what the loan was in order to apply the rule of Damdupat adopted by our Legislature with the limitations provided by the Act. When I apply this construction to the present case, I am of opinion that the loan in the present case should be taken to be Rs. 2,000. Learned Counsel for the appellants tried to argue that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge disallowing the plea of the payment of two items of Rs. 492-7-0 and Rs. 282 was erroneous. But he could not advance any convincing argument which would justify us in differing from the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on Issue No. 6. That finding is based upon good and cogent reasons. I agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the story of the panchait and the adjustment of accounts in 1342 Fasli cannot be successfully established.

Defendant No. 27 who, as I have stated above, is the mortgagee of some of the properties covered by the bond of 1912 and who is a mortgagee of the year 1916, contended that by the execution of the bond of 1922, the prior bond of 1912 was fully paid off in the eye of the law, with the result that his client became the prior encumbrancer and that the mortgaged properties should not be allowed to be sold free from the encumbrances of his bond of 1916. He argued in the alternative that if it was held that the bond of 1912 was alive to sustain the mortgage charge prior to that of his charge of 1916, then the suit must be held to be barred by limitation as having been instituted beyond 12 years of the due date stated in the bond of 1912; and repelled the contention that any acknowledgment subsequent to 1916 by the mortgagor, would operate in law to keep alive the bond of 1912 against him, the mortgagee of 1916. In my opinion, these contentions are fully answered by the decision of the Madras High Court reported in Velauda Reddi v. Narasimha Reddi, 38 Ind. Cas. 240 (1). The facts of that case were that in 1882 a certain Rajah and his son executed a mortgage to one Subbamma of four villages to secure the advance of a sum of Rs. 25,000 and interest thereon (the amount was payable on demand). In 1888, the son, who had become the Rajah on his father's death, mortgaged the same four villages and two others in addition to the same mortgagee to secure the sum of Rs. 39,791 which had then become due on the earlier mortgage of 1882, agreeing to pay interest at a reduced rate and covenanted to pay the principal on December 30, 1893. The plaintiff was the assignee of the mortgage of 1888. In the meantime, in 1887, the same mortgagor had given in mortgage three of the four villages comprised in the first mortgage of 1882 to the ancestor of certain defendants who in due course instituted a suit on their mortgage, obtained a decree and purchased the three villages in Court sale, but the mortgagee Subbamma was not a party to these proceedings. In these circumstances, it was argued that the mortgage of 1888 extinguished the mortgage of 1882 thereby giving priority to the mortgage of 1887 which had become earlier in date. The contention was repelled by Srinivasa Aiyangar, J. with whom Ayling, J. agreed in these words :

"It is now well-settled that a mere change in the form of indebtedness, in the mode or time for payment, a variation of the rate of interest, or the giving of additional security, is not enough to rebut the presumed intention to retain the mortgage security when it is to the interest of the person who is entitled either to extinguish the security or keep it alive, so to keep it alive: a quotation from s. 924 of the well-known book of Jones on Mortgages."

The learned Judges also pointed out that the effect of the second bond of 1888 was merely to substitute a covenant to pay the mortgage amount on December 30, 1893 for the covenant to pay on demand in the bond of 1882 and to lower the rate of interest payable thereafter, without in any way affecting the security for the payment of the mortgage amount. It was also held that an agreement between the mortgagor and the first mortgagee extending the time for payment of the mortgage amount in no way impairs the security even as against the subsequent incumbrancer, for the junior encumbrancer is not a surety for the mortgagor. The learned Judges repelled the argument that even if it be assumed that the mortgage of 1882 was in full force when the third mortgage of 1888 was executed, any right to enforce that mortgage at the time when the action was brought on October 2, 1913 was barred by the law of limitation or that the mortgagee lost his priority against the appellants because they held that the mortgage money did not become due till December 30, 1893, that payments were made by the mortgagor within 12 years of the second bond of 1888 though beyond 12 years of the due date of the first bond of 1882 and these kept the two bonds alive because :

"This is not a case where there are two covenants to secure the payment of a debt, one under the mortgage of 1882, and another under the mortgage of 1888, but only one vis. that under the latter document which superseded the former, and so long as the latter covenant remained unbroken, the mortgagee cannot demand or recover the mortgage amount. The mortgagee is not suing on the mortgage of 1882 as it stood when it was executed as is assumed in the argument, but on that mortgage as varied by the subsequent agreement, which agreement I have already held, in no way impaired the security as against the second mortgagee."

In my view, the decision in this case exactly applies to the facts of the present case. By the mortgage of 1922, the mortgagee never gave up his security under the bond of 1912 and the effect of the mortgage of 1922 was merely to substitute the covenant to pay the mortgage amount on the due date stated in this bond in place of the covenant to pay as stated in the bond of 1912; the mortgagee never intended to give up his security under the bond of 1912; he refers to it expressly in the later document. The suit is therefore a suit on the bond of 1922 and the right of the mortgagee, so far as the property stood charged in the bond of 1912, has never been given up; that charge can still be enforced and is always enforceable so long as the full amount secured is not repaid, and the suit is brought within 12 years of the due date of the 1922 bond. I do not see what equity there is in favour of defendant No. 27 who took the mortgage in 1916 with his eyes open, subject to a mortgage of 1912. That mortgage has not been paid off as yet and still subsists; the mortgagee merely made and accepted another arrangement with additional security for the payment of his valid and existing debt, and this in no way was prejudicial to defendant No. 27.

I now come to consider some cases which were cited on behalf of the appellants. The question in these cases was whether an acknowledgment by a mortgagor after he has transferred the equity of redemption in whole or in part is a valid acknowledgment against the puisne encumbrancer who was in existence before the acknowledgment. The Madras case which I have just been considering is also an authority for the proposition that an acknowledgment of a mortgage debt in the form it took in that case was valid not only as against the person acknowledging it but also as against those deriving title under him even prior to the date of the acknowledgment and subsequent to the debt acknowledged. The learned Advocate for the appellants cited the case in Yagnanarayana v. Venkata Krishna Rao (2). But that case is against his contention. In that case it was held that where after the sale of a part of the mortgaged property a fresh deed is executed by the mortgagor in renewal of the original mortgage, there is a new promise to pay by the mortgagor and the question is not whether it operates as acknowledgment to save the bar of limitation as against the intermediate alienee because it is a new covenant substituted for the old covenant and not a mere acknowledgment for the old one—the period of limitation even as against the alienee is to be calculated from the date mentioned in the later mortgage and not from that in the original one—the effect of such a new covenant is more analogous to a part payment under s. 20, Lim. Act, and not merely to that of an acknowledgment under s. 19.

It is unnecessary to consider in the present case the correctness of the view taken in some cases that the acknowledgment by a mortgagor of the liability to his mortgagee even after he has parted entirely with the equity of redemption extends the period of limitation so as to bind an earlier encumbrancer though subsequent to the date acknowledged. The present case is not a case where the mortgagors transferred their equity of redemption in full and then gave a mere acknowledgment but is a case where the mortgagors have dealt with the equity of redemption only to the extent of giving successive mortgages of 1912, 1916 and 1920 and renewing the earliest bond. Their liability always remained, as pointed out above in August, 1922 when they renewed the mortgage of 1912 for the amount then validly due; they gave merely an additional security and covenanted to pay the amount on a different date with the stipulation to pay a lower rate of interest; this was in no way detrimental to the puisne encumbrancer.

I now deal with some of the cases which are strongly relied on by the learned Advocate for the appellants. The first case cited by him was the case in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (3). That case contains an elaborate exposition of the law by that distinguished Judge, Mookerjee, J. Harington, J., did not endorse the opinion of his learned colleague because he said at p. 340* that the question of limitation raised a question of some difficulty but he was inclined to think that the admission in the ekranamah was sufficient to bar the statutory limitation. Mookerjee, J. held that an acknowledgment by the mortgagor in favour of a prior mortgagee does not preclude a puisne mortgagee whose title accrued before the acknowledgment was given from relying on the statute of limitation as a bar. In my opinion as I said already it is unnecessary to consider the correctness of this decision as the present case is not a case of a mere acknowledgment by a mortgagor. I may point out that Srinivas Aiyangar, J. at p 242* sought to draw a distinction at the right hand column of Velauda Reddi v. Narasimha Reddi, 33 Ind. Cas. 240 (1) between the case he was dealing with and the case in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (3). In Krishna Chandra Saha v. Bairab Chandra Saha (4), the facts were that A mortgaged several properties to the plaintiffs and then sold one of them, property No. 3, to B who again mortgaged the property to C who brought the property to sale in execution of a decree obtained in a suit to enforce his mortgage; the property was sold and purchased by D. The mortgagor afterwards paid part of the principal as well as of the interest under the earlier mortgage and made an acknowledgment of his liability under it. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to enforce the first mortgage, D contended that the acknowledgment by A, would not prevent the statute of limitation from running against the first mortgagee. But the Court held that the acknowledgment as well as the payments were sufficient to keep alive the debt against the property No. 3. The case in Surjiram Marwari v. Barhamdeo Persad (3), was referred to in the argument by the learned Advocate for the respondents. This case does not support the appellant in the least. Reliance was next placed upon the decision of the Privy Council in Mohamad Ibrahim Hoosain Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (5), but the facts of that case are entirely different as pointed out in Velauda Reddi v. Narasimha Reddi, 33 Ind. Cas. 240 (1), at p. 243*. Attention was next drawn to the case in Ram Sarup v. Bhagwati Prasad (6), where it was held that an acknowledgment by a mortgagor cannot bind a mortgagee who derived title prior to the acknowledgment. The learned Judges pointed out the distinction between the plain languages of ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act. This case does not assist the appellant.

because as pointed out in the Madras case cited above, the present case is rather a case within the terms of s. 20 than within the terms of s. 19. The renewal of the bond in 1922 by giving an additional security lowering the rate of interest was a transaction which partook of the nature of part payment and therefore within the terms of s. 20. The next case cited was the case in Mahomed Taqi v. Raja Ram (7). That case dealt with an acknowledgment of liability by some of the heirs of a mortgagor against whom a decree for sale on the basis of a mortgage had been passed and it was held that this did not operate to save limitation as against the other heirs of the mortgagors. This question does not arise for consideration in the present case, and in any case we are bound by the decision of this Court in Badri Das v. Pasupati Banarji (8), where Rowland, J. has reviewed the case law on the subject exhaustively, Agarwala, J. giving a concurring judgment.

On a careful consideration of all the cases placed before us, I am of opinion that the suit on the bond of 1922 was not barred by limitation, the mortgage bond of 1912 was kept alive, and that the claim of priority by defendant No. 27 must fail. It was finally argued that the execution of the bond of 1922 will in any event operate as a novation of contract so that no suit can be instituted on the mortgage bond of 1912 unless, as was done in Har Chandi Lal v. Sheoraj Singh (9), the mortgage bond of 1922 became inoperative in law and then only within twelve years of the due date fixed in the bond of 1912. It is enough to say that the considerations which weighed with their Lordships in Har Chandi Lal v. Sheoraj Singh (9), do not arise in the case before us. In the present case it was to the interest of the mortgagee to keep alive the security under the bond of 1912, which had never been given up; he took an additional security, as pointed out above, by the bond of 1922; on that date the liability under the bond of 1912 was kept alive both by statute and by the intention of the parties as evidenced by the new arrangement. This is not a case of novation of contract within the meaning of s. 62, Contract Act.

The learned Advocate faintly argued that the amount of Rs. 150 which was paid in cash on the bond of 1912 has not been proved to be advanced for legal necessity. Apart from the fact that the question was never raised either in the pleadings or in the evidence and that the defendants are the father, his sons and grandsons, the amount of Rs. 150 has been proved to have been paid off in 1916 and no part of the claim in the present suit consists of this item. It was also argued that the suit to enforce the mortgage bond of 1922 is not maintainable when the plaintiff has omitted to include in the suit his claims under the usufructuary bond of 1920 which after the period stated therein, namely after 1334, would operate as a simple mortgage bond. It is enough to state that the provisions of s. 67-A, T. P. Act, which are not retrospective do not apply to this mortgage bond. Furthermore the respondents have conceded that any mortgage decree which may be passed in this case should declare that the property which will be sold to repay the amount due, namely Rs. 4,000 including the property covered by the bond of 1912, will be sold free from any liability for the amount due under the simple and usufructuary bond of August 6, 1920. To make it clear the property will be sold free from any encumbrances other than that of the bond of 1912 except any earlier encumbrances that may be left outstanding.

Defendant No. 27 prayed as a last resort that his property in the circumstances of this case should be sold last, namely, the property covered by his mortgage bond of 1916, i. e. Ex. A (2) may be sold only in the event of the other properties covered by the bond of 1912 and the bond of 1922 are not sufficient to discharge the liability of Rs. 4,000. The respondents have agreed that this should be done but even if they had not conceded this we ourselves in our discretion would have passed a similar order in the circumstances of the case. The result is that there will be a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for a sum of Rs. 4,000 only. The office will draw up the usual mortgage decree in the light of my observations above fixing the period of grace for two months from this date. The amount of Rs. 4,000 will carry interest at 6 per cent from the date of decree of the trial Court. In the circumstances each party will bear his own costs in this appeal which is allowed in part. The plaintiff is entitled to proportionate costs in the trial Court for the amount now decreed by this Court.

Varma, J.—I agree. In view of the argument advanced by Mr. Kamla Sahay, appearing on behalf of the defendants first party, I should like to add a few words on the interpretation of s. 7, Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939. The contention is that although the bond was for Rs. 2,000 it mentioned a loan of Rs. 1,391 only and, therefore, the principle of Damdupat should be applied to the sum of Rs. 1,391 and not with regard to the sum of Rs. 2,000. He urges that the bond of 1922 mentions the sum of Rs. 1,391 and therefore the interest should not exceed that amount. If this argument were to be accepted, then the Courts will have to choose between two different sums one, the amount for which the bond has been executed and the other, the amount mentioned in it which has swelled up to the amount for which the bond was executed. But this does not seem to be the object of the Legislature from the wordings of the section itself. The section runs as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law or in any agreement, no Court shall, in any suit brought by a money-lender before or after the Commencement of this Act in respect of a loan advanced before or after the commencement of this Act or in any appeal or proceedings in revision arising out of such suit, pass a decree for an amount of interest for the period preceding the institution of the suit, which together with any amount already realized as interest through the Court or otherwise is greater than the amount of loan advanced, or, if the loan is based on a document, the amount of loan mentioned in, or evidenced by such document."

Looking at the section it seems that it is dealing with two kinds of loan, a loan advanced and a loan based on a document. Under the second heading it takes into consideration two kinds of documents on which loan may be based, one kind may evidence the loan and the other which may not evidence the loan, but may be utilized to find out the amount mentioned in it. "Loan" has been defined in cl. (f) of s. 2. It says:

"'Loan' means an advance whether of money or in kind on interest made by a money-lender, and shall include a transaction on a bond bearing interest executed in respect of past liability and any transaction which, in substance, is a loan; . . . etc."

It is clear that the definition includes cases of loans based on a document. Section 7 is a bit loosely worded, and we had to take the assistance of the learned Advocate-General who gave us two instances to illustrate the difference between two kinds of transactions one where the bond itself creates the loan, and the other that of a loan of bahi khata account. From a reading of the section, I am of opinion, that the document in the expression "based on a document" can be used in such two different ways, in one case evidencing a loan and in another case simply mentioning a loan. The section cannot be interpreted to contemplate, as argued by Mr. Kamla Sahay, that the same document may relate to two different amounts. The argument of Mr. Kamla Sahay, therefore, fails.

D. Order accordingly.

First Appeals Nos. 159 and 167 of 1938

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), ss. 30, 4, 3—Compound interest, if can be changed into simple—Future interest, whether can be granted on consolidated amount of principal and interest—S. 4, meaning of, explained—Alteration of number of instalments.

There is no provision in s. 30, U. P. Agri. Relief Act which entitles a Court to change compound interest into simple interest. On the contrary the table in Sch. III shows for loans different rates according as the interest is compound or simple.

The language of s. 30 is that interest is to be paid on the loan and that this interest is not to be higher than the rate in Sch. III. The whole principle of the Act is that transactions should be re-opened between debtor and creditor even in the case of s. 30 (2) where the transactions have terminated in a decree. It would be quite anomalous to hold that the Court in passing its own decree under the Agri. Relief Act should consolidate the interest and the principal and grant future interest on the whole amount. 170 Ind. Cas. 567 (1), relied on.

The provision in s. 4 is that the rate granted for future interest should not exceed the rate provided under that section. It is not stated in the section that the rate should attain to the rate at which the Govt. of India will lend money to the Local Govt. The Court has a discretion in this matter.

The matter of instalments is one of discretion and when the Court below has exercised its discretion, the High Court should not alter the number of instalments if sufficient reason has not been shown.

F. As. from the decision of the Civil Judge, Bulandshahr, dated February 16, 1938.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and G. S. Pathak, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. N. Sen, Nanak Chand and C. B. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

Bennet, J.—F. A. No. 167 of 1938 is by the defendant against a decree by the Civil

Judge of Bulandshahr under the Agri. Relief Act. Grounds Nos. 1 to 3 of appeal allege that the calculation of the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff is incorrect. The plaint set out that the suit was brought on two promissory notes which were in two series of separate transactions. Promissory note No. 1,—dated March 24, 1930 for Rs. 1,00,000, lent to defendant by plaintiff's firm at the rate of 12 annas per cent. per mensem with compound interest at six-monthly rests. Promissory note No. 2 of March 14, 1933 for Rs. 1,29,900-5-0, that is, the total due on No. 1, the rate of interest specified only as 12 annas per cent. per mensem, that is, this was at simple interest. No. 3, a promissory note of March 6, 1936 for Rs. 1,54,714 in lieu of No. 2. This was also specified with 12 annas per cent. per mensem, that is, simple interest. This was one of the notes in suit. Promissory note No. 4 of October 7, 1933 for Rs. 90,000 at 12 annas per cent. per mensem, also simple. Promissory note No. 5 of September 13, 1936 for Rs. 1,11,500 in lieu of No. 4 at 12 annas per cent. per mensem, which was simple. The suit therefore was brought for the total of promissory notes Nos. 3 and 5 which amounted to Rs. 2,97,033-6-6. The defendant admitted the execution of the promissory notes and the receipt of consideration in the written statement on p. 19 but he pleaded the benefit of the Agri. Relief Act. The claims put forward were under s. 30 for reduction of interest, and for instalments.

The particular point raised in the first three grounds of appeal is in regard to the calculation of interest. Now a table was supplied by the defendant-appellant on pp. 25 and 26 and in this table he calculated on promissory note No. 1 of March 24, 1930 compound interest. The Court below has however applied a higher rate of simple interest for the whole period of the transactions. The appellant claims that the Court below was not entitled under s. 30 and Sch. III to apply simple interest to transaction No. 1 because that was on a promissory note for compound interest. There is no provision in s. 30 which entitles a Court to change compound interest into simple interest. On the contrary the table in Sch. III shows for loans different rates according as the interest is compound or simple. The promissory note comes in the column of Unsecured Loans and being compound interest the rate should be $X+2\frac{1}{2}$, and under note (a) X is $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. $4\frac{1}{2}+2\frac{1}{2}$ is 7 per cent. and this is the calculation which the defendant has made on p. 25. On the other hand the lower Court has given him $X+4\frac{1}{2}$ that is $4\frac{1}{2}+4\frac{1}{2}$ or 9 per cent. taking this as simple interest. We have not been shown that there is any authority for this action of the Court below. We therefore allow the appeal of the defendant on this point and we hold that the calculation in regard to promissory note No. 1 should be at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum compound interest with yearly rests. The calculation on p. 25 is only for the period of promissory note No. 1. We therefore allow the appeal for the amount of Rs. 4,402-8-11. The fourth ground of appeal is that the number of instalments should be increased. There were 20 instalments of six months each, which cover a period of ten years. This matter of instalments is one of discretion and the Court below has exercised its discretion. We do not think that we should alter the number of instalments as sufficient reason has not been shown to us. We therefore allow the appeal to the extent indicated of Rs. 4,402-8-11, with costs, as the defendant has succeeded on his main point.

F. A. No. 159 of 1938 is by the plaintiff against the decree of the Civil Judge of Bulandshahr in this, a suit on two promissory notes. The first ground of appeal was in regard to a list of property which was decreed as the property charged under s. 3 (2), Agri. Relief Act. The table in question forms part of the decree and the note on p. 35 shows that the value of the property has been taken at 33 times the annual nett profits. We consider that 33 years' purchase is much too high a rate of valuation. An additional list of property has been filed by the defendant, which forms part of this judgment. It shows five more villages out of those appearing on pp. 29 and 30 and the nett profits of these five villages amount to Rs. 7,524-2-0. Adding this to the nett profits of the villages in the list decreed which was Rs. 9,670-9-0, we get a total of Rs. 17,194-11-0. Sixteen times this annual nett profit will attain approximately to the amount of the decree and we think that 16 years' purchase is quite a fair rate. Accordingly we allow the appeal on this point and direct that these five villages shall be added to the schedule of property in the decree charged with this liability under s. 3 (2), Agri. Relief Act.

The third ground of appeal is that the lower Court should have granted at least $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest pendente lite and in future. The lower Court has actually granted 3 per cent. Under s. 4 it is provided that future interest should not exceed a certain rate, namely, the rate which may be notified as the rate at which the Govt. of India will lend money to the Local Govt. Learned Counsel refers to certain commentaries which allege that on January 7, 1936 a rate was fixed of $3\frac{1}{2}$ with effect from January 15, 1936. The decree of the Court below was dated February 16, 1938 which was about two years after this order, and learned Counsel has failed to show by an inquiry from the Accountant-General that the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. was the current rate at the time of the decree. In any case the provision in s. 4 is that the rate granted for future interest should not exceed the rate provided under that section. It is not stated in the section that the rate should attain to the rate at which the Govt. of India will lend money to the Local Govt. The Court below has a discretion in this matter and we see no reason to interfere with its discretion.

The fourth ground is that the appellants were entitled to future interest from the date of the decree on the consolidated amount of principal and interest on that date. No authority is shown for this view. The language of s. 30 is that interest is to be paid on the loan and that this interest is not to be higher than the rate in Sch. III. The whole principle of this Act is that transactions should be re-opened between debtor and creditor even in the case of s. 30 (2) where the transactions have terminated in a decree. It would be quite anomalous to hold that the Court in passing its own decree under the Agri. Relief Act should consolidate the interest and the principal and grant future interest on the whole amount. There is no ruling which lays this principle down and on the contrary the interpretation which has been placed by the Full Bench of this Court in Raghubir Singh v. Mulchand (1) on a case falling under s. 30 (2) is against the contention. Although that was a case of a decree, yet sub-s. (2) states that the provisions of sub-s. (1) are to be applied. If therefore the provisions of sub-s. (2) involve the provisions of sub-s. (1) the interpretation of sub-s. (2) is the interpretation of sub-s. (1). We have examined the paper book of the above First Appeal, from order, No 243 of 1935 Raghubir Singh v. Mulchand (1). This paper book shows that what was brought in revision was a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, dated August 24, 1935 under the Agri. Relief Act in which there had been a calculation on the aggregate amount due on December 31, 1929. Now the order which was ultimately passed by the Divisional Bench was a direction that in assessing the amount of interest due the interest will be calculated upon the original amount advanced on loan. When that order is applied to the decree under revision it will result that even for the period after the decree the interest is to be granted on the original loan. It was also a case of a decree by instalments. We see no reason to differ from the view which was taken in that case. Accordingly we hold that the principle on which the Court below has acted is correct, that is, that the Court was correct in stating in its decree on p. 33, line 17 that the rate of 3 per cent. per annum should be on the principal amounts of the loan.

The fifth ground was that the number of instalments was too large. The instalments were 20 in number of six months each for a period of 10 years. As already observed this was a matter of discretion for the Court below and we see no reason to interfere with that direction. In the result we dismiss this appeal with the exception of ground No. 1 in which we have accepted the additional five villages for the property which is to be charged with the decretal amount. We decree accordingly, and as the appeal has virtually failed we grant the respondent costs of the appeal.

Order accordingly.

S. A. against the decree of the District Judge, Sukkur, dated November 30, 1936.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. T. Raymond, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—In the suit out of which this second appeal arises, the plaintiff one Tulsibai, wife of Naraindas, sued the two defendants, Gopumal and Tejumal, for possession of the suit property as the nearest heir of one Lilomal. She was Lilomal's sister's daughter, and the two defendants were sons of Motilbai, the daughter of Shivanmal, the son of Jashanmal, the grand-father of the propositus in this case. It is not disputed that the parties are atma bandhus and that Tulsibai, the plaintiff, is nearer in propinquity to Lilomal, the propositus, than the defendants Gopumal and Tejumal; but while the learned trial Judge held that Tulsibai as a female bandhu was not postponed to the defendants, the male bandhus the learned Appellate Judge came to a contrary conclusion and dismissed the plaintiff's suit. We think however that upon the present state of the authorities the Appellate Judge was right and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. Now it is to be first observed that this is not a case of competition between male atma bandhus, between, for instance, the sister's son or the sister's daughter's son, and the two defendants who are father's father's son's daughter's sons, item No. 20 in the list of atma bandhus, given on p. 63 of Mulla's "Principles of Hindu Law" (1936 Edn.), but it is a case of competition between a remoter male bandhu and a sister's daughter who, under the Mitakshara Law, which applies to Sind, is not one of the female heirs specially mentioned, and the general rule is that she must be postponed to male heirs. The learned Advocate for the appellant however relies principally on two cases, one the Privy Council case in Balasubrahmanya Pandya Thalaiyar v. Subbayya Tevar (1), and the other, Datta- traya Bhimrao v. Gangabai Ganeshbhat (2), as authority for his contention that it is the test of proximity which counts and the test of religious efficacy is only of account when the competing heirs are equal in degree; particularly the learned Advocate relies on the following passage in the Privy Council case (1, p. 712*) :

"It is difficult to suggest that the Board here discarded the test of nearness of degree, and adopted only that of religious efficacy: they clearly applied both, and it is perhaps not without significance, in view of what the Subordinate Judge had said, that nearness of degree is put first. In Jotindra Nath v. Nagendra Nath (3), the question was between atma bandhus, admittedly equal in degree so that the test of proximity was no guide, and it was laid down, strictly as their Lordships think, in accordance with the general scheme of the Mitakshara, that it was only when the test of proximity failed that religious efficacy came in. Their Lordships can see no inconsistency between the two decisions of the Board, and no antagonism between the later decision and the rule enunciated by Muthusami Ayyar, J. upon which Mr. Dunne relies so strongly. They must therefore confirm the decision of both Courts in India that, as between claimants Nos. 2 and 3 Subbayya, as nearer in degree to the last male owner is entitled to succeed to the estate."

But their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with a case of competing male atma bandhus: the mother's brother was entitled to succeed as against a father's sister's son; there was no question of the mother's sister's daughter as here, and though Shab, J.'s judgment in Dattatraya Bhimrao v. Gangabai Ganeshbhat (2), is some authority for the contention that a sister's daughter ranks high in the list of atma bandhus and is not to be postponed in favour of male atma bandhus more remote in degree, the learned Judge on p. 553† says :

"Applying the test of propinquity it would seem that the sister's daughter would be nearer than the sister's son's sons. I do not however decide this question as it is not necessary to do so," and in fact the learned Judge on other grounds dismissed the sister's daughter's suit. And this opinion runs counter to the opinion in other Bombay cases. In two cases in Balkrishna Bhimaji v. Ramkrishna Gangadhar (4), and Girimallappu Channappa v. Kenchava Sanyellappa (5), it was decided that a male bandhu is entitled to preference over a female bandhu even though the latter is nearer in degree, and the latter case went in appeal to the Privy Council. There their Lordships held that in the Bombay Presidency the male bandhu is to be preferred to the female bandhu even though the latter be nearer in degree.

Their Lordships said in Kenchava v. Girmallapa Channappa (6), at p. 212:

In 1908, the High Court of Madras in Raja Venkata Narasimha v. Rajah Suranani (7), again decided that in that Presidency a male bandhu is entitled to preference over a female bandhu, even though the latter is nearer in degree. Saguna v. Sadashiv (8), was not referred to in the judgment, but it was unnecessary because there was no contest between maternal and paternal bandhus. Then in Balkrishna Bhimaji v. Ramkrishna Gangadar (4), decided in 1920 by the High Court of Bombay consisting of the same Judges who decided the case now under appeal, the authority in Rajah Venkata Narasimha v. Rajah Suranani (7), was followed. The principle that among bandhus the male entitled to preference over the female—even though this latter is nearer in degree—was accepted as being law for the Bombay Presidency; and preference was given to a mother's sister's son over a brother's daughter. In that particular case the actual decision would appear to conflict with Saguna v. Sadashiv (8), because it apparently ignored the supposed prior and paramount claim of paternal over maternal bandhus; and it would seem that for some unaccountable reason Saguna v. Sadashiv (8), was not cited to the Court. Whenever therefore the two conflicting principles of preference of the paternal over the maternal line and preference of the male over the female sex, in the Presidency of Bombay, have to be weighed, the Court which weighs them will have to choose between these two decisions of the High Court. But it will be seen from this summary that there is no case in the Bombay Presidency which decides that some preference is not to be given to male bandhus over female, and there is no doubt, indeed the learned Counsel for the appellants did not contend that there was any doubt, that throughout the rest of India, preference for the male would be certain."

And if in Bombay where the Mitakshara is in some respects influenced by the Mayukha where preference is shown to female heirs, the female bandhu is postponed to the male bandhu even though she be nearer in degree, there seems even less reason why a different rule should be followed in Sind where the Mayukha was not the text-book: Bodomal v. Krishnabai (9). We think therefore the learned District Judge was right, and we dismiss this appeal with costs accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 144—Bona fide dispute as to possession of land—Proper way is to proceed under s. 145 and not under s. 144.

In the case of bona fide disputes with regard to possession of land the proper method of dealing with the dispute is by a proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal P. C., and not by a proceeding under s. 144.

Cr. R. App. against an order of the District Magistrate of Shahabad, dated January 20, 1940, affirming that of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Buxar, dated, November 30, 1939.

Dr. Sir Sultan Ahmad and Mr. M. Rahman, for the Petitioners.

Syed Safdar Imam, for the Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application by the 2nd party against an order of November 30, 1939, making absolute against them an order under s. 144 of the Criminal P. C. in respect of plots Nos. 2 and 3 of village Gaighat. The 1st party are tenants of village Gaighat and are in possession of plots Nos. 11, 12 and 13 immediately south and contiguous to plots Nos. 2 and 3. The 2nd party are tenants of village Nainijore which is south of Gaighat. The proceeding commenced on a Police report which stated that the 2nd party were in possession. The disputed plots had recently emerged from the Ganges and it is the case of the 1st party that there has been a reformation in situ of land which belongs to them. The 2nd party, on the other hand, relied on an amaldustak granted to them by the proprietor of the land about two months before the date of the Police report. The learned Magistrate who initiated the proceedings came to the conclusion that the land was an accretion to the land of the 1st party and, accordingly, decided against the 2nd party. In his order he stated that the 2nd party claimed the land as an accretion to their village Nainijore. The 2nd party moved the District Magistrate who has pointed out that the village of Nainijore is south of Gaighat and nowhere it is contiguous to the disputed plots.

In revision it is contended that the 2nd party are interested in village Rudrapur which is adjacent to plot No. 3, one of the disputed plots, and that this circumstance has not been considered by the Courts below. Now, the 2nd party had an opportunity of showing cause against the original order before the Magistrate and also an opportunity of attacking the Magistrate's order before the District Magistrate. On neither occasion did they claim these lands by reason of any interest that they may have had in Rudrapur and there is nothing in the record which enables me to hold that they in fact have any interest in Rudrapur. The learned District Magistrate observed in his judgment that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not trust the Police report. If the Sub-Divisional Magistrate has ever said that he distrusted the Police report certainly it does not appear from his judgment. That judgment contains no reference to the Police report at all. However, the finding given by the Courts below that the villagers of Nainijore have no claim to this plot is supported by circumstances and I see no reason to interfere in revision with an order which has already expired. Should there be any further dispute with regard to the possession of these lands the Sub-Divisional Magistrate will bear in mind the rulings of this Court that in the case of bona fide disputes with regard to possession of land the proper method of dealing with the dispute is by a proceeding under s. 145 of the Criminal P. O., and not by a proceeding under s. 144.

The Rule is discharged.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—
Facts and law duly considered by lower Court—Decision erroneous—If can be corrected on revision.

If the facts and the law applicable to the case have been duly considered by the lower Court, then, although its decision may be erroneous, the error cannot be corrected on revision. If, on the other hand, the lower Court has failed to consider the law or the facts, it has acted illegally and its decision may be revised.

O. R. against the decree of the Additional District Court, Yamethin at Pyinamana, in C. A. No. 19 of 1938.

Mr. J. C. Ray, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Respondent.

Order.—Unfortunately there has been some delay in the disposal of this case. The delay is due to the fact that I have been lately very busy with urgent and important matters and partly due to the fact that I wanted to take time to consider the question whether I should refer this case to a Full Bench or not. On going through a good number of authorities cited at the Bar I found that it would not serve any useful purpose to refer this case to a Bench inasmuch as the law relating to the question as to when and under what circumstances the High Court can interfere with the decision of a Subordinate Court in revision is settled in so far as this country is concerned. The facts leading up to the institution of this suit are few and simple. The plaintiff-applicant sued the defendant-respondent for recovery of Rs. 270 alleged to be due as the price of tobacco leaves which he had sold to the latter from time to time, the transaction between the parties started on or about September 9, 1933. From that date up to December 5, 1933 the plaintiff-applicant sold leaves worth Rs. 995-11-0 from time to time and in payment thereof the defendant-respondent paid several sums amounting to Rs. 742-14-0 during that period. That left a sum of Rs. 253. Then the parties ceased dealing with each other till August 1, 1935. During that year the plaintiff-applicant sold goods to the value of Rs. 547-7-0 to the defendant-respondent and the latter paid Rs. 530-4-0 in respect thereof thus leaving a balance of Rs. 17-3-0. In respect of this sum of Rs. 17-3-0 and the balance Rs. 253 still due in respect of accounts for 1933 the present suit was instituted.

In order to get over the bar of limitation the plaintiff-applicant states in his plaint that the amount Rs. 253 was brought over to his new account opened in 1935 and the amounts paid by the defendant-respondent during that period were appropriated towards the said amount. The defence of the defendant-respondent is that he did not owe a sum of Rs. 253 as alleged and if he still owe that amount the claim thereto is barred by time. The trial Court held that the claim to this amount was not barred by time and decreed the amount claimed with costs. On appeal the lower Appellate Court took a contrary view and held that the claim of the plaintiff-applicant to the sum of Rs. 253 was barred by time. The plaintiff-applicant therefore comes up to this Court and seeks to have the order of the lower Appellate Court revised. An objection is taken by the learned Counsel for the respondent that this application for revision does not come within the purview of s. 115, Civil P. C. Section 115 is in the following terms:

"The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such Subordinate Court appears

(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or

(b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit."

This section was originally s. 622, Civil P. C., 1877, and it contained only cls. (a) and (b); but by s. 92 of Act XII of 1879, cl. (c) was put in. This clause was first dealt with by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raja Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), where Sir Barnes Peacock said:

"The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity? It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them, and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity."

The next case in which this question was considered by their Lordships was the case in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2), where Lord Atkinson said:

"As to the preliminary objection, s. 115, Civil P. C., enables the High Court, in a case in which no appeal lies, to call for the record of any case if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have acted in the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to have exercised a jurisdiction vested in it, or to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and further enables it to pass such an order in the case as the Court may think fit."

It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

(1) 11 I A 237; 11 O 6; 4 Sar. 559 (P O).

As a result of these two pronouncements there has been a conflict of decisions in India and Burma as to when and under what circumstances a Subordinate Court is said to have exercised its jurisdiction "illegally or with material irregularity." These decisions are almost irreconcilable, but so far as this country is concerned, as I have explained above, it may be said that the law is almost settled. The first case in which this question was considered was the case in Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (3), where the Chief Judge Sir Herbert Thirkell-White, after reviewing a number of cases, said:

"There are many instances in which there can be no doubt as to the power to revise. Where there is a patent illegality or material irregularity of procedure, the application of the section cannot be doubted. But where there is no illegality of so crude and obvious a kind, and where the proper procedure has been observed, in cases, that is to say, where the application of the section is doubtful owing to the difficulty in distinguishing between an error of law and illegal action, I think that the test is whether the lower Court has applied its mind to the law and the facts and come to a decision after due consideration; or whether it has failed to take into account some proposition of law or some fact in evidence which ought to affect its decision. If the facts and the law applicable to the case have been duly considered by the lower Court, then, although its decision may be erroneous, the error cannot be corrected on revision. If, on the other hand, the lower Court has failed to consider the law or the facts, it has acted illegally and its decision may be revised."

This decision was approved and followed in Goridut Bagla v. H. Rookman (4) where Ormond, J. said:

"The question I think resolves itself into this: was the method irregular by which the conclusion of fact or of law was arrived at? If the Judge arrives at a conclusion of law or of fact without having considered the law or a material part of the evidence, or by misunderstanding or erroneously recording the statement of Pleders or witnesses, the method of arriving at such conclusion is illegal and irregular, and is a ground for revision, provided the irregularity is material and the petitioner has suffered an injustice thereby."

These decisions were approved and followed by this Court in Rasu v. Kattara (5), Maung Pa v. Abdul Ganni (6) and Fut Chong v. Maung Po Cho (7). These decisions are in accordance with the view of Rankin, J. as he then was, given in Hindley

v. Joynarain Marwari (8), where the learned Judge said:

"A review of the cases upon this section leads me to think that whether or not this case comes within cl. (a) it can only escape this clause by falling within cl. (c). All cases of acting illegally are cases of error in law though the converse is very far from true. The element which must be present in the nature of the error to give rise to the power of revision has never been very precisely defined, but I think it clear upon the statute and not really doubted in the decided cases, that any error in law which amounts to a usurpation of authority in the act done by the Court comes within cl. (c) if it is not already within cl. (a). In the broad sense of the word no Court ever has jurisdiction to act illegally though it may have jurisdiction to make an order which in fact or in law is wrong. I think that the Legislature when in 1879 it added the last clause can only have meant to obviate unprofitable nicety in the interpretation of the word "jurisdiction" in the section as it originally stood. It was argued at the bar on the strength of the judgment given by Jenkins, C. J., in the case last cited, Shew Prosad v. Ram Chunder (3) at p. 339 that the words "acted illegally" refer only to matters of procedure. This is I think a misunderstanding. Save in extreme cases such matters come within the last words of cl. (c). The word "procedure" is used by the Chief Justice as covering all three clauses of the section—a clear though certainly an extended sense. The phrases are "faults of procedure," "error of law and not of procedure" and I think he is adverting to the general scope of the section as a whole in a short and comprehensive phrase. He used the word "procedure" as the key-note of the section just as the Privy Council in Balakrishna Udaya v. Vasudeva Aiyar (2), used the word "jurisdiction." In his judgment the words "procedure" does not mean merely the method of conducting a case and in the Privy Council's judgment the word "jurisdiction" does not mean merely propriety of forum."

That these views are in my opinion correct is confirmed by what Lord Macmillian said in the course of discussion in Atma Ram v. Beni Prasad (10); where his Lordship said:

"The High Court found the Subordinate Judge was in error in three ways: (1) He dealt with the matter summarily, i. e., he did not give it proper consideration. (2) He misapprehended the position of Beni Prasad. (3) He failed to do justice between the parties."

The question that therefore arises in this case is whether the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court applied his mind to the law and facts of this case in deciding it in the way he did. I have no doubt in my mind that the learned Judge did. The evidence of the plaintiff-applicant himself shows that his suit is a suit for the recovery of Rs. 253 due in respect of accounts of 1933 and a sum of Rs. 17-3-0 due in respect of accounts of 1935. He states:

"For the goods taken in 1295 B. E. a sum of Rs. 253 is due. A sum of Rs. 17-3-0 was due on the goods taken in 1297 B. E. and so the total due from the defendant is Rs. 270."

In the course of cross-examination he adds:

"There is nothing in the account book to show specifically that the amounts paid in 1297 B. E. were being paid towards the Rs. 253 due from the 1295 B. E. account."

For all these reasons the application fails and it is dismissed with costs.

B. Application dismissed.

Judgment.—We cannot accept the contention on behalf of the appellants that they are decree-holders who can execute the decree without recognition by the Court which passed the decree of the devolution upon them of the decree. The appellants are not "decree-holders" as defined in s. 2, Civil P. O. Their father was the sole decree-holder, and although the sons may well have been entitled along with him to the benefits of the decree—a thing which has yet to be investigated—it is impossible to say that they were, or are "decree-holders." With respect, we are not able to agree with the learned Judge who decided the case in Akhori Ramsewakprasad v. Saran Singh (1). The decision of the learned District Judge on this point is in our opinion correct. This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Amendment in 1929—Document executed before amendment and not requiring registration—Whether requires registration after amendment.

The amendment of s. 17, Reg. Act, in 1929 does not require documents executed before that Act came into operation and which did not require registration when it was executed, to be registered. Desai Motilal Mangalji v. Desai Parashorotam Nandlal (1) and Ram Coomar Singh v. Kishari (2), relied on. 150 Ind. Cas. 555 (3), distinguished.

A. from a decision of the District Judge of Purnea, dated June 17, 1938.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar and P. N. Sanyal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Jafar Imam, Rajanikant Sinha and Ram Anugrah N. Sinha, for the Respondents.

Agarwala, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the District Judge of Purnea reversing a decision of the Munsif. The appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of khewats 13 and 14 of village Maranga. The principal question in the suit was whether there had been an award by arbitrators in 1913 by which these khewats had been allotted to the plaintiffs or whether, as alleged by the defendants, there was no award in 1913 but that there was an award in 1919 by which the land in dispute was allotted to the defendants. The plaintiffs relied on Ex. 1 which purported to be an award made on January 1, 1913. The defendants relied on a similar document relating to an award purporting to be made in 1919. The trial Court refused to take in evidence the document tendered by the defendants on the ground that it was unregistered and found that the award of 1913 was genuine. The Appellate Court has rejected Ex. 1 also on the ground that it was not registered and has omitted to consider much of the evidence that was adduced by the plaintiffs.

The first point that arises in this appeal is whether the two awards of 1913 and 1919 should have been admitted in evidence and considered by the Court below. It has been contended in support of the judgment of the Court below that s. 49 of the Reg. Act of 1908 is a bar to the admissibility of either of the awards. That section provides that no document required by s. 17 to be registered shall be received as evidence of any transaction affecting any immovable property or conferring any power to adopt, unless it has been registered. There is no dispute that the two documents were of a nature which s. 17 of the Reg. Act as amended in 1929 requires to be registered or that such documents were not compulsorily registerable under s. 17 as the Act stood before the amendment of 1929. The question, therefore, resolves into this, whether the amendment of s. 17 in 1929 requires documents executed before that Act came into operation to be registered. A similar question was raised in Desai Motilal Mangalji v. Desai Parashorotam Nandlal (1) in which it was held that s. 17 of the Reg. Act of 1877 should not be construed as requiring a document to be registered which would not have required registration when it was executed. The learned Judges who decided that case followed the earlier decision of the Calcutta High Court in Ram Coomar Singh v. Kishari (2) in which it was held that neither s. 17 of the Act of 1877 nor the corresponding sections of the preceding Acts had the effect of rendering a document, which was not compulsorily registrable under the Act of 1861, inadmissible in evidence under the succeeding Acts, without registration. Learned Counsel for the respondents referred to the recent decision of the Bombay High Court in Datto Shivram Gosavi v. Babasaheb Malhar Deshpande (3) in which a question arose regarding the admissibility of a rent-note executed in 1865. Such a note was not compulsorily registrable at the time when it was executed but it was compulsorily registrable under s. 17 of the Act of 1908. The Act of 1866 had also rendered such documents compulsorily registrable and it contained a provision in s. 100 that documents which had not been compulsorily registrable before 1865 but were then declared to be so registrable might be registered within one year from the date from which the new Act came into operation. The holder of the rent-note had not taken the precaution of availing himself of the benefit of this provision of the Act of 1866 and in those circumstances it was held that the document was rendered inadmissible in evidence by s. 49 of the Act of 1908. That case is clearly distinguishable from the present case. The amending Act of 1929 does not contain any provision similar to that of s. 100 of the Act of 1866 and the T. P. Amendment (Supplementary) Act (Act XXI of 1929), s. 15, clearly supports the principle of the earlier Bombay decision. Section 15 (1) (b) provides that "Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to affect the validity, invalidity, effect or consequences of anything already done or suffered before April 1, 1930 when the Supplementary Act came into operation."

The decree of the Court below must be set aside and the case be re-heard. The Appellate Court will afford the defence an opportunity of giving formal proof of the award of 1919 but no other fresh evidence will be admitted. The Court will also take into consideration, in determining the questions which arise before it, the documentary and oral evidence in the case. The particular documents which the appellants complained had not been referred to by the Court below are Ex. 11 [(a rent decree obtained by the plaintiffs against certain tenants) and rent receipts produced by the plaintiffs (Ex. 4 series)]. It has also been a matter of grievance that the Court below has omitted to consider the fact that the rent receipts produced by the defendants were receipts granted by samindari servants who had been dismissed for misappropriation and that it was the plaintiffs who produced all the documents of title relevant to the property in dispute. These matters will now be considered by the Court below and given their proper weight. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Rowland, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Application for restitution is governed by Art. 182, Limitation Act (IX of 1908) — Distinction made by s. 144 between restitution which is properly consequential on variation or reversal of decree and which is not—Reversal of decree — Possession taken under original decree, whether always wrongful.

An application for restitution must be regarded as an application in execution and would be governed for the purpose of limitation by Art. 182, Lim. Act. Consequently, a person claiming restitution would have to do so within the period of three years from the date on which the right to make the claim arose. 41 Ind. Cas. 238 (2) and 62 Ind. Cas. 273 (3), relied on.

Held, on facts that application for restitution was in time.

Ordinarily, on the reversal of a decree for possession the judgment-debtor would be entitled to possession if claimed. The judgment-debtor would also be entitled to mesne profits during the period he was wrongfully kept out of possession. But it cannot always be said upon reversal of the decree, unless it gives clear indication of that fact, that the possession taken under the original decree is wrongful. Section 144, Civil P. O., makes a distinction between restitution which is properly consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree and restitution which is not. It emphasizes the fact that discretion is vested in the Court to make an order for mesne profits which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal. That distinction recognizes the possibility of a reversal not imprinting, on the possession taken, a wrongful character within the meaning of s. 2, sub-s. (12), containing the definition of "mesne profits." If in the order of reversal the character of that possession has been determined, then the question ceases. But if it is not and the Court remands the suit for determination of that question after fresh or further inquiry, then certainly it would be premature for the Court in the application by the successful appellant for restitution to make an order for mesne profits, for the Court would then be determining a question which was sub judice. 76 Ind. Cas. 255 (1), relied on.

A. from the order passed by the District Judge, West Khandesh at Dhulia, in Appeal No. 162 of 1935.

Mr. P. B. Gajendragadkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. A. Kher, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of West Khandesh setting aside the trial Court's order dismissing as time-barred the respondent's application under s. 144, Civil P. O., for restitution. He has remanded the case for decision thereof on the merits. The question raised in this appeal is one of limitation and it arises in this way. The plaintiff purchased in 1918 about one hundred mango trees in execution of a mortgage decree of 1910. As he found difficulty in recovering possession owing to obstruction by certain persons who claimed title to the trees, in 1921 he instituted an action for possession against those persons. Among them was one Jamnabai who claimed certain number of mango trees from a large cluster as purchaser from the mortgagor's daughter who had sold them as being outside the specific trees mortgaged. In 1924 a decree was passed in the plaintiff's favour. In execution he succeeded in obtaining possession of eighty mango trees on April 9, 1925. In appeal taken by some of the defendants it was contended that as the cluster of mango trees consisted of a very large number of trees exceeding hundred, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to establish the specific trees mortgaged and sold, and that there was no evidence of their identity. That argument appealed to the first Appeal Court which therefore reversed the trial Court's decree and remanded the suit for ascertaining "which of the trees were actually sold to the respondents."

Unquestionably, upon that reversal and remand the restitution of the trees taken possession of by virtue of the decree was properly consequential. But that was not done because there was no application for restitution under s. 144 of the Code then made. The suit thereafter upon remand proceeded to trial and the plaintiff's claim was upheld, except in respect of some trees which were claimed by defendant No. 3, Jamnabai, and since purchased on June 26, 1927, by the present respondents. The decree upon remand was passed on November 23, 1931. On April 12, 1933, Jamnabai's successors, the present respondents, applied merely for an order for mesne profits of those trees excluded from the original decree for the period of the alleged wrongful possession of the plaintiff commencing from the date of his possession in execution of the decree, namely, April 9, 1925, to the date of the application. That claim was resisted on the ground of limitation and the plea in that respect was upheld by the trial Court. But it did not find favour with the learned District Judge. He held, following Sonba v. Parashram (1), that the awarding of mesne profits was not a proper consequence of the order of remand and reversal and that time commenced to run from the decree passed after remand. He therefore remanded the case for ascertaining the quantum of the profits recovered. Against that order the plaintiff's heirs have appealed.

It is clear upon authority that the application for restitution must be regarded as an application in execution and would be governed for the purpose of limitation by Art. 182, Lim. Act (IX of 1908); See Kurgodigouda v. Ningangouda (2) and Hamidalli v. Ahmedalli (3). Consequently, a person claiming restitution would have to do so within the period of three years from the date on which the right to make the claim arose. The question is which is the terminus a quo for computing that period. It is urged that limitation commenced from the date of the order of reversal and remand, namely, January 27, 1927 and that the application therefore is clearly barred. On the other hand it is said that the period commenced from the date on which the respondents succeeded in the suit, namely, November 23, 1931. The question is not free from difficulty. Undoubtedly, as I have remarked, it was obligatory on the Court upon an application for restitution to restore possession of the mango trees under s. 144, Civil P. C., when the first decree was reversed in appeal on January 27, 1927 and the case remanded. Ordinarily, on the reversal of a decree for possession the judgment-debtor would be entitled to possession if claimed. But no such claim appears to have been made in this case. The judgment-debtor would also be entitled to mesne profits during the period he was wrongfully kept out of possession. But it could not always be said upon reversal of the decree, unless it gives clear indication of that fact, that the possession taken under the original decree is wrongful. Section 144, makes a distinction between restitution which is properly consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree and restitution which is not. It emphasizes the fact that discretion is vested in the Court to make an order for mesne profits which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal. That distinction recognizes the possibility of a reversal not imprinting on the possession taken a wrongful character within the meaning of s. 2, sub-s. (12), Civil P. O., containing the definition of "mesne profits." If in the order of reversal the character of that possession has been determined, then the question ceases. But if it is not and the Court remands the suit for determination of that question after fresh or further inquiry, then certainly as the learned District Judge has remarked it would be premature for the Court in the application by the successful appellant for restitution to make an order for mesne profits, for the Court would then be determining a question which was sub-judice. That is what was decided in Sonba v. Parashram (1) and with respect I agree with the reasoning in that judgment.

Here it was made abundantly clear by the first Appeal Court which reversed the decree and remanded the suit that the character of the plaintiff's possession could not then be determined until and unless the identity of the eighty mango trees claimed was ascertained. It was therefore impossible to say before the ascertainment was complete whether the plaintiff's possession was necessarily wrongful. I am unable to agree with the reasoning that the rule in s. 144 of the Code enunciates the doctrine of restitution in an unqualified form and contemplates a complete and unqualified restitution with all consequential reliefs. As I have already remarked, the language of the section makes a distinction in the Court's powers in placing the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree. The Court has to regard the nature of the claim, the relief granted, the variation introduced in appeal and the manner in which the ultimate decision might affect the rights of the parties to the subject-matter in dispute. These considerations have necessarily to be borne in mind in exercising the discretion vested in the Court in determining the claim to ancillary relief by way of refund of costs, payment of interests, damages or compensation and mesne profits. I would therefore maintain the order of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 12—Leave under, to sue—Application for revocation of—Considerations—Firm register, kept according to terms of Partnership Act showing Calcutta as principal place of business—Suit for dissolution of partnership in Calcutta High Court—Leave to sue there, if can be revoked.

In an interlocutory application for revocation of leave to sue granted under cl. 12, Letters Patent matters of difficulty and importance which require a meticulous consideration of facts and law and which are best determined upon the evidence of witnesses who have been subjected to cross-examination should be decided at the trial of the suit and not in the application. Where a firm register kept in accordance with the terms of the Partnership Act shows that the principal place of business of the firm in Calcutta and a person brings a suit for dissolution of partnership in Calcutta High Court relying upon the entry in the firm register, the High Court has jurisdiction to try the suit and leave to sue in the Calcutta High Court under cl. 12, Letters Patent (Cal.) cannot be revoked on the ground that jurisdiction of that Court is being attracted by adoption of a device. Radha Bibee v. Mucksoodum Dass (1), 163 Ind. Cas. 167 (2) and 162 Ind. Cas. 287 (3), distinguished [p. 358, col. 1; p. 359, col. 1.]

Messrs. S. M. Bose, B. C. Ghose, S. C. Bose, S. N. Banerjee, H. N. Sanyal and A. C. Ganguly, for the other Defendants.

Judgment.—This is an application by defendant No. 6, Hajee Adam Abdul Shakoor, for an order that the leave granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent of this Court to the plaintiff to institute this suit in this Court be revoked, in the alternative for an order staying the suit. There was a prayer for security for costs; that was abandoned by learned Counsel for the petitioner. This motion arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiff Ali Mohamed Ebrahim Shakoor against six defendants. They are (1) Adam Hajee Peer Mohamed Essack, for self, (2) Adam Hajee Peer Mohamed Essack, as manager of Peer Mohamedi Fund, (3) Ahmed Hajee Peer Mohamed, (4) Abdul Karim Adam, (5) Taiyub Ali Mohamed, and (6)

Hajee Adam Abdul Shakoor. It will be more convenient, I think, to refer to the defendants by their respective numbers and not by their names which are confusing by reason of the fact that the names of the different defendants are very similar and seem to be a permutation and combination of one another's names. Defendant No. 1 is the same person as defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 3 is the brother of defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 4 is the son of defendant No. 1. Defendant No. 5 is the plaintiff's son, and defendant No. 6 is the manager of defendant No. 1. It is clear from this statement that defendants Nos. 1, 3 and 4 are closely related as brothers and son, and defendant No. 6 is the manager of defendant No. 1.

The plaintiff's suit is one for the dissolution of a partnership alleged to be existing between him and the five defendants and for accounts. There is a further prayer for a declaration that the document executed by the plaintiff on February 3, 1936 in favour of defendant No. 1 is void on the ground of fraud, undue influence and similar grounds. It is alleged that the partnership business was carried on at Calcutta.

The suit was instituted on June 27, 1938. The written statement of defendant No. 1 was filed on August 10, 1938 and the written statements of the other defendants were filed on November 7, 1938. On August 22, 1938, defendant No. 1 applied to this Court for a stay of the suit and for security for costs. In fact that application was similar to the present one in all respects except that there was no prayer for an order to revoke the leave granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. The other defendants did not join in that application, nor were they served with notice of that application. On December 6, 1938, by consent an order was passed. The plaintiff consented to furnish security. While that application was pending the other defendants were written to by the solicitors of the plaintiff asking them to state their attitude with respect to the application, but no reply was given to this letter. Thirteen days after that consent order, that is on December 19, 1938, the present application has been made by defendant No. 6, who, as I have said, is the servant of defendant No. 1. In this application it is worthy of notice that defendant No. 3, who is the brother of defendant No. 1, has not been served with notice.

On behalf of the petitioner the allegations are briefly as follows: He says that there was no partnership between defendant No. 1 and the other defendants. He claims that the business belonged to defendant No. 1 alone and that the plaintiff and the others were servants, who had a share in the profits of the business. His contention is that under the peculiar law prevailing in the Bantva State where the agreement between the parties was entered into and where all the parties reside, the agreement did not constitute a partnership. This agreement is dated December 15, 1934. It is stated that the head office of the business is at Bantva and not at Calcutta and it is pointed out that there is a term in the agreement whereby the plaintiff agreed that all disputes would be settled at Bantva or Rajkot and that he would not be permitted to institute legal proceedings elsewhere. The next important allegation of the petitioner is that all accounts between the plaintiff and defendant No. 1 have already been settled and that on February 3, 1936, the plaintiff executed a document evidencing this settlement of account and terminating the agreement. This document it was alleged was executed at Bantva. This is the document which was challenged on the ground of fraud and undue influence. The petitioner alleges that no fraud or undue influence was exercised, and that the circumstances all indicate that the plaintiff willingly and with full knowledge of all the facts executed this document. It is said that pursuant to this document the plaintiff was given a sum of over Rs. 3,00,000 which he accepted. The contentions of the petitioner are: firstly, that the entire cause of action in this suit arises outside the jurisdiction of this Court; secondly, that the plaintiff contracted that he would not be entitled to bring any suit except in the Bantva and Rajkot Courts. On these grounds it is contended that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit. Thirdly, it is said that, even if this Court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit on the footing that part of the cause of action has arisen here, the leave granted should be revoked or the suit should be stayed inasmuch as the suit has been brought here with intent to make it impossible for the defendants to defend the suit. It is pointed out that all the books are at Bantva, all the witnesses reside there, and that the suit could be most conveniently tried at Bantva or Rajkot. The contention is that this suit has been brought here deliberately with the object of making it impossible for the defendants to carry on their defence.

On behalf of the plaintiff-respondent the contention is that there was a partnership and that the partnership was registered at Calcutta. It was further pointed out that Calcutta was the principal place of business of the partnership. On this ground it is argued that this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit. It is contended further that the deed of partnership does not contain any clause which precludes the plaintiff from suing in this Court. Lastly, it is said that this suit can be conveniently tried here and that this application is a mala fide one made for the purpose of harassing the plaintiff. The first thing to remember in an interlocutory application like this is that matters of difficulty and importance, which require a meticulous consideration of facts and law and which are best determined upon the evidence of witnesses who have been subjected to cross-examination should be decided at the trial of the suit and not in the application. I do not consider that it is necessary to go into the facts in detail or to decide finally whether the plaintiff's allegations of fraud are justified or whether they are themselves fraudulent. What has to be decided on this application is whether any part of the cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction of this Court and if so whether the leave granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, should remain. Upon the materials before me and as at present advised, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff has shown that a part of the cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction of this Court. There is a register which is kept in accordance with the terms of the Partnership Act. In that register it is stated that all the parties are partners and that the principal place of business of the partnership firm is at No. 1, Amratolla Lane, Calcutta. Under s. 68, Partnership Act, it is laid down that the statements contained in the register of firms shall as against any person by whom or on whose behalf such statements have been made be conclusive proof of any fact therein stated. The defendants say that this entry was made merely to enable the plaintiff to file suits in the Small Cause Court at Calcutta and to deal with certain income-tax matters and that it does not represent the real state of things. I am extremely doubtful whether the defendants can be allowed to say this in view of the provisions of s. 68, Partnership Act. In any case for the purposes of this application the register of firms is sufficient evidence to establish that there was a partnership business, that the plaintiff and the defendants were all partners in this business and that the principal place of business of the firm was at Calcutta. This suit is for a dissolution of this partnership, therefore this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit.

On behalf of the petitioner it is said that the plaintiff has already, by a document of February 3, 1936, given up his rights. The plaintiff says that this document was brought about by fraud. This question must be decided in the suit and cannot be decided upon affidavits on an application of this nature. Next the petitioner relies upon the clause in the partnership agreement of December 15, 1934, which he says debars the plaintiff from suing in any other Court except the Courts at Bantva and Rajkot. The translation of this document furnished by the petitioner is not on affidavit. On behalf of the plaintiff there is a translation which is supported by an affidavit. After perusing this translation I cannot say that by this document the plaintiff has divested himself of his right to bring a suit of the nature of the present one in this Court. I shall now deal with the next contention urged on behalf of the petitioner, namely, that even if this Court has jurisdiction to try this suit leave should be refused on the ground of balance of inconvenience or on the ground that the plaintiff has brought this suit mala fide in this Court merely to harass the defendant. Certain cases were cited in support of this contention. They are Radha Bibee v. Mucksoodum Doss (1); Kalooram Agarwalla v. Jonistha Lal (2) and Daulatram Rawatmull v. Maharajlal (3). In my opinion these decisions can be distinguished from the circumstances of the present application. In the case reported in Radha Bibee v. Mucksoodum Doss (1) a widow was suing for maintenance. The entire cause of action arose outside the jurisdiction of this Court. The widow sought to invoke the jurisdiction of this Court by praying for an order that a charge may be declared upon certain Calcutta property for her maintenance in the cases reported in Kalooram Agarwalla v. Jonistha Lal (2) and Daulatram Rawatmull v.

(3) 40 O W N 164; 162 Ind. Cas. 287; A I R 1936 Cal. 219; 63 O 526; 8 R O 587.

Maharajlal (3) the suits were on promissory notes. The entire cause of action was outside Calcutta. The plaintiff brought the suits in this Court depending upon assignments of the promissory notes made within the jurisdiction of this Court obviously for the purpose of creating jurisdiction. In all these cases it will be seen that the jurisdiction of this Court was sought to be attracted by a device and it was held that when the subject-matter of a suit is outside the jurisdiction of this Court the plaintiff should not be allowed to bring a suit in this Court by the adoption of such devices. The decisions reported in Kalooram Agarwalla v. Jonistha Lal (2) and Daulatram Rawatmull v. Maharajlal (3) were not followed in another case reported in Rai Radhika Mohan Roy v. Bhubani Prosanna Lahiri (4) on the ground that if the view of the earlier cases were adopted it would strike at the root of negotiability. I am not concerned with the question of negotiability in this case. It is quite clear however that in all these cases jurisdiction did not exist until jurisdiction was attracted by the adoption of a device for the express purpose of conferring jurisdiction on this Court.

In this case the position is quite different. The plaintiff relies not upon any device; he relies upon facts which were in existence long before this suit was ever contemplated. He relies upon the entry in the register kept under the Partnership Act. It cannot be said that this entry was made with the object of giving the plaintiff an opportunity of bringing the suit in this Court. I am of opinion therefore that the cases cited by learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner do not help him. Learned Counsel for the petitioner then relied upon a case reported in Jethabhai Versey & Co. v. Amarchand Madhavji & Co. (5). In that case certain principles were laid down upon which the Court would be justified in ordering a stay of the suit. In my opinion, the facts of the present case do not fall within the scope of those principles. It was said there:

"If the Court taking all the facts into consideration comes to the conclusion that a plaintiff in commencing an action in this country has not done so on account of any legitimate advantage which a trial in this country will give him, but for purposes entirely foreign to that legitimate purpose, then apart from any question as to expense or inconvenience, in my opinion, not only has the Court jurisdiction, but it is its duty to stay the proceedings."

Again there is the following passage:

"As I have already pointed out in order to justify a stay it is as a rule necessary that something more should exist than a mere balance of convenience in favour of proceeding in some other country. In my opinion it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that either the expense or the difficulties of trial in this country are so great that injustice will be done in this sense, that it will be very difficult or practically impossible for the litigant who is applying for stay to get justice in this country."

It may be that in this case many of the witnesses are residents of Bantva. It may also be true that some documents are at Bantva. But I do not think that it can be said that if the suit were tried here it would be so inconvenient for the defendant as to result in injustice being done. I shall next take up the contention of the respondent that this application is mala fide. In my opinion this contention is not groundless. As I have said before, there was an application by defendant No. 1 a very few days before the present one which was almost in identical terms. The only substantial difference between that application and the present one is that there was no prayer for revoking the leave granted under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. It is curious that the other defendants did not join in that application. It is also curious that this prayer for revocation of leave was not made then although all the facts which are now relied upon were well-known to defendant No. 1 at that time. It is also curious that the other defendants, although they were written to by the plaintiff did not care to disclose what their attitude was in respect to that application. A further fact which raises a suspicion in my mind is that defendant No. 3, who is a brother of defendant No. 1, has not been given notice of this application, nor has he joined in this application. The suggestion made by the petitioner that this has been done deliberately so that defendant No. 3 may come up with another application is not without foundation. In these circumstances I consider that this application should be refused. I accordingly dismiss it with costs. The costs will be as of a defended action. There will be only one set of costs.

RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Adoption—Last surviving co-parcener's widow taking boy in adoption—Vesting of estate in him—Adoption by widow of predeceased co-parcener, if can divest.

Where after the death of the last surviving male co-parcener his mother takes a boy in adoption, the adopted son divests his mother of the property inherited by her. But there is a termination of the co-parcenary and the adoption by the widow of any other predeceased co-parcener does not divest the property from the son adopted by the mother of the last surviving co-parcener. 170 Ind. Cas. 393 (1), explained. F. A. No. 182 of 1935 and F. A. No. 247 of 1936, relied on.

S. A. from the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 11 of 1936.

Messrs. G. P. Murdeshwar and R. A. Mundkur, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for the Respondent.

Broomfield, J.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Dharwar dismissing the plaintiff-appellants' suit for a half share of property in the possession of the defendant-respondent. The material facts are these. Yellappa and Mallappa were joint brothers. Yellappa died first leaving a widow Bandewa. Mallappa died leaving a widow Basava and a son Virappa. Virappa, the last surviving co-parcener, died unmarried. Basava adopted the defendant and a few months afterwards Bandewa adopted the plaintiff who claimed a half share in the family property in the possession of the defendant-respondent. The District Judge dismissed the claim relying on Balu Saktharam v. Lahoo Sambhaji (1). The facts in the Full Bench case were that the estate of the last surviving co-parcener passed to his widow who remarried and left the family whereupon his sister became the owner. The contest was between a purchaser from the sister and a son adopted by the widow of a deceased co-parcener before the widow of the last surviving co-parcener remarried. The Full Bench decided in favour of the former and laid down certain general propositions of which those material for the present case are

Nos. 3 and 4 (p. 543*) :

"3.....where a co-parcenary exists at the date of the adoption, the adopted son becomes a member of the co-parcenary, and takes his share in the joint property accordingly, and this principle applies although the co-parcenary is a samindari having the peculiar feature of being governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture."

"4 where the adoption takes place after the termination of the co-parcenary by the death, actually or fictionally, of the last surviving co-parcener, the adoption by a widow of a deceased co-parcener has not the effect of reviving the co-parcenary, and does not divest property from the heir of the last surviving co-parcener (other than the widow) or those claiming through him or her."

Mr. Murdeshwar has attempted by a very ingenious argument to show that in the present case the co-parcenary has not terminated at all and that it is the third of the propositions laid down in the Full Bench case and not the fourth which really applies to the facts. His argument is this if the co-parcenary terminated on Virappa's death, his mother Basava became the owner of the property, having a widow's limited estate, and logically her adoption of a son to her husband should not have divested, the estate which she derived not from her husband but from her son. But it is settled law Vellanki Venkata Krishna Row v. Venkata Rama Lakshmi Narsayya (2), and Jamnabai v. Raychand Nahalchand (3), that when a woman who has succeeded as heir to her son makes an adoption, the estate she has inherited from her son is divested and the adopted son becomes the owner. That is to say, the adopted son succeeds the natural born son. In this case the defendant succeeded Virappa and Mr. Murdeshwar argues, applying the language used by the Privy Council in a somewhat similar connection in Madana Mohana v. Purushothama (4), that the adoption must relate back to the death of Virappa and Basava's entering on the property should be regarded as a temporary interruption, operating merely to prevent the ownership of the estate being in abeyance. It is contended that on this view there has been fictionally no hiatus in the co-parcenary.

The argument is, as I say, an ingenious one. There certainly does seem to be something to be said for the view that the co-parcenary comes to an end when the estate of the last surviving co-parcener passes on his death to a collateral heir or to an heir like a sister who takes an absolute estate, but does not necessarily come to an end when it passes to his widow or mother who may adopt a son to succeed the last male-holder. It is clear that the last surviving co-parcener and the widows of deceased co-parceners together form a co-parcenary. For instance Virappa, Basava and Bandewa were a co-parcenary, and under the third proposition in Balu Sakharan v. Lahoo Sambhaji (1), Bandewa could have adopted a son while Virappa was alive who would have come into the family as a co-parcener. The position now that Basava has adopted a son who takes the place of Virappa may be regarded as at least analogous. On the other hand, Mr. Parulekar for the respondent argues that it is not sufficient to say that the defendant succeeded Virappa and divested the estate of his mother, for at any rate the death of Virappa as the last surviving co-parcener put an end to the connection between the two branches of the family. After that no person introduced by adoption into Yellappa's branch could have any claim to the property which though formerly joint has passed completely to those who can base a claim on their connection with the last surviving co-parcener. That also is a possible view. There are several ways in which the divesting of the mother's estate may be explained. See Mayne's Hindu Law, p. 266, para. 297, Sastri's Hindu Law, p. 277. Mr. Murdeshwar's postulate of a continuance of a co-parcenary bond embracing both branches of the family does not appear to be essential. The principal difficulty in the appellants' way is however that both in Chandra v. Gojarabai (5), which was affirmed in Balu Sakharan v. Lahoo Sambhaji (1), and in the latter case also the estate of the last surviving co-parcener passed in the first instance to his widow, and it was held nevertheless that the co-parcenary terminated on his death. The Full Bench case went further and said that it could not afterwards be revived. Under the circumstances it seems to be impossible to say that Mr. Murdeshwar has been successful in distinguishing these cases. The most that can be said is that the Court had not actually before it the case of an adoption by the widow or mother of the last surviving co-parcener.

Moreover this very point has been dealt, with in two unreported cases, Yellappa gouda v. Basangouda, First Appeal No. 182 of 1935, decided on March 3, 1938 by Ragnekar and N. J. Wadia, JJ. and Ramarao Bindurao Desai v. Annarao Bapurao, First Appeal No. 247 of 1936, decided on September 21, 1938 by N. J. Wadia and Norman, JJ. In those cases no doubt it was the widow of a last surviving co-parcener and not his mother who had made an adoption, but it is not suggested that that makes any difference. It was held in both cases that the claim of a son adopted by the widow of another co-parcener was barred by the ruling in Balu Sakharan v. Lahoo Sambhaji (1). It does not appear from the judgments whether the case for the claimants was argued on quite the same lines as in the present case, but it does appear that the construction which this Court placed on the Full Bench ruling would have negated the argument in any case. We cannot distinguish these cases and we are not at all disposed to refer the matter to a Full Bench. The law of adoption is in a somewhat uncertain condition at present and is likely to remain so until the highest tribunal determines the real effect of the principles enunciated in Amarendraman Singh v. Sanatan Singh (6), upon the law of devolution of property. In the meantime, it seems desirable that this Court should maintain consistency as far as possible. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs.

(5) 14 B 463.

Criminal Revision No. 5 of 1940

February 8, 1940

VARMA AND MEREDITH, JJ.

NATHU CHAUDHURY

AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 239 (d), 537—Joint trial—Tests—Common object—Infringement of s. 239 (d)—Defect, if curable.

The question of joinder and misjoinder depends on the form of the accusation made rather than on the facts actually proved at the trial. The nature of the charge is really the crucial point. Before a joint trial can be held to be permissible or justifiable it must be established that each one of the accused was so connected with the other accused that the act done by one of them may be said to have been done conjointly with the other. 174 Ind. Cas. 1 (1), relied on.

The fact that the accused are all servants of the same master and so connected with the same person, does not necessarily involve connection with each other for the purposes of the offences charged. Similarly common purpose would not be enough to make offences part of the same transaction, if the offenders act independently. Where the accusation does not involve anything from which it could be said that the accused are charged with different offences as forming part of the same transaction joint trial cannot be held.

The infringement of the provisions of s. 239 (d), would, if made out, constitute an illegality as distinguished from an irregularity, so that the conviction would require to be quashed; and that s. 537 can be of no avail to remedy the defect. 174 Ind. Cas. 1 (1), relied on.

Cr. R. against an order of the Sessions Judge, Darbhanga, dated December 12, 1939.

Sir Sultan Ahmad and Mr. Hainarayan Prasad, for the Petitioners.

The Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Meredith, J.—The four petitioners have been convicted under s. 506 of the I. P. C. and have been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year each. Their appeal has been dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge.

The facts of the case are that the motor car of a certain Magistrate was damaged by the elephant of a rich zamindar, Janki Raman Misser, and a case was thereafter run against the zamindar, as master of the elephant, under s. 209 of the I. P. C. This case was eventually withdrawn after a transfer to another district, an apology having been made for the incident.

On July 10, 1939, while the case was pending, ten witnesses came to the Court at Laheriasarai to be examined, and the same day a joint petition was filed by all ten before the Sub-Divisional Officer in the following terms:—

"The facts for submission are that we are witnesses in the case Emperor v. Janki Raman Misser. One Nathu Chaudhury, servant of Janki Raman Misser, was saying in presence of Sheikh Tabarak of village Rajkha, Jumrati of village Anar, Bisu Mistry, Badri Mistry, Khubi Sahu of village Rajkha, Gulzar of village Anar and Dahaur Chaukidar of village Rajkha and Nathu Mallah, that I will also be killed in the same way as Mahendra Singh, clerk of Anar Factory, was killed and that he was the person who got him killed. Rijhan Misser, Rajnarain Singh and Satruhan Singh and others, his servants are always threatening us and asking us not to depose in the case. It is therefore, prayed before your honour that investigation be made so that I may not be put in danger of my life. The names of witnesses and their thumb marks are on the reverse."

This petition was sent to the Police with instructions to treat it as a First Information. It will be observed that in the petition the only specific charge made is of criminal intimidation on July 24, 1939, against one person, Nathu Chaudhury, the petitioner No. 1. The Police, however, eventually submitted charge-sheet against all four petitioners—against Nathu Chaudhury and Rijhan Misser for criminal intimidation at Laheriasarai on the 24th, and against the other two petitioners, Rajnarain Singh and Satruhan Singh, for a different incident, namely, criminal intimidation of the witnesses said to have taken place on July 10, at Anar Kothi, the village of the zamin-dar.

The charge framed, upon which the petitioners were convicted was as follows:

"That you Rajnarain Singh and Satruhan Singh on or about July 10, 1939, and you Nathu Chaudhury and Rijhan Misser on July 24, 1939, at Anar Kothi and Laheriasarai, respectively, committed criminal intimidation by threatening Madhusudan Lal Das, Sheikh Tabarak and others with injury to his person with intent to cause alarm to the said Madhusudan Lal Das and others and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 506 of the I. P. C."

The evidence led in Court, which consisted only of the testimony of five of the persons who had joined in the petition, and of the investigating Sub-Inspector, was to the effect that on July 10 the witnesses had met together to come to Court on foot at a place near the elephants' stable of Janki Raman Misser. Rajnarain Singh and Satruhan Singh (the petitioners Nos. 3 and 4), servants of Janki Raman Misser, tried to persuade the witnesses not to depose for the Crown, and finally, threatened them that they would be killed as a certain Mahender Prasad had been killed. On July 10 the case was adjourned without hearing. The next date fixed was July 24, and the evidence was that on that date the other two petitioners, Nathu Chaudhury and Rijhan, who are also servants of Janki Raman Misser, met the witnesses in the Court compound and again asked them not to depose. Finally, they threatened the witnesses that they would be murdered like Mahender Prasad. In the afternoon, when the witnesses had been examined, they again met Rijhan and Nathu in the Court compound, who told them that they should now prepare themselves to die as Mahender Prasad had died. On this the witnesses filed their joint petition, to which I have already referred.

The principal point taken for the petitioners is that the charge and the joint trial of all the petitioners upon that charge were illegal, as the occurrences were quite separate and were not part of the same transaction. This point was taken in the lower Appellate Court; but the learned Judge was of opinion that the case was covered by s. 239 (d) of the Criminal P. C. which provides that persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction may be charged and tried together.

In my opinion, the case was not one which falls within the terms of s. 239 (d) and the joint trial of the petitioners was, therefore, illegal. There are many rulings upon the question of the exact significance of s. 239 (d); but it is necessary to refer only to one—the Privy Council case, Babulal Chaukhani v. Emperor (1). It is of course well-settled that the infringement of the provisions of s. 239 (d) would, if made out, constitute an illegality as distinguished from an irregularity, so that the conviction would require to be quashed, and that s. 537 can be of no avail to remedy the defect. That has been reiterated in the ruling which I have just referred to. And we get it also from this ruling of the Privy Council, that the question of joinder and misjoinder depends on the form of the accusation made rather than on the facts actually proved at the trial. This being so, the nature of the charge is really the crucial point. The learned Judge in the Appellate Court below has observed, and rightly observed, that the phrase “same transaction”, used in s. 239 (d), suggests in particular continuity of action and purpose. But can it be said, having regard to the terms of the charge which I have quoted, that the accusation in the present case makes out any continuity of action and purpose? Can it be said that the petitioners have all been charged in this charge with offences of criminal intimidation committed as part of the same transaction? In my view it certainly cannot. There is nothing at all in the charge from which it can be said that the alleged incidents of July 10 and of July 24 form part of the same transaction. The learned Judge has commented on the fact that all the petitioners are servants of the same master. That may be; but the fact that they are all servants of the same master and so connected with the same person, does not necessarily involve connection with each other for the purposes of the offences charged. It seems to me perfectly possible that the petitioners’ master, who is a big zamindar, might be above conduct of this sort, while his underlings through excess of zeal on his behalf might independently resort to action of this kind at different places on different occasions. Such acts would certainly not be part of the same transaction. It has been pointed out that there is no evidence at all in the case of any conspiracy between the petitioners for the purpose of intimidation, nor was there any charge of conspiracy. It has been urged for the Crown that in matters like this each case must depend upon its own facts, and whether offences are or are not part of the same transaction is more a question of fact than of law. We must, however, as I have said, depend more on the nature of the accusation than on the facts proved; and the accusation in the present case does not involve anything from which it could be said that the accused are charged with different offences as forming part of the same transaction. No doubt it may be possible to infer a common purpose in the various acts alleged; but common purpose would not be enough to make offences part of the same transaction, if the offenders act independently. The petitioners in the present case might all be under the orders of the same master, but that in itself would not justify the inference that they were in conspiracy with each other.

In my view this is a clear case of misjoinder, and the joint trial of the petitioners Nos. 1 and 2 with the petitioners Nos. 3 and 4 was illegal and involved, moreover, a clear possibility of prejudice. This being so, the convictions and sentences must be set aside.

There remains the question whether a re-trial should be ordered. Our attention has been drawn to the harassment which the petitioners have undergone, to the long period that has elapsed, to the fact that the sole evidence is that of five of the complainants, even though the offence is said to have taken place actually in the Court compound. These are circumstances to which we must attach great weight. But we must also attach weight to the fact that the petitioner Nathuni at least was charged then and there without any delay, and that both the Courts below were very favourably impressed by the evidence of

I have already noticed the fact that the petition of complaint makes a specific charge only for the incident of July 24 and only against the petitioner Nathu Chaudhury. This being so, I am of opinion that a re-trial of the other three petitioners, against whom nothing specific was alleged in the complaint, is not necessary or desirable; but, in the case of the petitioner Nathu Chaudhury there was an accusation then and there, and there was the evidence of five witnesses upon which I do not desire to express any personal opinion, but with which, as I have said, the Courts below were much impressed. This being so, unless the Crown does not consider it necessary to proceed against him, Nathu Chaudhury, should be re-tried for the alleged offence of July 24.

In the result, therefore, I would set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that the petitioners Rijban Misser, Rajnarain Singh and Satruhan Singh be acquitted and discharged from their bail and that the petitioner Nathu Chaudhury be re-tried unless the executive authorities do not desire to proceed against him.

Varma J.—I agree.

I should like to say a few words on the question of misjoinder of charges and misjoinder of trial. The lower Appellate Court has come to the conclusion that the offences of July 10, 1939, and July 24, 1939, were committed in the course of the same transaction although the time and the place of occurrence were different. An argument was advanced in the Court below that the accused may have acted independently in an excess of zeal for the cause of their master. But the learned Judge says—

"In my opinion the circumstances definitely indicate otherwise. The witnesses were approached on two successive dates of hearing, and twice on the second day, by the servants on the same man in respect of the same case. These servants had no personal interest in the verdict in that case. The conclusion is obvious that either their master or some connection of his was behind them in an attempt to intimidate the witnesses. The difference of dates and of place is immaterial."

When the learned Judge says that the conclusion was obvious that either their master or some connection of his was behind them in an attempt to intimidate the witnesses, he may be perfectly right. Each of these accused may have been influenced by the master or some person connected with the master; but before a joint trial can be held to be permissible or justifiable it must be established that each one of the accused was so connected with the other accused that the act done by one of them may be said to have been done conjointly with the others. It is this aspect of the law which has been dealt with in the decision of the Privy Council in Babulal Chaukhani v. Emperor (1). Evidently the learned Judge was thinking that perhaps a case of conspiracy was made out; but as there was no charge of conspiracy in this case the joint trial must be held to be illegal.

Order accordingly.

Appeals Nos. 255 and 256 of 1937

August 3, 1939

NASIM ALI AND NARSING RAU, JJ.

SECRETARY OF STATE—APPELLANT

versus

SHYAMAPADA BANERJEE—

RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), ss. 18, 21, 20—Reference only on question of amount of compensation—Question of title to land acquired, relevancy—Reference to tribunal on amount of compensation—Declaration that claimant K was entitled to enhanced compensation based on compromise between claimants—Secretary of State held necessary party.

The jurisdiction of the Court on a reference by the Collector is a special jurisdiction. If the only objection is to the amount of compensation, that alone is the matter referred to, and the Court has no power to determine or consider anything beyond what is referred. The question of title to the land acquired is, therefore, not relevant in a reference on the question of the amount of compensation only. In an inquiry as to the amount of compensation only, the question is how much more the claimant is to get and how much more is the Govt. to pay. The only question is the additional amount of compensation. It does not involve the determination of question of the right to claim or the liability to pay any additional compensation. 121 Ind. Cas. 536 (1), relied on.

On a reference by Collector as to the amount of compensation, the tribunal made a declaration that the claimant K was entitled to enhanced amount of compensation, on the basis of settlements between the claimants to the property. The terms of these settlements were embodied in two petitions of compromise filed before tribunal. By these settlements the compensation awarded by the Collector was divided between K and the other claimants and K was given the right to get the excess amount of compensation, if any, to be awarded by the tribunal. There were certain admissions about K's or his representative's title to the lands acquired by the other claimants in these petitions of compromise:

Held, that the Secretary of State for India was not only a proper party but was a necessary party as he was the only person interested in opposing K's claim to enhanced compensation.

Messrs. Bireswar Bagchi and Abdul Bari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Surendra Madhab Mullick, R. N. Ray and Nagendra Kumar Dutt, for the Respondent.

Nasim Ali, J.—Premises Nos. 13/1 and 13/3 Lake Road were acquired in connexion with Scheme No. 33, Southern Avenue Section by declaration No. 3481-L. A., dated March 7, 1932, which was published in the Calcutta Gazette on March 10, 1932. Five persons including one Kalipada Banerjee claimed interest in No. 13/1 Lake Road. He and a minor named Sunil Kumar Chatterjee through his guardian claimed interest in the other premises, namely 13/3, Lake Road. The Collector gave his award under s. 11, Land Acquisition Act, on August 21, 1933, in respect of premises No. 13/1. He found the area to be 2 cottas, 9 chittacks and 10 square feet which he valued at the rate of Rs. 800 per cotta. He further found that out of the five claimants only two, namely, Tara Sundari Dasi and Aswini Kumar Mukherjee, were entitled to compensation. Of these two persons in whose favour the award was made by the Collector only Tara Sundari Dasi accepted the award. The Collector published his award in respect of premises No. 13/3 Lake Road on June 17, 1933. He found the area to be 3 cottas, 9 chittacks, 9 square feet and valued it at the rate of Rs. 1,350 per cotta. He found that the minor Sunil Kumar Chatterjee was alone entitled to get the whole compensation. The award was accepted by the guardian of the minor on behalf of the minor, Kalipada Banerjee then applied to the Collector under s. 18, Land Acquisition Act, for reference to the tribunal for determination by the tribunal of his objections to the two awards. His grounds of objection to both the awards so far as they are relevant for the purposes of the present appeals were: (1) to the amount of compensation and (2) to the person to whom the compensation is payable. The Collector accordingly made two references to the tribunal. The reference in respect of premises No. 13/1 Lake Road was registered in the tribunal as Valuation Case No. 162 of 1933, while the reference in respect of the other premises was registered as Valuation Case No. 108 of 1933. Kalipada died during the pendency of the proceedings before the tribunal and the present respondent as executor to his estate was substituted in his place.

On April 23, 1937, the tribunal arrived at the following conclusions: (1) that the market value of premises No. 13/1 Lake Road is Rs. 918-8-0 per cotta and that of premises No. 13/3 Lake Road is Rs. 1,550 per cotta and, consequently, the award of the Collector in respect of premises No. 13/1 Lake Road should be enhanced by Rs. 351-1-6 while the other award of the Collector should be enhanced by Rs. 822-4-0; and (2) that the respondent is entitled to receive enhanced amounts in the two cases. The Province of Bengal appeals to this Court against this decision with a certificate from the President of the tribunal under s. 3 (1) (b) (i), Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act, 1911, that the case is a fit one for appeal to this Court. First Appeal No. 255 of 1937 arises out of Valuation Case No. 108 of 1933 and First Appeal No. 256 of 1937 arises out of Valuation Case No. 162 of 1933.

The first contention of the appellant is that the decision of the tribunal on the amount of compensation is bad in law inasmuch as the tribunal has not come to any finding on the issue raised by the appellant, namely, whether Kalipada could maintain the valuation references, which involves the question whether Kalipada had any title to the lands acquired. In other words, the contention is that the issue about the title of Kalipada is germane to the question of the amount of compensation. I am unable to accept this contention. The jurisdiction of the Court on a reference by the Collector is a special jurisdiction. If the only objection is to the amount of compensation, that alone is the matter referred to, and the Court has no power to determine or consider anything beyond what is referred: see Pramatha Nath v. Secretary of State (1). The question of title to the land acquired is therefore not relevant in a reference on the question of the amount of compensation only. Much reliance was placed by the appellant upon s. 21,

Land Acquisition Act, which provides:

"The scope of the inquiry in every such proceeding shall be restricted to a consideration of the interest of the persons affected by the objection."

The dictionary meaning of the word "affect" is to produce material effect. In an inquiry as to the amount of compensation only the question is how much more the claimant is to get and how much more is the Govt. to pay. The only question is the additional amount of compensation. It does not involve the determination of question of the right to claim or the liability to pay any additional compensation. I therefore overrule this contention. The second contention of the appellant is that the decision of the tribunal on the amount of compensation is bad in law inasmuch as it is based on the award of the tribunal on the market value of No. 13/1 Lake Road which has been set aside by this Court in appeal. There is no material before us to show that this award has been set aside by this Court. This contention therefore fails. I therefore affirm the decision of the tribunal on the question of the amount of compensation.

The next contention of the appellant is that the tribunal was wrong in declaring that the respondent is entitled to receive the enhanced amounts, namely, Rs. 822-4-0 and Rs. 351-1-6 from the appellant. The tribunal has made the declaration on the basis of settlements between the claimants of this property. The terms of these settlements are embodied in two petitions of compromise filed before tribunal. By these settlements the compensation awarded by the Collector was divided between Kalipada and the other claimants and Kalipada was given the right to get the excess amount of compensation, if any, to be awarded by the tribunal. There are certain admissions about Kalipada's or his representative's title to the lands acquired by the other claimants in these petitions of compromise. The President sitting alone recorded the terms so far as the apportionment of the compensation awarded by the Collector is concerned. The terms of compromise so far as they relate to the right of Kalipada or the respondent to get the enhanced amounts were not recorded by him. He also did not declare the title of Kalipada or the respondent to the lands acquired on the basis of the admissions contained in the petitions of compromise. The tribunal therefore declared the right of the respondent to the enhanced amounts not on any previous decision on the question by the President (apparently he was authorized to decide the question by virtue of s. 77, Calcutta Improvement Tribunal Act) but on the petitions of compromise filed by the claimants before the President. It is a decision relating to objections referred by the Collector to the tribunal as regards persons to whom the compensation is payable. The tribunal therefore has given this decision on the footing that the references so far as they related to the question as to whom enhanced amounts were payable, remained undisposed of by the President sitting alone.

The point for determination therefore is whether this decision of the tribunal is wrong. The contention of the appellant is that the decision of the tribunal on this point is wrong and should be set aside inasmuch as (1) the tribunal has refused to take into consideration the evidence adduced by the appellant; (2) that the petitions of compromise on which the decision is based are no evidence against the appellant; and (3) that in any view of the case the petitions of compromise on which the tribunal have relied to declare the respondent's title to the enhanced amounts do not establish the respondent's title. These points involve the question whether the appellant is a necessary party in the proceeding relating to the determination of the question about the claimants' title to the enhanced amounts. The claimants other than Kalipada are not entitled to claim the enhanced amounts as they accepted the award of the Collector as to the amount of compensation and did not apply for reference on this ground. If the respondent claims the enhanced amounts on the basis of any title derived from the other claimants by the compromise after the latter had accepted the awards, he is not in a better position and cannot claim them. If his claim to the enhanced amounts is based upon Kalipada's title to the lands acquired the tribunal will have to determine that claim.

The question then is in whose presence this determination is to be made. The only person who will be affected by this determination is the appellant because he will have to pay the enhanced amounts. In the determination of this question in view of the facts of the present case the persons interested are the respondent who claims the money and the appellant against whom the money is claimed. The appellant is the only person interested in opposing the respondent's claim. In the events that have happened in this case the appellant is not only a proper party but is also a necessary party. There is nothing in s. 20, Land Acquisition Act which militates against this view. If the dispute about the title of the property is decided in the presence of the appellant it would not in any way enlarge the scope of the inquiry on the basis of the references. The tribunal has declared the respondent's title to the enhanced amount on the basis of the two petitions of compromise to which the appellant is not a party and which the appellant characterizes as illegal and void under the provisions of s. 23, Contract Act. The fraud alleged by the appellant is that the respondent has no title and that admissions about the respondent's title were made in the petition of compromise in order to saddle the appellant with the liability to pay additional compensation which the claimants who are the real owners precluded themselves by their conduct from claiming. From whatever point of view the matter be looked at it is clear that the respondent is bound to prove his right to claim enhanced amount in the presence of the appellant.

The result therefore is that the decision of the tribunal, so far as it relates to the amount of compensation, is affirmed. The decision of the tribunal, so far as it declared that the respondent is entitled to get enhanced amounts from the appellant, is set aside and the cases are sent back to the tribunal. The tribunal is directed to determine the question as to whom the enhanced amounts are payable in the presence of the appellants. The appellant and the respondent and the other persons who were parties to the reference will be entitled to adduce such evidence in support of their respective cases as they may choose to adduce before the tribunal. The tribunal is directed to take that evidence into consideration and to dispose of the question as to whom the enhanced amounts are payable according to law. Costs in these two appeals will abide the result, the hearing-fee for the two appeals being assessed at 10 gold mohurs.

RAMCHANDRA DEOYYA

YELAMI DHOKI—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT

Promissory note—Insufficiently stamped—Claim for debt, if can be based on separate contemporaneous agreement—Such note, whether operates as acknowledgment.

Where a promissory note evidencing debt is invalid, not being sufficiently stamped, the creditor can base his claim on the contemporaneous oral agreement between the parties and such agreement can be proved. 134 Ind. Cas. 283 (2), 137 Ind. Cas. 33 (3) and 144 Ind. Cas. 745 (4), relied on. Thaji Beebi v. Tirumalaiappa Pillai (5), distinguished.

An insufficiently stamped promissory note cannot operate as an acknowledgment or be used for any purpose whatever.

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Yeotmal, dated July 15, 1937.

Mr. T. L. Sheole, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the defendant, the plaintiff having succeeded in both the Courts below. The suit was for a sum due which had been lent to the defendant. It is not disputed that the amount had been lent and the money received, and a plea which was raised that old accounts should be opened was later withdrawn and the sum claimed not disputed. The only ground on which the suit was resisted was that the claim was barred by limitation. Transactions have been going on between the parties for some time, and it is admitted that in December 1930 and June 1931 promissory notes were executed and also some cash passed. A further promissory note was executed on January 19, 1933. This, however, was executed on an insufficient stamp, and the plaint was not filed until January 13, 1936. The plaint stated that consequently the promissory note executed in January 1933 would not be a valid document as a promissory note, but the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to claim the amount found due on that date independent of the promissory note. The defendant insisted that the claim was time-barred as it was based on the promissory notes of 1930 and 1931 and there was no direct acknowledgment within that time. The plaintiff then asked to be allowed to amend the plaint by pleading explicitly his cause of action apart from the promissory note itself. This application was put in on April 8, 1936, more than three years after the infructuous promissory note and indeed more than three years after the contemporaneous agreement on which the plaintiff relied. The trial Court allowed the amendment subject to an objection on the question of limitation by the other side. The plaint was not actually amended, but nevertheless judgment was given in the plaintiff's favour by the same Judge who had recorded the pleadings and was in charge throughout, and it is clear therefore that the trial Court decided that the application for amendment was not barred by limitation. In addition to this question there were two other points for consideration before the trial Court. One was whether the insufficiently stamped promissory note could be used as an acknowledgment of liability for the debt. This was held in the negative on the authority of Govinda v. Haribhau (1). The other point, which was whether a separate contemporaneous agreement to pay could be proved despite the fact of the existence of a document, was held in the plaintiff's favour. In appeal no question was raised as to the correctness of the decision in the Court below that the infructuous promissory note could not operate as an acknowledgment. On the other points the lower Appellate Court agreed with the trial Court except that it did not consider the trial Court correct in stating that the claim to sue on an independent promise could be seen in para. 1 of the plaint, but held that the rule that the promise could be proved independently on failure of the operation of the promissory note was so well-known that it was unnecessary to cite authorities.

In second appeal a good deal of time has been taken up by an attack by the learned Counsel for the appellant on the proposition that an invalid promissory note could be used as an acknowledgment, if sufficiently stamped for that purpose. The findings of both the Courts below were in the appellant's favour on this point, and I am at a loss to understand why the learned Counsel should have supported them. This has naturally invoked reference to rulings to the contrary on behalf of the respondent. I shall not refer to this question as it is not necessary for a decision of the appeal, which can be decided on exactly the same grounds as in the lower Appellate Court where it was held tacitly that such document could not operate as an acknowledgment or be used for any purpose whatever. It is contended on the next point that the decision of the Courts below has left it open to this Court to decide the question whether the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation or no by reason of the late date of the amendment. I am perfectly satisfied that the suit is within time and that the plaint very clearly embodies the alternative cause of action apart from the infructuous promissory note itself. I agree with the lower Appellate Court that this is not to be found in para. 1 of the plaint, but to my mind it is very clearly apparent in para. 2, of which the first sentence runs:

"The pro-note executed by the defendant on January 19, 1933 not being sufficiently stamped is not a valid document as a promissory note, but the plaintiff can claim the amount found due on that date independently of the promissory note due on the previous promissory notes. And the promissory note can be used as an acknowledgment of debt due on that date."

To my mind this is perfectly clear, and the subsequent amendment is no more than a particular amplification of a claim already made. That the agreement existed and has been proved must be taken as a finding of fact, and I agree with the lower Appellate Court that the denial of a separate oral agreement by the defendant in an oral statement had reference only to the supposition that the agreement referred to was not contemporaneous with the execution of the promissory note, and when it was pleaded, again in oral statements, that they were contemporaneous, there was a tacit admission of its existence by a pleading that it was inadmissible as the contract was in writing. I may add that it would indeed be surprising if the plaintiff, admitting from the first that the promissory note was not valid as such, should not have indicated in his plaint that he was entitled to sue on the basis of a contemporaneous agreement to repay as well as urging the point that the promissory note might be admissible to prove an acknowledgment.

That such a contemporaneous agreement, if established, can be proved is beyond dispute and is the view which has always been taken in this Court. The only answer that has been afforded to the authorities quoted is that they do not help the plaintiff. The authorities are, to my mind, very definitely and decidedly in point. These are Mohan v. Ramji (2), Gulabgir v. Nathmal (3) where all the earlier authorities are collected, and the decision of a Divisional Bench in Raja Lal Bahadur Singh v. Sheikh Ghulam Yasin (4). No decision in this Court to the contrary has been cited; and indeed the only case which appears to go contrary to the principle on which these decisions are based appears to be Thaji Beebi v. Tirumalaiappa Pillai (5) which is not strictly in point as the matter there in question was the permissibility of oral evidence to prove a mortgage which had been executed under an unstamped instrument.

The decision in the Courts below is correct and the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

ASA RAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

Co-sharer—One of two co-sharers of ex-proprietary tenancy accepting whole of ex-proprietary rent in lieu of profits—Whether estopped from subsequently claiming profits.

Where in a suit for arrears of rent on the ex-proprietary holding, one of two co-sharers of the khewat number, accepts the whole of the ex-proprietary rent from the other co-sharers who is the ex-proprietary tenant in lieu of his share of the profits, he is estopped from subsequently claiming a share of profits in the remaining portion of the sir land.

S. A. from the decision of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated October 14, 1936.

Mr. Jagnandan Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Mukerji, for the Respondent.

Bennet, J.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff who has been granted a decree for profits by the Revenue Court and who appealed in regard to a claim of his for a share of the profits of the sir land and the learned District Judge dismissed that appeal. The circumstances are that in a particular khewat number the defendant Asa

Ram was the sole owner and he had 32 bighas of sir in his possession. He executed a sale-deed for one-sixth share of the zamindari rights in this khewat number to the plaintiff. Proceedings were taken under s. 36, Land Revenue Act, for assessing the rent on the ex-proprietary holding. For the years in suit the plaintiff brought a suit for arrears of ex-proprietary rent against defendant. In that suit the plaintiff claimed the whole of the ex-proprietary rent. Actually, in accordance with the various rulings of this Court the plaintiff was only entitled to one-sixth of the ex-proprietary rent because in accordance with those rulings the ex-proprietary tenant is not the ex-proprietary tenant merely of the vendee but of the whole coparcenary body. Apparently in the rent suit the parties each accepted the proposition that this rule of law which is intended for general purposes would not apply in this special case. No doubt this was more convenient for the purpose because there are only two co-sharers in the khewat number, the plaintiff and the defendant, and there would be no point in the defendant paying a share of ex-proprietary rent to himself. Therefore it was doubtless intended that he should pay the whole of his ex-proprietary rent to the plaintiff and that the plaintiff would accept this as his share of the profits of that portion of the khewat number which had been originally represented by 32 bighas of sir. Having obtained a decree for the whole amount of the ex-proprietary rent the plaintiff now claims in appeal and in second appeal that he should receive one-sixth share of the remaining amount of the 32 bighas which is represented by approximately 26 bighas of sir. If we acceded to his request this would mean that he would obtain a larger share of the profits of the khewat number than is equitable; that is, he is entitled to one-sixth share of the total profits and if his claims were allowed he would receive appreciably more as he has already obtained the whole instead of one-sixth of the ex-proprietary rent.

Some rulings were referred to in regard to cases where a co-sharer had collected more than this share of the ex-proprietary rent of a tenant, but those cases were different from the present case, because in this case the ex-proprietary tenant was not a co-sharer. In the present case the ex-proprietary tenant is not only a co-sharer but he is the sole remaining co-sharer and the sole defendant in the present case. The decree in the rent suit therefore was a decree between the present parties. Some point is raised for appellant that in that decree the defendant was sued in his capacity of a tenant and not in his capacity of a co-sharer. We do not think that makes any difference. We may also note that under s. 206 (4), Tenancy Act, it was only because the defendant had the capacity of a co-sharer and also of an ex-proprietary tenant that the plaintiff alone was entitled to sue for arrears of rent in the Revenue Court. It appears to us that the plaintiff is estopped by s. 115, Evi. Act, from altering the position which he took up in the Revenue Court in regard to the profits for the years in suit in that suit, and he claimed and obtained the whole of the sir rent from the defendant. Having obtained the decree on the theory that he alone was entitled to the whole of the ex-proprietary rent we cannot now allow him to change the allegations that he made in that suit. We therefore consider that we must hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to any share of the remainder of the original 32 bighas sir. Accordingly we dismiss this appeal with costs.

MRS. SARAB SAUL SOFAER—APPELLANT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 52—Property of deceased in hands of his widow as executrix and not in her personal capacity—If can be attached in execution of decree against deceased—Decree-holder, whether must file administrative suit.

Where the widow of the deceased has property of her husband in her hands as executrix and not in her personal capacity, the property may be attached in execution of a decree against the deceased. A decree-holder has rights which he may work out in execution proceedings, and the cumbrous method of filing an administration suit when he desires to attach property prima facie in the hands of the judgment-debtor as such may not appeal to him. He may not therefore file an administrative suit.

F. A. against the orders of the High Court, in Civil Execution Cases Nos. 148 and 305 of 1937, dated March 1, 1939.

Messrs. R. Clark and C. K. Ray, for the Appellant.

Mr. E. C. N. Foucar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is brought against a decree upon the Original Side of this Court holding that a house known as Murrayfields in Rangoon was attachable in execution proceedings, as forming part of the estate of the late Saul Sofaer who died in 1933, at the instance of a creditor who had obtained a decree against his widow, the present appellant, as his executrix. The short question was whether Murrayfields was part of the estate of the deceased. Mrs. Sofaer, the appellant, says it is not part of his estate now, although at the time of his death it belonged to him subject to a mortgage in favour of the Chartered Bank of India for Rs. 40,000. She called two valuers who said (and their evidence was uncontradicted) that it was worth from Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 35,000 only; and she says she sold Murrayfields for Rs. 33,000 and with a further Rs. 7,000 of her own money, she paid off the Bank. It is true that the Bank received these sums. Murrayfields does not belong to the purchaser, Mr. Meyer, any more. It belongs to Mrs. Sofaer, so she says, in her personal capacity, but she declares she has "duly applied such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into her possession" within the meaning of s. 52, Civil P. C. It does not remain any longer in the possession of the judgment-debtor, that is, in her possession as executrix; but it is in her personal possession. When she sold it to Mr. Meyer there was a covenant for re-purchase by her in her personal capacity. She says that it is no part of her husband's estate but is her own property, because she re-purchased it from Mr. Meyer and because the Chartered Bank was paid off.

Now the simple question is whether this is true. Was the bank paid off out of the proceeds of the sale of Murrayfields by her as executrix? And to decide this it is necessary to see what account is given by her. She says she sold Murrayfields to Mr. Meyer for Rs. 33,000. She had to raise Rs. 20,000 by mortgaging the property to a Mr. Jamnadas and he paid altogether Rs. 13,000 out of his own pocket in addition. Rupees 2,000 was paid by way of earnest, and the remainder was drawn by him from his account with the Imperial Bank, and the cheque for Rs. 11,000 is produced, showing that he did draw such a sum just prior to the date. Some criticism has been directed to the estate of Mr. Meyer's bank account and it has been said that the operations upon it do not lend conviction to the assurance that he really paid this money as part of a genuine transaction with Mrs. Sofaer:

In Weir v. McVicar & Co. (5) it was held: "Where in an action against a firm, a person who has been served as a partner enters an appearance under protest, denying the partnership, under O. XLVIII (a), r. 7, such person cannot also deny the liability of the firm, and therefore the Court has no jurisdiction to direct an issue to try the question of partnership before the trial of the action."

In International Caoutchouc Compagnie v. Mehta & Co. (6), Buckland, J. held that:

"In a suit against a firm a person who, being served as a partner, enters appearance under protest denying that he is a partner in accordance with the provisions of O. XXX, r. 8, Civil P. O., is not entitled to file a written statement on his own behalf denying that he is a partner."

Reliance was placed by the learned Judge on the decisions in Ellis v. Wadeson (3) and Weir v. McVicar & Co. (5) and the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Cherry v. Pohoomal Bros. (7). Mr. Lulla next proceeded to deal with the application of O. XXXVII, Civil P. O., on the provisions with regard to suits against firms in O. XXX, Civil P. O. He contended that the provisions of the Summary Chapter do not in fact affect the provisions of O. XXX dealing with suits against firms. If in a suit against a firm under O. XXXVII leave to defend was refused the decree would be against the firm. If several partners were served and leave to defend was refused to them all the only decree that could be passed would be one against the firm. When the only defence which it was open to partners served in a suit against a firm was a defence by the firm against the action, it would be seldom that leave could be granted to one and refused to another. But even if such were the case no decree could be passed against the individual partner to whom leave had been refused. The decree after the plaintiff had beaten down all defences would still be a decree against the firm. An individual served as a partner denying that he was a partner could not be heard and could not be given leave to defend, the question of whether he was or was not a partner being one to be determined in execution proceedings under O. XXI, r. 50, Civil P. O. The learned Advocate relied on the case in Cherry v. Pohoomal Bros. (7), where Macleod, O. J. states:

"A difficulty however arises where a suit is filed against a firm under the provisions of O. XXXVII, which differ from the provisions in the rules of the supreme Court relating to summary suit when the applicant took out the summons in this case (for leave to appear and defend, or, in the alternative for leave to appear and contest the allegation that he was a partner), it was probably necessary for him to apply for leave under O. XXXVII, r. 2, before his appearance under protest could be filed, and that could be the only question for the Judge to decide. The plaintiff might have allowed the appearance to be filed and then disregarded it as I have already pointed out or he might have asked the Judge to direct the trial of an issue as to whether the applicant was or was not a partner at the time the cause of action accrued. If that issue were decided against him, there would be no good service against the firm. If he succeeded then his summons would have been properly served and it would be only after that question had been settled that it would be possible to consider the question whether leave to defend should be granted. In any event the defendant entering an appearance under protest could not be entitled to ask for the trial of an issue whether he was a partner."

He also relied on the case in Satya Charan Dey v. Calcutta Hardware and Engineering Co. (8), where it was held that:

"Ordinarily in a suit against a firm each partner has a right to come in and defend. He has an individual right to come in and defend although he defends on behalf of the firm. Each partner may file separate defences, one admitting and the other denying the claim."

Amir Ali, J., has in this case relied on the case in Ellis v. Wadeson (3) and the case in International Caoutchouc Compagnie v. Mehta & Co. (6). It was held further by Amir Ali, J. in this case that:

"In a suit brought against a firm under O. XXXVII, Civil P. O., each partner has a right to apply for leave to defend."

Finally Mr. Lulla referred to the judgment of a single Judge of this Court in Chotumal Bulchand v. Alibhoy Mamooji (9) and to the case in Topanmal Somjimal v. Asudamal Fatehchand (10). He contended that the view of Taybji, A. J. O. in Chotumal Bulchand v. Alibhoy Mamooji (9) was erroneous. This would appear to be so from the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Cherry v. Pohoomal Bros. (7) and Topanmal Somjimal v. Asudamal Fatehchand (10) was of no assistance to the other side because the ground on which the High Court did not interfere with the decision of Rupchand, J. was that the appeal before them was a matter of form rather than of substance; a certain procedure had rightly or wrongly been adopted by the trial Court, but substantial justice had been done, and there was no reason to invalidate proceedings on what was more a matter of form than of substance.

In my opinion the legal position set out by the learned Advocate is fully supported by authority. But valuable though his arguments may be in a suit brought in proper form against a firm under the provisions of the Summary Chapter, and though these arguments will be a useful guide in suits of that nature, in the present case the arguments have in my opinion largely an academic interest, for, I am definitely of the view that this is not a suit brought against a firm simpliciter in the manner contemplated by O. XXX, Civil P. C. It is a suit brought against the firm and the individual partners in the firm of the National Tiles Co. Individual partners may be sued personally along with the firm as was held in Taylor v. Collier & Co. (11). I have sufficiently indicated my reasons for this view in the earlier part of this order. The plaint is not in the form prescribed in Appendix A to the Civil P. C. for a suit under the provisions of O. XXX, Civil P. C. The individual partners are mentioned and described in the heading of the plaint. The summonses issued were to the individual partners, as defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 individually the applications for leave to defend put in by Sugnichand, Fatehchand and Kanayalal were put in as applications by defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3. None of the arguments which have now been addressed to me were placed before me on December 8, or appear to have at all been in the minds of the learned Advocates who represent the defendants. I feel myself therefore justified in holding that this is not a suit filed against a firm only in the manner prescribed by O. XXX, Civil P. C. I have been referred to the case in Premchand Ganomal v. Newandmal Bherumal (12). All that was decided in that case was that where a suit is brought against a firm "by its managing partner" it cannot be said to be against the managing partner personally. The proposition of law may be perfectly sound and I have no quarrel with it. But a case very much more in point is that in Ajitsing Manibhai v. Grunning & Co. (13) where Macleod, C. J. indicates what is the proper heading of a plaint in a suit against a firm under the provisions of O. XXX, Civil P. C.

is: A B a firm carrying on business in partnership at"

The pleadings and procedure adopted in that case were very similar to what we have in the present case. A decree had been passed against the firm and against an individual partner. The High Court refused to interfere and merely pointed out the correct procedure to be adopted if a plaintiff seeks to sue partners in the name of their firm under the provisions of O. XXX, Civil P. C. In this view of the case I think that my order of December 8, 1938, needs reconsideration in one respect only. A decree has rightly been passed against Fatehchand Asudomal, and a similar decree must now be passed against Kanayalal Talreja. But as both Fatehchand and Kanayalal were admittedly partners in the firm of the National Tiles and the firm was a defendant in the suit and had been properly served, there must be a decree against the firm as well. I accordingly order that the decree passed against Fatehchand Asudomal and dated December 8, 1938 be amended so as to be a decree against the firm of the National Tiles and against Fatehchand Asudomal and Kanayalal Talreja bearing to-day's date. Sugnichand Dayaram has been granted leave to defend and there appears to be no reason to disturb the order in that regard.

Second Appeal No. 512 of 1936

ALAGIRI CHETTY AND ANOTHER—

versus

MUTHUSWAMI CHETTY AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 141— On death of widow, person having no title to property obtaining possession — Person subsequently becoming entitled to share in property along with reversioner— Character of possession, if changes — Suit by reversioner for possession more than 12 years from widow's death is barred — License — Nature of—If elapses with death of licensor.

Where on the death of a widow, a person who has no title to the property has been in possession thereof, the character of his possession is not changed by his subsequently becoming entitled to a share in the property along with the reversioner. His accrual of a right to a share in the property does not affect the previous possession and arrest the course of limitation under Art. 141. A suit therefore, by the reversioner for possession, brought more than 12 years after the death of the widow is barred under Art. 141. [p. 380, col. 2.]

[Case-law discussed.]

A license does not create an interest in the land as it is merely leave to do a thing lawfully which otherwise would be unlawful and it is thus a matter purely personal between the grantor and the grantee of the license. Such license must be held to have elapsed with the death of the licensor. 131 Ind. Cas. 175 (9), relied on. [p. 380, col. 1.]

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Salem, dated December 7, 1935.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellants.
Mr. K. Desikachari, for the Respondents.

Judgment—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought for partition and separate possession of the appellant's share of a certain house in Salem Town of which this appeal is concerned only with the eastern portion measuring 10 ankanams which is hereinafter referred to as the house. The facts so far as they are material for the determination of this appeal are briefly these: The house belonged to one Servaraya Chetti who died some time before 1891 leaving him surviving his widow Minakshi who died in that year. At the time of her death the nearest reversionary heir was one Alagiri Chetti who was the elder brother of Servaraya Chetti and the paternal grandfather of the present appellants. Alagiri Chetti died in 1900 leaving behind five sons of whom respondent No. 1 herein who has throughout been in occupation of the house is one.

The appellant's case was that Minakshi left a registered will by which she devised the house to the five sons of Alagiri Chetti in equal shares of which the appellants claim two shares in the right of their deceased fathers Annaswami and Kandaswami. As already stated, respondent No. 1 is one of the sons of Alagiri Chetti and respondents Nos. 2 to 8 are his descendants. The case of these respondents was that Servaraya Chetti having no issue brought up respondent No. 1's wife as his foster-daughter and made an oral gift of the house to her on the occasion of her marriage and that since then respondent No. 1 and his wife and their descendants have been in continuous possession and enjoyment of the house. Both the Courts below have found that the gift alleged by the respondents was not proved and that the will set up by the appellants was inoperative as Minakshi had no power under the Hindu Law to effect any testamentary disposition of her husband's property. These findings are clearly right and are not attacked in this appeal. But the trial Court further held that, notwithstanding the failure of their title under the will, the appellants, as representing two of the sons of Alagiri Chetti who succeeded to the house on the death of Minakshi, were entitled to two out of the five shares in which the house devolved on his sons at his death and that the long possession and enjoyment pleaded by respondent No. 1 and his descendants was of no avail to them, as it could not have been adverse to the appellants, respondent No. 1 having been a co-owner of the house with the other sons of Alagiri Chetti after the latter's death.

The learned Subordinate Judge disagreed with this view. He found that respondents Nos. 1 to 8 had been in possession of the house for over 40 years and that such possession and enjoyment existed even during the lifetime of Alagiri Chetti when respondent No. 1 had no title whatever to the property. He held that the fact that respondent No. 1 became a co-owner along with his brothers after Alagiri's death could not change the nature of his possession and that therefore the respondents had acquired title to the house by adverse possession and the appellants' suit was barred by limitation.

Mr. Sitarama Rao, the learned Counsel for the appellants, attacked this finding before me and contended that the gift put forward by the respondents having been found against their possession and enjoyment of the house till Minakshi's death must be deemed to have been only permissive, and the respondents not having shown that they were in possession after her death in assertion of a right inconsistent with that of Alagiri, the permissive character of their possession must be deemed to have continued throughout, with the result that there could be no acquisition of title by the respondents by adverse possession. I cannot accede to this contention. It is no doubt true that the lower Appellate Court based its decision upon the "adverse possession" of the respondents during the long period they had been occupying the house, thus presumably applying Art. 144, Lim. Act, to the facts of this case; but the proper Article applicable is clearly Art. 141 and not Art. 144, and therefore it seems to me, no question of adverse possession really arises. Minakshi having died in 1891 and there being nothing to show that Alagiri Chetti who was then entitled to succeed to the property ever took possession or assumed any kind of dominion or control of the house or permitted respondent No. 1 and his descendants to continue in occupation thereof, time commenced to run in 1891 under Art. 141, and a suit brought by Alagiri or his heirs more than 12 years thereafter would stand barred and their title would, by the operation of s. 23 of the Act, be extinguished. Mr. Sitarama Rao indeed conceded at a later stage of his argument, that the proper Article applicable was Art. 141 and that no question of adverse possession really arose. But he somewhat changed his ground and contended that once the gift put forward by the respondents was found against, they must be regarded as having lived in the house as mere guests, at any rate till Minakshi died, and thereafter their occupation cannot be regarded as legal possession at all so as to put Alagiri and his heirs to their action. In other words, time did not commence to run against Alagiri, for though he was not in actual occupation, he was in legal possession and there was no one against whom he could bring an action. For this contention, Mr. Sitarama Rao strongly relied on Trustees Executors and Agency Ltd. v. Short (1). Alternatively, Mr. Sitarama Rao also urged that even assuming that time commenced to run against Alagiri under Art. 141, on Alagiri's death in 1900 before the expiry of the period of 12 years limited by that Article, respondent No. 1 became a co-owner of the house with his brothers including the fathers of the appellants, and this changed the character of the respondent's possession which must thereafter be ascribed to such co-ownership. In support of this contention, reliance was placed upon a decision of this Court in Velayutham v. Subbaroya Pillai (2).

I find it difficult to accede to either of these contentions. In the first place, it is highly doubtful whether respondent No. 1 could be said to have been in permissive possession during the lifetime of Servaraya or his widow Minakshi for these were living in the same house. Respondent No. 1 was in the house as a mere guest and it cannot be said that he was in any sense of the term in possession of the house even permissively. It was only after Minakshi's death in 1891 that respondent No. 1's possession of the house could be said to have begun and there is absolutely nothing in the case to show that such possession arose with the consent or permission of Alagiri who then succeeded to the property. Mr. Sitarama Rao urged that this was a natural inference having regard to the relationship of respondent No. 1 to Alagiri. But the lower Appellate Court has, in all the circumstances refused to draw that inference of fact and indeed went further and found that respondent No. 1's possession was even adverse to Alagiri. It seems to me therefore that there is no scope here for the application of the proposition contended for by Mr. Sitarama Rao that occupation with the consent or permission of the owner does not amount to any legal possession at all. In this connection the English case in Mayor of Brighton v. Guardians of Brighton (3), is instructive. There to an action in ejectment brought in 1879 on behalf of the Brighton Corporation the defendants who had been allowed in 1853 by the predecessors-in-title of the Corporation to occupy some of their buildings pleaded the Statute of Limitations. The Court upheld the plea and observed at p. 374*:

"It was contended that the defendants were mere licensees and had no possession of the premises, the possession remaining in the plaintiffs. We cannot accede to that contention and think that it is disproved by the facts. It is admitted that the defendants had the exclusive use of the offices and that they never paid any rent nor gave any acknowledgment in writing. How it can be said in these circumstances that the possession remained in the plaintiffs we are at a loss to understand."

These observations aptly apply to the contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants. It is no doubt true that the plaintiffs in that case asked for an acknowledgment in 1863 and it was refused but it is significant that the defendants were considered to have been in possession ever since 1853 (see the concluding passage at p. 375*). As stated already, Mr. Sitarama Rao placed reliance upon Trustees Executors and Agency Ltd. v. Short (1). The principle laid down there was that it is not sufficient for the purpose of the Statute of Limitations that the rightful owner has been out of possession but it is also necessary actual possession should have been held by a stranger in favour of whom the statute can operate. If respondent No. 1 is to be treated as, in my view, he should be, as having held possession throughout, the decision can obviously have no application here. On the other hand, the quotation from the judgment of Baron Parke in Smith

v. Lloyd (4) at p. 793* tends to support the respondent's contention that no adverse possession is necessary in such cases. That learned Judge observed :

"There must be both absence of possession by the person who has the right, and actual possession by another, whether adverse or not, to be protected to bring the case within the statute, (the italics are mine.)"

It is worthy of note that the starting point under the English statute is the accrual of the right of action, the same as under Art. 141, Lim. Act, though differently expressed. The decision of the Privy Council reported in Lim. Charlie v. Official Receiver (5) was also relied on. There one Lim Chin Tsong bought a house and allowed his mistress to live therein for more than 12 years during his lifetime. A gift to her was put forward but was found against. Lim Chin Tsong himself had all along been paying the rents and taxes and also making the necessary repairs. In a suit brought by the Receiver of his estate about three years after his death to recover possession of the house, the question arose whether the possession of the mistress was adverse to Lim Chin Tsong, and their Lordships held that there was no evidence on which it could properly be held that she was possessing the property in a manner adverse to the continuance of the title in Lim Chin Tsong. I do not see how this decision supports the contention of the appellant in this case where, as already stated, there is nothing to show that Alagiri ever did any proprietary act in respect of the house, and, ex concessi, no question of adverse possession arises.

Mr. Sitarama Rao also cited Gobind Lal Seal v. Debendranath Mullick (6). There one Hira Lal Seal who was the owner of a house and the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff allowed the defendant's predecessor to occupy the house and the question arose whether Art. 142 or Art. 144 governed the suit brought to recover possession of it. The learned Judges held that Art. 144 applied to the case, Garth, C. J. observing :

"But where the owner in the exercise of his own proprietary right permits some other person to occupy his land or to receive his rents then, whether the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties or not, I consider that the possession of the owner is not discontinued because under such circumstances the possession of the occupier is the possession of the owner."

Mr. Sitarama Rao particularly stressed the last sentence of this passage as showing that Alagiri must in this case be regarded as having been in possession of the house but, as already observed, he is not shown to have permitted respondent No. 1 to occupy the house after he became entitled to the property on Minakshi's death. This decision therefore does not support his contention. Mr. Sitarama Rao then referred me to the well-known case in Lyell v. Kennedy (7). There the agent of a proprietor of an estate continued to receive the rents and profits even after the death of his principal in the same manner as he did before, i.e. not as for himself but as agent and Receiver for the heirs of the deceased though they had not been ascertained, and the question was whether such receipt of rents dispossessed the true heirs of the deceased who brought the suit to recover the estate and for an account of the rents and profits and after the expiry of the statutory period, and it was held that there was no dispossession of the heirs under those circumstances. The Earl of Selborne observed at p. 457* :

"Lord Coke's doctrine as to the effect of entry by an unauthorized stranger on behalf of the true owner, seems to me applicable, in reason and principle, to such a receipt of rents as that of the respondent in this case down to 1880: 'If an infant, or any man of full age, have a right of entry into any lands, any stranger, in the name and to the use of the infant or man of full age, may enter into the lands; and this regularly shall vest the lands in them without any commandment precedent or agreement subsequent'."

But this doctrine on which that decision was founded cannot obviously apply to the facts of this case as respondent No. 1 is not shown to have entered into or continued in possession of the lands in the name and to the use of Alagiri and the decision therefore does not help the appellant. Mr. Sitarama Rao also placed reliance upon the decision of the Privy Council in Ambu Nayar v. Secretary of State (8) and particularly the passage at p. 582 of the report where their Lordships observe :

"Their Lordships think that a licensee cannot claim title only from possession however long unless it is proved that the possession was adverse to that of the licensor, to his knowledge and with his acquiescence."

* Page of (1889) 14 A O.—[Ed.]

In the first place, that was a case where the plaintiff claimed to have acquired title against the Govt. by adverse possession whereas, as already observed, there is no question of adverse possession in this case. Secondly for the reasons stated before respondent No. 1's exclusive possession of the house can be considered to have arisen only on Minakshi's death in 1891 and he is not shown to have entered under a license from Alagiri Chetti. In the third place, even assuming that defendant No. 1 had been in possession even earlier under a license from Servaraya and Minakshi, it seems to me that such license must be held to have elapsed with the death of Minakshi. A license does not create an interest in the land as it is merely leave to do a thing lawfully which otherwise would be unlawful and it is thus a matter purely personal between the grantor and the grantee of the license: see Chinnan v. Ranjithammal (9) where the possession after the death of a licensee by his successors was held not to be permissive but adverse.

Turning next to the alternative contention of Mr. Sitarama Rao he strongly relied in support of it upon the decision in Velayutham v. Subbaraya Pillai (2). That case arose out of a suit for redemption to which the contesting defendant pleaded the bar of limitation under Art. 134, Lim. Act, by reason of his having been in possession for more than 12 years before the suit under a sale from the mortgagee. It was however found that within 12 years from the date of the purchase, the plaintiff and the contesting defendant became entitled to the property as co-heirs of the mortgagor and it was held that the defendant's possession thereafter was not adverse to the plaintiff "unless and until the latter was excluded notoriously." With all respect, it is somewhat difficult to understand how any question of adverse possession could arise under Art. 134, Lim. Act, or how the accrual of a right to the defendant in co-ownership with the plaintiff before the expiry of the period would arrest the running of time under that Article. In any case I cannot regard this decision as a binding precedent in view of the later decision of the Privy Council in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (10). Where their Lordships definitely held that the adverse character of the possession held by a person was not changed by reason of that person subsequently becoming entitled to a share in the property. Mr. Sitarama Rao sought to distinguish that case by pointing out that the question of adverse possession did not arise in that case with reference to the possession of the share to which the person in adverse possession of the whole property became entitled as co-owner. I am however unable to see how that circumstance makes any difference in the principle of the decision or excludes the application of that principle to the present case. The person in possession there had been in enjoyment of the whole property like respondent No. 1 here. Later on, she became entitled to an undivided half-share in that property under a right of succession and their Lordships held that there was no reason for holding that when she became legally entitled to a moiety of the property the character of her possession in respect of the other moiety was changed. The position, in my judgment, is essentially the same in the present case. Respondent No. 1 having been in possession of the whole house became legally entitled to an undivided fifth share thereof. In both the cases, the person in possession without a title became entitled to an undivided share in the property and if the accrual of a right to a moiety in the case before their Lordships could not change the character of the possession held and stop the running of time in its favour under Art. 144, why should the accrual of a right to a fifth share in the suit house to respondent No. 1 on Alagiri's death affect his previous possession and arrest the course of limitation under Art. 141? Following this decision of the Privy Council I disallow this contention also. In the result the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs. Leave granted.

First Appeal No. 46 of 1939

DUNKLEY AND WRIGHT, J.J.

MAUNG PO SEIK—APPELLANT

versus

MA PWA TIN—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. II, r. 2—
Two suits for divorce one by husband against wife on ground of her adultery and other by wife against husband on ground of cruelty—Court without going into merits and without going into alleged misconduct of wife decreeing both suits, with a note that this would not prejudice parties regarding subsequent suit in connection with marriage property—Subsequent suit by wife for partition and possession of joint property of marriage—Note by Judge in divorce suit, effect of—Husband, if debarred from proving misconduct on part of wife.

Husband instituted a suit against his wife for divorce on the ground of her adultery. The wife brought a suit for divorce in the same Court against her husband on the ground of cruelty. The Judge without going into the merits gave two decrees for divorce. He made a note to the effect that this would not prejudice the parties with regard to anything that they might desire to establish in a subsequent suit in connection with the property of the marriage. Subsequently the wife brought a suit against her husband for partition and separate possession of the joint property of the marriage:

Held, that the note of the Judge in the divorce suit would be of no effect on the rights of the parties regarding marriage property. 91 Ind. Cas. 20 (2), relied on.

Held, also that in the divorce suit although the husband did not insist upon proving his wife's guilt to obtain a divorce, he was not debarred from raising this point in a subsequent suit where the property of the marriage was involved. It was open to him to prove misconduct on the wife's part which would disentitle her from obtaining any of the joint property. 11 Ind. Cas. 497 (3), relied on.

F. A. against the decree of the District Court, Henzada, dated January 12, 1939.

Mr. U E Maung, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Hla Tun Pru, for the Respondent.

Wright, J.—Maung Po Seik and Ma Pwa Tin, the parties to this appeal were husband and wife. In 1936 Maung Po Seik prosecuted one Maung Shwe Hla for committing adultery with his wife Ma Pwa Tin and Maung Shwe Hla was convicted. On January 9, 1937, Maung Po Seik instituted Civil Regular Suit No. 1 of 1937 in the Township Court of Kyangin against his wife Ma Pwa Tin for divorce on the ground of her adultery with Maung Shwe Hla. On February 17, 1937 Ma Pwa Tin, in Civil Regular Suit No. 9 of 1937 of the Township Court of Kyangin, brought a suit for divorce against Maung Po Seik on the ground of cruelty. The Township Judge without going into the merits gave two decrees for divorce. He wrote a very short judgment in Civil Regular Suit No. 1 of 1937 stating that both parties wanted a divorce, the one party alleging misconduct and the other party cruelty, and so he stated that it would be a mere waste of time to enquire into the alleged misconduct. He therefore decreed both suits. He made a note to the effect that this would not prejudice the parties with regard to anything that they might desire to establish in a subsequent suit in connection with the property of the marriage. No appeals were filed against either of these decrees. On April 7, 1937 Maung Po Seik, in Civil Regular Suit No. 3 of 1937 of the District Court of Henzada, brought a suit against Ma Pwa Tin for a declaration that he was entitled to certain properties, the properties of the marriage, which were in his possession. Various defences were raised in that suit but it was dismissed as being unmaintainable because it was based upon allegations of adultery and not upon the decrees for divorce. No appeal was filed against this decree. Ma Pwa Tin, on April 7, 1938, in Civil Regular No. 3 of 1938 of the District Court of Henzada, instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises against Maung Seik (Maung Po Seik) for partition and separate possession of the joint property of the marriage. She based her suit upon the two decrees for divorce which were passed in Civil Regular Suits Nos. 1 and 9 of 1937 of the Township Court of Kyangin. She contended that these decrees were decrees for divorce "as by mutual consent" and that she was entitled to a half share in the property jointly owned and acquired by her husband and herself during their marriage. Maung Po Seik in his written statement took various defences including those raised in paras. 2 and 3 reproduced below:

"(2) That regarding para. 2 of the plaint, the defendant submits that the decree passed by the Township Judge, Kyangin, in Civil Regular Suit Nos. 1 and 9 of 1937 is not a decree for divorce by mutual consent. That each party made counter-allegations of matrimonial misconduct and cruelty in seeking for divorce so as to forfeit his or her right in the properties but the Court passed a judgment for divorce without prejudice to what each party may have to prove in the suit that may be filed for recovery of properties. That plaintiff being the consenting party is bound by the terms of the judgment. (3) That regarding para. 3 of the plaint, defendant submits that according to the express terms of the judgment plaintiff's right in the properties remained to be determined by legal proof in this suit for partition and that plaintiff having committed adultery she is not entitled to any share in the properties owned and possessed by the defendant."

The plaintiff in her rejoinder contended that any issue with regard to matrimonial misconduct would be immaterial and irrelevant because a divorce had already been decreed between the parties. A further contention was raised in her rejoinder that a defence of this kind was res judicata by reason of the decision in Civil Regular No. 3 of 1937 of the District Court. The learned District Judge held that the suit was not barred by res judicata, but that the decrees for divorce which had been granted to the parties must be deemed to be "as by mutual consent" as it was not open to the defendant to raise the contention that Ma Pwa Tin was not entitled to any property on the ground of her misconduct. After going into the facts on other points the District Court proceeded to pass a preliminary decree for partition and accounts. Against this decree Po Seik appeals. U E Maung, on behalf of the appellant, contends that the decrees of the Township Court in Civil Regular Nos. 1 and 9 of 1937 should not be deemed to have granted divorce as by mutual consent and in fact this point was left open. He states further that the appellant should be allowed to prove the misconduct of Ma Pwa Tin and that no bar of res judicata arises by reason of the decision in Civil Regular Suit No. 3 of 1937 of the District Court. U Hla Tun Pru, on behalf of the respondent, urges that the decisions of the Township Court are final and that the decrees must be deemed to have granted divorce "as by mutual consent" because only three kinds of divorce are known to Burmese Buddhist Law and the only one which could possibly be applicable would be "as by mutual consent." He argues that the nature of the divorce cannot now be questioned and that in any case the point sought to be raised is barred by res judicata by virtue of the decision in Civil Regular No. 3 of 1937 of the District Court.

It is abundantly clear from the judgment of the Township Judge in Civil Regular No. 1 of 1937 that he did not consider the alleged misconduct and did not intend to grant a divorce on this ground. He granted a divorce because he thought that both the parties wished to put an end to the relationship of husband and wife. If the decrees themselves are to be strictly construed with reference to the pleadings, it would seem that in Civil Regular No. 1 of 1937 he decreed the divorce on the ground of misconduct alleged by Maung Seik and in Suit No. 9 decreed that divorce on the ground of cruelty alleged by Ma Pwa Tin. If such a view is taken then the decrees appear to be contradictory. We are of opinion from the judgments and decrees of the Township Court that the Court merely decreed a divorce, without any determination as to the allegations of misconduct or cruelty made by the parties. U Hla Tun Pru on behalf of the respondent strenuously contends that the divorce must be deemed to have been one "as by mutual consent." He draws our attention to the case in Maung Nga v. Ma Pyu (1) where the various kinds of divorce are set out. The learned Judicial Commissioner stated that there were three kinds of divorce firstly for gross misconduct; secondly by mutual consent or as by mutual consent; and thirdly on the petition of one party without any grounds except the desire of the petitioner for divorce and without any fault or consent on the part of the other party. U Hla Tun Pru urges that as this divorce was certainly not of the first or third kind it must be deemed to have been of the second kind. In view of what we have stated above this argument does not commend itself to us, as it is clear that the divorce was not in fact founded on mutual consent and the Township Judge did not say that the divorce was "as by mutual consent". The learned Advocate for the respondent contends that the portion of the Township Judge's judgment where he says that the suit is decreed without prejudice to what each party may have to prove in a subsequent case will be of no effect and he relies upon the case in Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Bakhsh Singh (2). It is rightly conceded by the other side that what the Township Judge may have stated in this connexion will not affect the actual legal position.

The next question is whether the appellant can, in view of the previous litigation, be allowed to prove the misconduct, which he alleges on the part of Ma Pwa Tin, which would disentitle her from obtaining any of the joint property. We think that this point must be decided in accordance with the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Maung Pe v. Ma Lon Ma Gale (3). There the facts appear to have been as follows: Maung Pe had originally sued for a decree for divorce on the ground that his wife had committed an offence which entitled him to divorce her. Lon Ma Gale denied that she had committed any matrimonial or other offence, but said that as the plaintiff claimed only a divorce she was willing to be divorced and a decree was passed granting Maung Pe a divorce with costs. In a subsequent suit between the parties in connexion with the property of the marriage the District Judge, in appeal, found that the divorce was not by mutual consent, but that the plaintiff had obtained a divorce from the defendant in the Township Court in a suit based on fault. Lon Ma Gale filed an appeal in the Chief Court of Lower Burma and in appeal, Lon Ma Gale v. Maung Pe (4) a Bench decided that the second suit was barred by the provisions of s. 43, Civil P. O. of 1882, and allowed the appeal. The case was taken up on appeal to the Privy Council. Their Lordships set aside the judgment of the Bench of the Chief Court of Lower Burma and restored the decree of the District Court. The following passages appear in their Lordships' judgment:

"The first point in dispute is whether the divorce was by mutual consent, or was granted on the fault of the wife. The husband filed his claim in January 1907. In it he set forth the respondent's alleged offence and he prayed for his decree on that ground alone. That respondent thereupon filed her defence denying the allegations as to her misconduct and asking that the suit be dismissed with costs. Witnesses were summoned, but on the day fixed for hearing the respondent abandoned her defence and, although continuing to deny her guilt, consented to a divorce judgment, was thereupon given on June 6, 1907 for a decree 'as prayed for.'"

"Afterwards, in August 1907, the appellant brought the present action for the recovery of his property which he alleged his divorced wife still fraudulently kept in her possession, and for a partition of their joint property. The shares to which the parties would be respectively entitled under the partition would vary according to whether the divorce had been granted on the ground of a matrimonial offence or had been arranged by consent, and the respondent contended that under the circumstances above stated the divorce had been by consent and had not been granted by reason of her fault. The District Judge found in favour of the appellant on this point, but the Chief Court has cast some doubt upon that finding, although in view of their decision on another point in the case which is dealt with later on, they did not think it necessary to discuss it fully. Their Lordships however think it desirable to state that they agree with the judgment of the District Judge on this point. Although the respondent at the last moment abandoned her defence and consented to the decree, she certainly ought not to be put in the position of an innocent wife who has contracted for a divorce on an equal footing with her husband. If she had invited her husband to enter into such an agreement before he began his action he would have been at liberty to refuse and to have insisted upon a decree establishing her guilt, in order to determine the basis upon which the subsequent partition took place, and he was certainly placed in no worse a position by the fact that he was obliged to bring the action in order to secure relief.

The proceedings at law disclose not an agreement between husband and wife, but a claim by the husband on a specific ground to which the wife in effect submitted."

It will be seen therefore that the facts of the case before us are extremely similar to the facts of the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council and, in view of their judgment, we are bound to hold that, although Maung Po Seik did not insist upon proving his wife's guilt to obtain a divorce, he is not now debarred from raising this point in a subsequent suit where the property of the marriage is involved. U Hla Tun Pru on behalf of the respondent suggests—although he does not elaborate the point—that the suit out of which the present appeal arises is in fact barred by res judicata by reason of the decision in Civil Regular No. 3 of 1937 of the District Court. The learned District Judge was of the opinion that the present suit was not barred by reason of Civil Regular No. 3 of 1937, because in the former suit the decision in connexion with the divorce being deemed to be "as by mutual consent" was obiter. It seems to us that this decision was correct because Civil Regular No. 3 of 1937 was dismissed on the ground that it was not maintainable because it was based upon the acts of adultery and not upon divorce. For these reasons, this appeal must be allowed. We set aside the judgment and decree of the District Court, and under O. XLI, r. 23 direct that the suit be re-admitted under its original number and determined upon its merits; the defence of the defendant as to his wife's misconduct being considered. Costs of this appeal, Advocate's fee ten gold mohurs, to be costs in the suit as ultimately decided. The usual certificate for the refund of court-fees paid in this appeal will issue under s. 13, Court Fees Act.

declaration that the property in suit was attachable and saleable in execution of his decree and that the sale-deeds executed by judgment-debtor were ineffectual and void as far as the decrees in favour of the plaintiff were concerned. F. A. from an order of the Civil Judge, Budaun, dated January 21, 1938.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Inam-ullah, for the Respondents.

Judgment.— This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit brought for a declaration that the property described in the plaint was attachable and saleable in execution of decree No. 252 of 1928 and that the plaintiff was entitled to get rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under other decrees in his favour. A declaration was prayed for that the two sale-deeds of February 22, 1934 executed by Hamid Ali in favour of Asgar Ali and others were ineffectual and void as far as the decrees in favour of the plaintiff were concerned. The suit was resisted by the defendant inter alia on the ground that the suit as framed was not maintainable inasmuch as it was not a representative suit on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors. The trial Court dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground that the suit as framed was not maintainable. The lower Appellate Court however took a contrary view and held that this was a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil P. C., and the reliefs claimed could be given in the present suit. Learned Counsel for the appellant has reiterated the objection taken on behalf of his client in the Courts below. It is contended that if the suit were limited to the relief that the sale-deeds in question were fictitious the plaintiff alone could bring the suit on his own behalf. On the other hand if the plaintiff pleaded that the sale-deed was fraudulent and was executed with the intention to defeat and delay the creditors it would come within the purview of s. 53, T. P. Act, and a representative suit would have to be instituted. It is contended that on the allegations in the plaint the present suit comes within the purview of s. 53, T. P. Act, and was rightly dismissed by the trial Court.

In the body of the plaint the plaintiff has set out the facts on which the suit is founded. In para. 6 it is stated that the plaintiff had warned defendants Nos. 1-8 (vendees) that the defendant No. 9 (vendor) was liable under several decrees in favour of the plaintiff; that the defendants (vendees) dishonestly and with full knowledge of facts obtained two sale-deeds in their favour. There is no mention whatsoever in the body of the judgment that the transfers are null and void as against other creditors. Rule 63, O. XXI of the Code provides that:

"Where a claim or an objection is preferred the party against whom an order is made may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute...."

This suit, as the plaint discloses, is instituted merely to establish the right of the plaintiff and has no concern whatsoever with the possible claims which other creditors may have against the judgment-debtor. I fail to see why the suit as framed is not maintainable. In my judgment it was not necessary for the plaintiff on the facts alleged to bring a representative suit on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors. Learned Counsel has referred to the case in Chidambaram Chettiar v. R. M. A. R. S. Firm (1) in which Dunkley, J. held:

"When a suit is brought under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 63 by an attaching creditor to establish his right to attach and bring to sale certain property and in order to succeed it is necessary to avoid a transfer of property on the ground that the transfer has been made with intent to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor the suit must be brought in the form of a representative suit on behalf of or for the benefit of all the creditors of the transferor as provided for in s. 53, T. P. Act."
